LAW CLERKS' CHRISTIAN UNION.—This Union, which sprang out of the "Lawyers' Prayer Union," instituted in 1852, has been formed for the purposes of united prayer and conference among persons occupied in the different branches of the law, and also for evangelistic effort amongst the same class. A social meeting was held in the Shaftesbury Hall, Orde Hall-street, W.C., on Thursday last week. After tea Mr. S. J. Daw, solicitor, gave an earnest address on the necessity of realising the presence of God in the work of everyday life. Short addresses were also given by Mr. Edwin Smith and Mr. Cook-Collis, solicitors, the former on the Gospel having all its old power, and the latter on the importance of Christian sanctification. Several law clerks present also spoke. Particulars as to the Union may be obtained from the Hon. Secretary, Mr. J. C. Allday, 35, Lincoln's Inn-fields, W.C.

THE JUNGLE TRIBES MISSION, in connection with the Foreign Mission of the Irish Presbyterian Church, is a very interesting development of evangelistic effort. It is believed that in India, especially among the aboriginal tribes, a great work for Christ may be done by earnest men who, though they have not enjoyed the benefit of a college course or received ordination, have had a good education, and given evidence of true devotion to Christ. In Gujarat and Kathiawar there are many tribes without a missionary. The most numerous is the Bheels, who, with the Dublas, Naikadas, Talavias, Warlis, and other tribes, reach a total of 800,000, whose religious beliefs are altogether different from those of the Brahmins. Workers willing to labour under Presbyterian supervision are invited to offer themselves for this promising sphere. The constitution of the Mission is admirably described in a pamphlet (1d. Religious Tract Society, Royal-avenue, Belfast), an appendix to which contains some rousing calls to work, as well as other ever-timely counsels.

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, July 20.

TAKING UP THE CROSS.—LUKE xiv. 25-35.

GOLDEN TEXT: Verse 27.

THE figure of a feast, under which our Lord has just set forth the blessings of the Gospel, has proved so attractive that "multitudes" (25) are ready to follow Him. The miracle of the loaves and fishes resulted in similar popularity (John vi. 14, 15). But there is nothing gratifying to Jesus in mere numbers. The quality and character of his followers is more to Him than their multitude. So here, as in John vi. 26, 27, He applies the fan in order to separate the chaff from the wheat. A thoughtless, inconsiderate profession of discipleship is worse than no profession at all. The moral of this lesson is: "Think before you act." It is proverbial that we "cannot put old heads on young shoulders"; but we can instruct and warn the young against that thoughtlessness which not only injures themselves, but makes the religion of Christ to be a mockery to others.

The difficulties of discipleship (26, 27).—True discipleship consists in coming to (26), and coming after Christ (27). Our needs, and the assurance that in Him is full supply, bring us to Him; but following after Him involves a twofold difficulty. (1) Forsaking what is dearest to us (26).—Hatred is only sinful when not properly directed. It is indeed only another expression of love. Even God who is Love speaks of hating (Rom. ix. 13; Rev. ii. 6). Our Lord's meaning is explained by Deut. xiii. 6-12. That which is dearest to us, if it comes into conflict with the claims of Christ, must be hated—forsaken. The Apostles did this (Mark x. 28-30); Paul did it (Acts xx. 24); and so do all the saints who overcome (Rev. xii. 11). Illustrations of this abound. John Bunyan's Pilgrim, forsaking his wife and children, put his fingers in his ears, that he might not be turned back by their entreaties. A martyr, when asked to give up Christ in order to escape death, replied, "If my father should lie in my pathway, and my mother should hang about my neck, and my Lord should call me, I would shake off my mother, and walk over my father to go to Jesus Christ."

(2) Enduring what is painful (27).—Cross-bearing involves shame, and surrender to death. The multitude ignorantly followed Him as to a triumph and to a feast. These are certain, but the way to them for us, as for Him, is through death. To "die daily" is the way to true life. Polycarp, the bishop of the church at Smyrna, when brought before the proconsul, was urged to recant. "Reproach Christ, and I will release thee." The old man replied: "Eighty and six years have I served Him, and He hath never wronged me; how can I blaspheme my King, who hath saved me?" When threatened with wild beasts and with fire, he was still unmoved; and just before being put to death he said: "I bless Thee that Thou hast counted me worthy to receive my portion in the number of the martyrs in the cup of Christ." Not only by actual martyrdom, but by dying to our own will day by day, we have to bear our cross.

This lesson is enforced by two parables.—(1) The inconsiderate builder (28-30). It is full of teaching. A disciple is a builder (Matt. vii. 24-27; 1 Cor. iii. 11-15). He builds a tower, not only a lofty and therefore a prominent building, but one for defence and refuge. But building is costly. No builder should accept a contract who has not means to carry it out; and no one should begin the Christian life without considering what it involves. "Sitting down first" describes this careful consideration. Are you prepared to face difficulty, to make sacrifice of yourself? Better not begin to build than become a by-word to others afterwards. Unfinished houses everywhere are called some men's "Folly." "Remember Lot's wife." Pliable was of this character.

(2) The thoughtless warrior (31, 32).—To profess discipleship is a declaration of war against the prince of this world. Our forces are insufficient to meet his. Unless this fact is understood at the first, there can be no success in this war. Earnestness, enthusiasm, strong resolution, confidence in the righteousness of our cause, are all insufficient. If you cannot draw upon other resources, better never begin the conflict. There are other resources, but they only become available to us as we die to self—to our "own life" (26), and accept of the Lord of Hosts to fight for us. There was no man in Israel able to meet Goliath, because each man measured his own strength against that of the giant. David calculated differently, and overcame "in the name of the Lord of Hosts" (1 Sam. xvii. 45). The object of these parables is, not to prevent us becoming Christians, but to teach us that the Christian life is only possible as we forsake all dependence upon self (33).

The danger of apostasy (34, 35).—Nothing is so valuable as salt in arresting corruption. This is what a true Christian is intended to be in the world. If he is constant and whole-hearted, he must exert an influence for good. Nothing is so worthless as savourless salt.—It cannot be seasoned again. Do not misapply this truth, so as to discourage backsliders. All such who desire to return have many promises to ensure their welcome. But let each one apply it to himself for warning. No one can injure himself worse than by putting his hand to the plough and looking back (ix. 62). Savourless salt is "good for nothing" (35), neither for the soil, nor for the dunghill. The unfaithfulness of the Christian disgusts men with the Gospel itself. There can be no more solemn words of warning. Beware of a thoughtless profession. Be a Christian, but be whole-hearted and constant. Difficulties lie in the way, not to discourage us, but to develop character, and to make us know more of our Captain's might.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

LOYALTY ISLANDS.—The Paris Society of Evangelical Missions has appointed an agent to carry on the work at Maré, which was given up when Rev. John Jones, of the London Missionary Society, was expelled by the French Government.

PALESTINE.—The railway from Jaffa to Jerusalem will, it is expected, be completed in 1892. It will be of comparatively little use until a pier has been built at Jaffa to facilitate landing. This involves no great difficulty, being simply a matter of money.

BERLIN.—Two small beginnings have been made this summer to evangelise the masses by means of open-air preaching. Count Pückler, who initiated the work, goes every Sunday afternoon to the Jungfernheide, a forest near the city, and members of the Young Men's Christian Association do the same in the Grunewald. Numerous audiences have attended on the word spoken, and tracts have been liberally distributed.

GERMANY.—A conference of friends of Evangelisation, in connection with the National Church of Germany, has been held at Gnadau. In aim and purpose it was similar to the Conference convened two years ago by the late Professor Christlieb, of Bonn. Some 120 persons, for the most part actively engaged in evangelistic work, attended, and the proceedings were practically helpful, as well as highly stimulating.

JAPAN.—Rev. H. Loomis, of Yokohama, has summarised the statistics of missionary work in Japan. Twenty-nine Protestant societies or organisations are at work there, the entire mission staff numbering 527, including wives. The increase in church membership in 1889 was 5433, bringing the total up to 28,977. There are 21,597 children in Christian boarding and day-schools, 135 native ministers, and 409 unordained preachers and helpers.

FRANCE.—The thirty-seventh conference of the Evangelical Methodist Church of France and Switzerland has been held at Nîmes. There are in connection with this organisation 151 chapels or other places of worship; 28 pastors, assisted by two evangelists and 107 lay preachers; 1434 church members, and 43 candidates for fellowship, not to reckon 372 communicants who are not members; also 41 Sunday-schools, with 2276 scholars and 253 teachers.

PERSECUTION IN THE BALTIC PROVINCES.—Pastor Nerling has been condemned to a year's imprisonment and the loss of his civil rights for having "blasphemed against the saints." Some parents have been condemned to three months' imprisonment for having refused to submit their children for baptism in the Greek Church, though in each case one of the parents had been included in the pale of that Church by means of trickery. When will this scandal find an end?—Le Christianisme.

ITALY.—Sunday-school work is going forward in Italy. Almost every evangelical church has its school, and in Rome there are four or five. Another interesting item of news is that the chapel built by the Roman Town Council in the Protestant burial ground is ready. The Rome correspondent of Evangelical Christendom pertinently remarks:—"It strikes me as a very encouraging fact that the authorities of Rome should nowadays with the public money build a chapel for the use of those heretics who used to be, in former times, killed and burnt by the same authorities under the guidance of the Popes!"

STRASBURG.—The Reformed Church of this city, of which John Calvin was the first pastor, has 400 members. In 1563 public worship was interdicted, but the faithful repaired to the neighbouring villages, and there found greater liberty. By virtue of an edict of Louis XVI. in 1788, the present temple was erected, and recently, on the occasion of a centennial celebration, the Protestants of Alsace were reminded, not only of the restraints under which their testimony was allowed a hundred years ago, but also of the succour which the community was enabled to render in the sixteenth century to large numbers of hunted French refugees.

CASE of ADVANCED DISEASE — REPORTED by a CLERGYMAN in IRELAND.

"Dear Sir,—A Policeman's wife in my parish became very ill. The doctor said that Consumption had set in three months before, and that she was then dying of that disease. As a last resort I recommended her to try your remedies. Under God they have effected a cure. She left this district three weeks ago healthy and strong. If you make use of these facts, please do not print my name for special reasons.—19 Nov., 1889."

"Written amid the multiplied engagements of a busy life, it would be impossible to estimate the benefit to heart and thought by bending over these translucent depths of sacred truth—so calm, so still, so profound, so counteractive of life's feverish haste: and it is my earnest hope that these Expositions may pass on to others some of the blessedness which their preparation has brought to myself."

Extract from Preface.

"The popularity of Mr. Meyer's Expositions is a good sign of the times. This, the latest, is one of the best, and is full of tender Christian wisdom. There are many unobtrusive signs of thought and culture throughout, but the chief charm of the book is its earnest simplicity."

BUILDING FUND APPEAL.

An earnest appeal is made for Funds to enable the Committee to rebuild the front portion of the Hospital. This, the only remaining part of the Barracks of the Light Horse Volunteers which occupied the site of the present Hospital in the early part of the century, is now much dilapidated, and has become quite inadequate and unfit for the present needs of the Charity. It is therefore imperative that the work of rebuilding should be undertaken without delay, in order to meet the ever-growing demands upon the Hospital. It is estimated that the cost of rebuilding the front portion and furnishing it will be about £20,000. Admission to the Hospital is entirely free, [on] recommendation being required. Contributions for the Building Fund and for the general expenses will be gratefully received by Messrs. BROWN, JANSON & Co., 32, Abchurch-lane; or at the Hospital by

CONRAD W. THIES, Secretary.

THE UNSUCCESSFUL CANDIDATES.—The sum of £5 15s. 6d. is urgently needed to complete a collection which is being made in aid of the 17 poor people who failed at the late Election of Pensioners on the Incurable Fund of the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, Queen Square, Bloomsbury. Donations are earnestly solicited by ROSA PEARMAN, Vice-President Ladies' Samaritan Society, at the Hospital as above.

HOMES FOR LITTLE BOYS,

FARNINGHAM AND SWANLEY (Commenced 1863).

PRESIDENT—THE EARL OF ABERDEEN.

THE COTTAGE HOMES AT FARNINGHAM

ARE for 300 Little Boys, homeless or in danger of falling into crime. They are clothed, fed, educated, and taught Trades as Tailors, Shoemakers, Carpenters, Engineers, Bakers, Steam Printers, and Gardeners; and then provided with outfit and placed in situations, while they are looked after as "Old Boys."

THE ORPHAN HOMES AT SWANLEY

Are for 200 Orphan or Fatherless Boys, who are wholly maintained and educated, and receive technical instruction in Lithography, Telegraphy, Photography, Chemistry, and other subjects, to fit them for a working life.

BASIS.—"The Institution is Scriptural, but Unsectarian; and the boys are educated in the fear of God and in the knowledge of the Holy Scriptures."

FUNDS are URGENTLY NEEDED to maintain the 500 Boys now in the Homes. Over 1,000 have already been sent out into the world.

Annual Subscriptions, Donations, Congregational Collections, and Bequests are earnestly solicited, and will be thankfully received by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, Office of THE CHRISTIAN; or the Secretary, BENJAMIN CLARKE.

Offices—BANK BUILDINGS, LUDGATE CIRCUS, E.C.

Bankers—MESSRS. SMITH, PAYNE & SMITH, 1, LOMBARD STREET, E.C.

FRIENDLESS & FALLEN.

At the first meeting of the Committee of the HOMES AND OPEN ALL NIGHT REFUGE IN 1890, it was agreed, after earnest consideration, to admit all suitable applicants seeking admission, and since then more than SIX HUNDRED have sought help. Now—

Donations are very much needed to sustain the Homes, which accommodate TWO HUNDRED and THIRTY-FIVE YOUNG WOMEN AND GIRLS. The majority are country girls and orphans.

Smaller as well as larger gifts are alike appreciated.

Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, Office of "THE CHRISTIAN," 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C., will receive donations, or

EDWARD W. THOMAS,

200, Euston Road, London, N.W.

£15 donation or collection will support all the Homes one day.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT

The Committee have recently issued their THIRTIETH ANNUAL REPORT. It will be seen that nearly FOUR THOUSAND young Women and Girls have been gathered together during the past year. A large number from amongst these have been PLACED IN HOMES, RESTORED TO FRIENDS, ASSISTED INTO SITUATIONS, or otherwise helped.

A MISSIONARY is specially engaged for the express purpose of holding conversations with individual cases in the STREETS, PARKS, &c., AT NIGHT.

The Committee EARNESTLY APPEAL FOR NEW AND INCREASED SUPPORT.

Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT will receive contributions.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. E. W. Moore, Incumbent of Emmanuel Church, Wimbledon.

Last year, says a correspondent in a contemporary, the drink bill in New South Wales was £4 8s. 2d. per head of the population, which gave it the unenviable reputation of being the hardest-drinking community in the English-speaking world. This is now exceeded by the Colony of Victoria, which has thus risen to a more deplorable pre-eminence. Surely our Australian fellow-Christians will do all they can to stay the devastating plague.

A letter appeared in last week's Nonconformist and Independent, in which the steady increase of leprosy in the West Indies is affirmed, and the statement corroborated by the latest report of Governor Robinson. "The leper asylums," it is said, "are full to overflowing." The virus used in vaccination is set forth as more or less the cause. Eminent physicians, among them Dr. A. M. Brown and Sir Morell Mackenzie, are quoted in proof. The claims of humanity and our national reputation demand attention to the matter.

It is gratifying to note that there is a strong tendency on the part of the Governments of several leading European countries to secure by legislation the better observance of the Lord's Day. If the present movement should continue, the proverbial "Continental Sabbath" will soon become a thing of the past. The German action in the matter has been remarkable, and when the State measure passes the Reichstag the right of the working classes to the Sunday rest will be confirmed by law. So in Austria, where ordinances have lately prohibited many kinds of occupation on the Sabbath, including even the printing of newspapers.

Speaking the other day at the Mansion House respecting the efforts being made to uplift the suffering masses which cluster round the wealth and luxury of London, the Archbishop of Canterbury said:—

> We must bring more home to employers the enormous responsibility which they hold towards those whom they employ, and to owners of houses their responsibility towards the tenants of the wretched dwellings in which they condemn such masses of the poor to live.

These words indicate one of the great causes of the present difficulty, viz., human selfishness and indifference; employers have yet to learn that their duty towards their workpeople does not begin and end with the payment of wages; property owners must be taught that tenants have a right to light and air and the decencies of life at a cost proportionate to their earnings. And yet, even this will only touch the surface of the sore. We must go back to the New Testament for the treatment which will work a thorough, radical cure. It is not by brotherhoods, or sisterhoods, or by the parochial system, that the wretched, the destitute, and the depraved, are to be raised and humanised: it is by the faithful preaching of the simple Gospel of Christ—that great civilising agent—by an army of lay workers, men, and women, carrying the ministry of reconciliation into the streets and alleys.

It is stated in the current number of The Journal of Mental Science that the number of the insane in Great Britain now amounts to 100,000, and that it is increasing by at least 1500 a year. This is accompanied by a terrible increase in the number of suicides, the proportion of late years having grown to 33 per cent. This would be sufficiently painful in itself, but it is all the more so when it is remembered that a large portion of this suffering is due to intemperance. Yet these sad results are only one set, and that by no means the most terrible, of those which necessarily follow the growth of our national drink bill.

It is argued, in reply to our appeal to history, that pages of the Protestant Church are also written in blood. But is it to be forgotten that Rome never repents; is committed of necessity to the justification and repetition of every form of cruelty and wickedness she has ever perpetrated? But Protestant Christians deplore and repent every injustice which has stained their past.

The admirers of conventual and monastic establishments in Protestantism may learn a valuable lesson from the book by "Sister Mary Agnes," entitled "Nunnery Life in the Church of England," recently reviewed in our columns. This is the writer's description of the method of Father Ignatius:—

> It is astonishing to contemplate how absolutely Father Ignatius required us to yield our will to his will. Sometimes before breakfast he would order that no one, not even the Reverend Mother, should speak for a whole day, thus causing the utmost confusion, especially among the servants in the kitchen, who were included in the eccentric command, and yet if his own dinner was not properly cooked and served in time he would show great displeasure. Another time, I recollect, he ordered a young and delicate sister, who was very ill and consumptive, to walk bare-footed in the snow up and down the garden... Once he intended to bring a young monk ill from his monastery to be nursed by a young novice nun, and she was to devote the whole of her time to looking after him. The Mother would not hear of such a thing, as she was sure it would prove an occasion of scandal; but Father Ignatius boldly asserted that he was quite determined to have nothing but unconditional obedience. The Mother and the majority of the nuns...refused to accept such an unconditional obedience, and the result was that a split took place.

Such authentic revelations go far to justify the agitation for an inspection of nunneries.

Those who have the courage to lift up their voices or wield their pens in earnest protest against the serious leavening of the Church of England with Romish practices and doctrines, and to warn Englishmen against their danger from intrigues at home and abroad, are branded as "bigoted," "ignorant fanatics," &c. The following extract from the speech of the Bishop of Salford at the recent conference of the (Roman) Catholic Truth Society abundantly justifies their fears, and emphasises their warnings:—

> The bishops, ministers, and people of the Established Church, are busily engaged in ignoring or denouncing those very articles which were drawn up to be their eternal protest against the old religion, the sacramental power of orders, the real presence, the daily sacrifice, auricular confession, prayers for the dead, belief in purgatory, invocation of the blessed Virgin and the saints, religious vows, and the institution of monks and nuns—the very doctrines stamped in the Thirty-nine Articles as fond fables and blasphemous deceits. All these were now openly taught from a thousand pulpits within the Establishment, and as heartily embraced by as many crowded congregations.

The same speaker alluded with great satisfaction to the images set up at Westminster Abbey and St. Paul's, and to the claim of the Archbishop of Canterbury to "Catholic descent," and continuity with the Church of Gregory, Augustine, and St. Thomas, and did not hesitate to declare that England was already half converted, and that "if the progression of change went on at the same ratio as during the past, before the end of the next century England might be practically Catholic again." Possibly the Ritualists may peruse these words with complacence; but could there be any more damning evidence of the truth of the charge, that not only are they "digging the grave of the Establishment," but doing the work of Rome most effectually, and undermining the civil as well as the religious liberty of their country?

It is difficult to understand how Rev. J. Copner, a beneficed clergyman, can justify his place in the English Church with his sending forth such a book as "The Faith of a Realist." Mr. Copner is a clergyman at Elstow, Bunyan's birthplace. He is a member of the new school, the dogma of which is that the evidence of the supernatural in Christianity is to be rejected if it cannot be demonstrated by science. He teaches, therefore, that only in a figurative sense was the Son of God incarnate; that He did not work miracles, and did not, except in the after effects of his life, rise from the dead. All we need say is this—if a clergyman repeats in the creeds that he "believes," when the congregation knows by his own writing that he does not believe, the untruthfulness of such a confession ought to be felt to be so flagrant as utterly to discredit the new doctrine he has avowed.

We have letters from Sunderland and from Belfast concerning "W. H. R." The following is one of these:—

> I have been much interested in reading the article in your issue of June 27, entitled "Un-Holiness." I know something of all the different forms of error therein described, especially of that promulgated by "W. H. R.," and, as he will no doubt visit Keswick again this year, at the time of the Convention, I would earnestly warn the many Christians who will then be assembled together to be on their guard against one who may appear to some as an "angel of light," but who is in reality a "wolf in sheep's clothing."

Wrong in practice, and wrong in doctrine, homes have been rendered unhappy, and several who otherwise would have been bright and true-hearted Christians, led astray, and induced to give up all real work for their Master, through his corrupt and pernicious teachings. He has, by means, we have reason to think, of that "magnetic power" to which your article so truly alludes, induced some to lay their substance and their time at his disposal, as verily as ever poor Romanist lent himself to the power and enslaving influence of a corrupt and avaricious priesthood.

Satan is seeking to deceive, if possible, the very elect; and if we are to escape unscathed, yea, if we would be amongst the "more than conquerors," it can only be by giving heed to the command, "Be ye not the servants of men"; by taking a firm stand on the written Word of God, "continuing instant in prayer," and, above all, by cleaving very closely to a living, personal Christ.

A LOVER OF THE "TRUTH IN JESUS."

It is worthy of notice that we have received, almost simultaneously, letters from Mr. Thomas Martin in England, and Mr. Cecil Polhill-Turner in China, of their exercises of mind as to going forth on mission tours without purse or scrip. It is open to question whether the directions of our Lord to his disciples in Matt. x. were intended to be binding on all his ambassadors throughout the dispensation; and no man and no society would, we think, be justified in laying them as an obligation upon missionaries, home or foreign. But the experiences of men so widely separated, having been led to adopt the same method, and bearing very similar testimony as to its results, are at least deserving of respectful consideration. The advantages enumerated are not to be disregarded, although the method may not be possible under all circumstances, nor for all kinds of mission work. We insert Mr. Martin's letter this week, reserving Mr. Cecil Polhill-Turner's for our next. Both of these brethren are, we believe, in independent circumstances, and this must necessarily become an element in the discussion of the subject.

Miss Margaret McLean, author of "Echoes from Japan," and formerly a missionary in China and Japan, will give information respecting Christian work and residence in Japan to intending missionaries and travellers. Apply to Anglo-Japanese Agency, 43, Holbein House, Sloane-square, S.W.

Mr. Stanley thus describes some modern scientists, and the description has no little significance in its relation to recent attacks on Revelation:—

> Who can say why votaries of science, though eminently kindly in their social relations, are so angular of character? In my analysis of the scientific nature I am constrained to associate with it, as compared with that of men who are more Christians than scientists, a certain hardness, or rather indelicacy of feeling...I may best express what I mean by saying that I think they are more apt to feel an affection for one's bleached skull and frame of unsightly bones than for what is Divine in a man. If one talks about the inner beauty, which to some of us is the only beauty worth anything, they are apt to return an apologetic and compassionate smile. ("IN DARKEST AFRICA," vol. ii., p. 174.)

Of every ordinary congregation in church, or chapel, or hall, probably at least half are unconverted; therefore, it would seem essential that every sermon should contain a clear and definite declaration of the Gospel, with earnest appeal and entreaty for its acceptance.

The bulk of such an audience, even the converted part of it, is very little instructed even in the elements of the Gospel. Therefore all public sermons should be confined to the elucidation of some foundation truth. Subjects more advanced, or questions of a more recondite character, should be reserved for Bible-readings, or special meetings for those capable of entering into them. The majority of church members are neither more holy in life, nor more intelligent in the truth, than when they were converted, perhaps years before. This is largely due to the neglect of systematic and continuous exposition of the Gospel of God, which the Apostles were so careful to explain, and the perversion of which they so uncompromisingly denounced. More meditative and prayerful study of the New Testament, and less distraction from the manifold fancies and scepticisms of the shallow intellectuality of the day, would surely result in more conversions to God, and more consistency and devotedness in Christian life.

SALVATION ARMY IN FRANCE.

SIR,—The result of the year's work at our hall, 3, Rue Auber, Paris, has been very encouraging. We have had remarkably good audiences, and often the hall is so crowded that many are turned away. The hall has been the scene of a most blessed work of salvation, some idea of which may be gathered from the fact that out of the converts, twelve officers and cadets have been raised as missionaries to their own countrymen. One of them, formerly a Catholic, an accomplished shorthand writer in two languages, is now a valuable help in our headquarters. Another, formerly an infidel and who writes in four languages, has also entered our offices. This will be particularly interesting to those who advocate the reproductive principle that missions should aim at becoming more or less self-supporting in "men" and "money."

The collections and gifts in the hall amounted for the year to 10,682 fr. 30 ct. (£427 odd); but, as the rent alone is 12,000 fr., there has been a deficit of 5839 fr. 05 ct. The soldiers alone contributed 241 fr. 85 ct., besides what they gave in the collections. A special collection made for the foreign missions of the Army raised in one week 120 fr. 25 ct. This will be encouraging to those who know how hard it is in France to win people to the kingdom and to giving for its extension.

I may mention as an interesting item in connection with the missionary principle named: more than eight out of every ten of our officers are converts of the work, who have given their lives to the Salvation war and have been trained in our new Homes. Every pound of English money contributed to our Salvation work in France is so laid out that it raises on the soil nearly two pounds more of French money from those benefited, besides the soul-saving labour it has meanwhile helped us to perform.

We have had at Rue Auber many cases of solid out-and-out conversion of French infidels, and of that class who are too careless even to take the trouble to be infidels. The one who came out seeking salvation during the Maréchale's meeting on the historic night of September 22 is a remarkable instance of the efficacy of the Gospel sword when wielded by the power of the Holy Ghost.

On one evening there were people of seven nationalities kneeling at the penitent form, each being, in his own language, helped by an officer into surrender and faith. One young Englishman, who came over to seek pleasure in Paris, found peace in our hall, where he had been drawn by a hand bill received on the boulevard. He returned home on fire and led others to God. A French theological student there found the assurance of salvation, and has been working for God with much devotion since. But the Parisian converts are above all a cause of rejoicing.

There have been remarkably few backsliders among them, though many prodigals and fallen of both sexes are among the rescued.

As an instance of the liberty now enjoyed in France, I may mention that the Mayor of Rochefort granted the Maréchale and myself, free of charge, the finest hall of the Bourse for two public meetings. One of the nights we had an audience of three to four hundred people, many of them among the most influential of the city. The attention and order were all that could be desired.

Paris. ARTHUR BOOTH-CLIBBORN.

HIS DOMINION FROM SEA TO SEA.

BY MRS. N. C. ALGER, CHATHAM, MASS.

"The whole wide world for Jesus!"
Oh no, the plan's too large!
Men on the earth have multiplied
Since Christ first gave the charge,
"Go ye and preach to all mankind
A Gospel pure and free."
Surely the vastness of the work
Our Saviour did not see.

"The whole wide world for Jesus!"
You say that we must claim
This round earth for our glorious King;
That we must preach his name;
Must help to send the tidings grand
Through every land and clime—
But there's enough of our own work
To occupy our time.

"The whole wide world for Jesus!"
We must leave India out;
Her population is so vast,
That one would have a doubt
About the good that could be done,
If we should try to send
To such great multitudes the news
That Jesus is their friend.

"The whole wide world for Jesus!"
We'll not take China in;
It's millions of idolaters
We cannot hope to win.
Then there's the dark, "Dark Continent;"
If we help other lands,
Poor Africa we must pass by,
So full will be our hands.

"The whole wide world for Jesus
Japan advances fast,
She'll soon give up the old, sad ways,
The idols of the past.
I think we are not needed there;
And the islands of the seas
Are of but little consequence;
Omit them, if you please.

One thing is sure; for our own land
We have no cause to fear;
For those who thought they knew have said,
"There are no heathen here."
Though if we help the other lands
A blind man could but see,
The people here must know of Him
Who makes the sinner free.

So reason those whose hearts know not
The "Secret of the Lord;"
Who feed not on the manna sweet,
Found only in his Word.
But those who truly love our God,
Who are by Him made free,
Need but the fact that Jesus said,
"To all the world go ye."

The warning comes to one and all,
"O tremble ye, and fear,
Lest to the mansions in the skies
Your title be not clear.
If to the Saviour's treasury
Your tithes you do not bring—
If prayer and sympathies claim not
The whole earth for our King."

The whole wide world for Jesus,
Open, all hearts and hands,
Till prayer, and praise, and generous gifts,
Include all foreign lands;
And we must surely tell his love
Where'er our flag's unfurled—
Be satisfied with nothing less
Than just "the whole wide world."

THE THREE GARDENS.

BY REV. JAMES CULROSS, D.D.

THE GARDEN OF GETHSEMANE.

IV.—The Apprehension.

Just as the agony closes, and while the words "Sleep on now" are on his lips, an armed band led by Judas is seen approaching for the purpose of apprehending Jesus. The band consists of Roman soldiers, temple-officers, servants, and others, accompanied by some of the chief priests and elders. They carry lanterns and torches, as if they feared that Jesus might creep into some hiding-place and elude them. They would make it appear too that He is a dangerous man, against whom it is necessary to take prompt and strong measures so as to prevent a serious insurrection.

As they approach He does not flee, or take any means to escape, but awaits their coming, and, when they are near, steps forward to meet them. They had considered the possibility of mistaking one of the disciples for the Master, and in the confusion apprehending the wrong person; so, to prevent misadventure, they arrange that Judas, who has sold himself to them, shall salute Jesus with the customary kiss. He stepped forward accordingly and said "Hail, Master," and kissed Him—boldly or ostentatiously kissed Him, somewhat overacting his part. It was the preconcerted "sign" by which He was to be pointed out to the band, but it was given hurriedly and given too soon, and so it failed to serve its purpose.

The betrayer meant to hide his treachery, and to salute as if he were still a faithful friend, arriving late at the rendezvous. Do not imagine "furtive mien" and "scowling eye," but the finest plausibility. A bad conscience and the eye and word of Jesus spoiled the device. "Friend, wherefore art thou come?" "Betrayest thou the Son of man with a kiss?" The betrayer, feeling himself detected, instantly drew back from the eye of Jesus, ere the band had full time to distinguish who had been kissed.

Just then Jesus advanced to meet the band, and asked, "Whom seek ye?" They say to Him, "Jesus of Nazareth." Jesus answered, "I am He"; and at the word they went backward—retreated—and fell to the ground, perhaps prone, doing unmeant obeisance—smitten by that power which struck persecuting Saul to the dust in the mid-career of his enmity, by one single scintillation of it. Thus He made it evident that his enemies had no power to take Him against his own consent. When they rose from the ground He repeated the interrogation, "Whom seek ye?" They answered as before, "Jesus of Nazareth"; and He then said, "I have told you that I am He; if therefore ye seek me, let these go their way." With these words He calmly gives Himself up into their hands.

Peter, seeing this, drew his sword and smote the servant of the high priest, cutting off his right ear.* Possibly he was moved by the Lord's word, as he understood it, "He that hath no sword, let him sell his garment and provide one." What is a sword for, Peter would say, but to use on fit occasion? And what occasion more fit than when the Lord is assailed? But his deed is mistaken. The Lord refuses the aid of his servant's sword—his servant may not fight—telling him that He had only to speak to his Father, and presently He would have had more than twelve legions of angels for guard; but how then could the Scripture be fulfilled?

Thus Gethsemane shows that the suffering of Calvary was voluntarily undergone, It was even as He said: "I lay down my life that I might take it again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of Myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of my Father." "Himself He cannot save" was the taunt of his enemies when He hung upon the cross. It was true, though not in the sense they meant. He could not, only because He would not.

V.—Love, the Heart of the Mystery.

Lying in the centre of the mystery is the love of Christ. He went this way for the love He bore to us sinners. "Christ loved us, and gave Himself for us." "He loved me, and gave Himself for me." Such words as these are a key to open the mystery. "No man ever loved thus," says Matthias Claudius, "nor did anything so truly good and great as the Bible tells us of Him ever enter into the heart of man...He came into the world to save the world; He was therein scourged and tormented, and went forth thence with a crown of thorns upon his head. Didst thou ever hear of such a thing, and do not thy hands fall down on thy lap? It is truly a mystery, and we do not understand it; but it comes from God, and from heaven, for it bears the stamp of heaven, and overflows with Divine mercy...He whose heart is in the right place lies in the dust, and rejoices and prays."

This love is the abiding glory of the Gospel, and enters into the secret of its power. David Livingstone found it so under the torrid sun of Africa. He tells us that in beginning to speak with those who had never heard the Gospel, the great theme which interests, if anything will, is the fact of the Son of God having come down to suffer for us. It is the same in frozen Greenland, as the Moravian missionaries found. They had told the wretched inhabitants about the one God, his existence and perfections, with apparently no result; their hearts remained as cold as the ice-blocks around. One day, one of the missionaries, who had been writing out a fair copy of a translation of the Gospels, read a portion of it aloud to some of the natives, and spoke with much feeling about the sin of man and the sufferings of the Redeemer. The portion read was the story of Gethsemane. Upon this one of the Greenlanders, Kajarnack by name, stepped up to the table where the missionary sat, and in eager tones exclaimed: "How was that? Tell me that again; for I, too, would be saved." These words so affected the missionary that the tears ran down his cheeks while he went on to tell about the love of Christ. Missionaries from the lanes and alleys of our cities, and from all parts of heathendom, tell us the same thing. If anything will touch hearts and bring them home to God, the story of the suffering love of Christ will. That love is the key to open the barred door of the sinner's heart.

"The love of Christ" does not belong to the past only, but to the present as well. "Dim tracts of time" divide us from those ancient days; but the same love burns in his heart as then, and is as generous, tender, and sweet as ever. It is one of the sorrowful things of to-day that so many are ignorant of this love. It is but a dream or a fancy to them. This is one reason why the world is so bleak a place; why there is so much disappointment in it; why there are so many empty hearts; why, in place of godly lives, there is so often the mere varnish or whitewash of outward morality. It is true that this love "passeth knowledge." Even Apostles in their largest experience found it so. We can take in only a little of it. We have not even a standard by which we can measure it. It is boundless, incomprehensible, ineffable. The understanding is baffled in contemplating it; it can be appreciated only by the penitent, pardoned, grateful sinner.

The Gospel is just a Divine call to come and share this love; not merely enjoying its gifts, not merely abiding under its shadow, but taking it into our hearts as love. For love itself is better than all its gifts. If we cannot know it in its breadth, and length, and depth, and height, we may delight in its reality. If we cannot measure its degree, we may taste its sweetness. If we cannot see to the ocean's farther shore, we may at least wander by its margin, and gaze upon it till vision fails us.

What love will undergo tests its depth. This love has come through Gethsemane.

"Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever." He has indeed ceased to be the Man of Sorrows. "He is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God, angels, and authorities, and powers being made subject unto Him." But his heart is unchanged. The difference is in his environments, not in Himself. We can count upon his constancy.

Constancy is the crowning quality of love. It is the inimitable mint-stamp of heaven set upon it, that "it never faileth." "I will never leave thee; I will never forsake thee." Ah, that is what makes love love indeed. Human love waxes cold; whispering tongues poison truth, and love withers; it finds flaws in its object, and is disappointed; it meets ingratitude, and is wearied out; it decays through absence and distance; it breaks down under the burdens that are laid upon it; the world frowns, and it falls off from our side; a wind comes from the wilderness and blows it out. But this love abides—unchanged, ever-during, imperishable, immortal—the one thing that lasts amid life's changes and desolations, as it is the everlasting mystery and glory and power of the Gospel.

"The burden of man's world, who shall declare it?—the hour and power of darkness, and our representative sacrifice? A cry such as never wind brought from the fierce-peopled forest when night hath locked up the black wilderness, beyond all din of battle, more than the echo of falling thrones, might have been the cry of nature, in that bewildered hour [of strange eclipse], for the fast-during oath of God—'Watchman, what of the night?' O watchman, what of our night? Can man be saved?"* Yes; love has fully met our need. Love has borne the awful curse. Love has magnified the dishonoured law. Love has rolled away the burden. Love has brought in "everlasting righteousness." When this becomes real to us, our hearts make the great surrender. And "we love Him, because He first loved us."

Fixing Prophetic Dates:

A PROTEST

BY REV. J. IDRISYN JONES.

IN common with many students of the Prophetic Word, we have been much shocked at Rev. M. Baxter's bold and dogmatic handling of "the times and the seasons" of predicted events. We are fully aware how much is due to him for awakening attention to a widely neglected theme; and we willingly testify to the fact of his extensive acquaintance with prophetic literature. Yet we cannot but deeply regret that he is now so acting as to bring into contempt the study of a vital and interesting branch of Divine revelation by publishing and advertising through the press and the daily newspapers, that the "Ten Kingdoms" are to be formed in 1892: that the Rapture of the living and the Resurrection of the sleeping saints is to occur on March 5, 1896; that Christ's descent to the earth, and the inauguration of the Millennium, is to take place in April, 1901, &c. Now, to say the least of it, all this is being wise beyond what is written; while it brings grief to many, and fun and amusement to a still larger number.

We venture to impugn Mr. Baxter's conclusions, and his theory of dates, for two reasons: (1) It is destructive of the Christian's attitude of watchfulness. The most fervent benediction of the Redeemer is offered to those who ever wait and watch for his return; but how can we reasonably watch for an event in 1890, which we are told cannot take place till 1896? It will be time enough, according to Mr. Baxter, if we mount the watch-tower with the first dawn of March 5 in that year—so that now we should all hasten down from it, and attend to other matters. But the whole drift of the teaching of the New Testament is that the day and hour of His coming is hidden, and that therefore we must never cease to be on the look-out. It is not, we think, improbable that this hiding of the time is intended to call forth this very attitude of constant expectancy, because of its salutary tendency. It is the notion of "delay" that is perilous, as Christ shows us in the case of the "Wicked Servant," who began to eat and drink with the drunken. Mr. Baxter would compel us to accept this notion of delay for some years further, and he thus seems to clash with that voice of the Master's saying, "What I say unto you, I say unto all—WATCH."

(2) Mr. Baxter's argument is quite inconclusive. He directs our attention to Daniel's words—"And he said unto me, unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the Sanctuary be cleansed" (viii. 14), and he makes the "sanctuary" in the passage to mean the Land of Israel—and that this cleansing of it took place, when in 1856 the Crimean War Treaty of Peace was signed, in which Turkey accorded to its subjects religious freedom. But surely this is as far-fetched an exposition of Scripture as has ever been attempted. The Sanctuary mentioned by Daniel, is evidently the literal Temple of the future in the city of Jerusalem, and the event referred to is that spoken of by Christ, "When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place," &c. (Matt. xxiv. 15). The removal of this will be the cleansing of the Sanctuary. Mr. Baxter is, therefore, utterly wide of the mark, we venture to think, in referring this to the Crimean Treaty of Peace. Yet on this mistake he builds the whole superstructure of his dates.

Yet, while deprecating this attempt to proclaim to us the day and the hour, we must not deny that the Advent with all its concomitant events seem near at hand; for the signs are deepening around us of some proximate crisis—whose sweep shall be universal, and in which all nations are involved; and the Scriptures connect such a general convulsion with the coming of the world's Redeemer, to take to Himself his great power, and to sway his sceptre, from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth. May we ever watch for it.

I.—THE VALUE OF WATER.

ONE of the most impressive sights a traveller can witness is that obtained from the summit of the great Pyramid of Gizeh, near Cairo, in Egypt. On the one hand is a plain of marvellous fertility, reaching from the Nile almost to the foot of the Pyramids. There the graceful palm-tree waves its head, and there, even in the winter as I saw it in the middle of February, the succulent clover glows in the warm, bright sunshine, while the wheat in its luxuriant greenness seems eager to shoot into ear. What a picture of satisfaction the camels and donkeys and oxen present as they wait to be loaded, while revelling in the rich provision afforded by this green food!

On the other hand is a picture of desolation itself. As far as the eye can reach there is nothing but sand. Not a shrub or tree or blade of grass is to be seen. And the Arab who stood by my side on that unique elevation informed me that in one direction there was nothing else to be met with for a three months' journey. Who can imagine the dreariness of such a terrible Sahara?

What makes the difference between these two tracts of country? The answer is contained in one word—Water! How strikingly is Ezekiel xlvii. 9 illustrated here: "Everything shall live where the river cometh." In nature there is no fertility without water, and in grace there is no growth without the water of life (Rev. xxii. 1, 2). How fervently should believers pray!

> Dear Fountain of delight unknown!
> No longer sink beneath the brim;
> But overflow, and pour me down
> A living, and life-giving stream!—Cowper.

II.—WATER FREE.

I stood in an open space near the railway station in Cairo one Sunday afternoon, and watched a man with a water-bottle on his back. He was evidently giving the water, as, though many drank, so far as I could see no money was given in return. Pious Mohammedans, I am told, sometimes leave money for water to be thus given. This man called out incessantly and earnestly, and I understood he was begging the people to come and accept the offered water. And they did come, quickly following each other; they drank, and went on their way. While some thirsty wayfarer was emptying one cup, he was rapidly filling another. His quick motion was that of a man with important business on hand. He bent forward and jerked the water through a narrow pipe attached to the bottle, uttering his shrill, earnest cry all the time. But when I returned two hours later, he was gone.

The lesson taught by such an incident is seen at a glance. We, as open-air preachers, thus stand in the public places, and cry out, "Let him that is athirst come: and whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely" (Rev. xxii. 17). So did our Lord when He cried, "If any man thirst, let him come unto Me, and drink" (John vii. 37). Let us be sure we have the water of life, and then let us not merely talk about it, but offer it freely to all. And let us warn the people that if they drink not now, there may come a time when it will be too late (Prov. i. 24).

SALVATION ARMY IN CEYLON.

PRISON GATE AND RESCUE WORK.

DEAR SIR,—There is an average of nearly 4000 men continually in the different jails of Ceylon. Of that number Colombo claims over 2000, many of these being desperate characters; the Cingalese all carry knives and use them freely on the least provocation. Cingalese women do not drink, and the average number of women in prison is only eighteen for the whole island.

Near one of the largest jails in Colombo the Salvation Army some two years ago started a Home for discharged prisoners, which, with God's blessing, has been marvellously successful in restoring to honest and useful lives many of the most hardened. Of the over 300 prisoners who passed through the Home, but few have again visited the jail; 140 are known to be doing well; about 80 are believed to be truly converted. From the workshop nearly 500 tea boxes monthly are turned out, besides rope spinning and other work. The working expense is 250 rupees monthly; of this, Government gives a grant of 100 rupees; the balance has to be got by subscriptions and profits on boxmaking. Dr. Howard, in passing to Australia, when visiting the Home, wrote in the visitors' book, "This is the most practical mission work I have seen in Asia."

The Rescue Home for fallen women was started about five months ago in Colombo; previously, no effort had ever been made for the poor lost girls, many of whom had been decoyed from their villages under the promise of situations, and taken to houses of ill-fame. It is pitable to hear the girls now rescued tell of how they often tried to escape, and were again recaptured. One poor orphan girl succeeded once in escaping and getting a place as servant; after a month she was found, and by force taken back again to sin; her hands and body bear marks of punishment by burning and beating, for trying to escape. She is now fifteen years of age, and has been since she was eleven years of age a slave (sad to state, the keeper of this house was a European woman, widow of a doctor). But five months ago this child was rescued, is now saved and happy, and is employed sewing in our uniform department. All praise to God.

We have had some touching scenes in our Home. Mothers have found their long-lost daughters; fifty or sixty have returned to their friends and villages; thirty-eight are in our Rescue Home, working at mat-making, sewing, rope-spinning, &c. Meetings are held in the hospital, the jail, and other places, among the women. About thirty have yielded their hearts to God, and the Home is a model of love and unity. All except one are Cingalese girls (Buddhists). Money has been generously contributed for the expenses by both heathen and Christians. The Bishop of Colombo is in warm sympathy, and his wife is a hearty subscriber.

We long to extend our work, and to open up homes for the criminal classes in other towns of Ceylon, where, we believe, God would do like glorious things as in Colombo. But our funds will not permit. With £500 we could start several homes, which would ultimately contribute (from work done) much towards their own support. Eighty-five per cent. of our converts in all branches of our work in Ceylon are from among the heathen. We have a number of converted Buddhist priests, twelve converted Mahomedans, and others, in our ranks. Our officers in the island number 112, of these 86 have been raised from among the natives.

BATH.—A Gospel Tent Mission was commenced last Sunday at Bradford-on-Avon by Mr. Albert Cater, of Bristol. The tent is in a splendid central position, adjoining the Town Hall, and is to remain for a month. Earnest prayer is asked for the effort.

MILDMAY PARK CONFERENCE.

AFTERNOON GATHERINGS.

[CONCLUDED.]

Open-air Mission.

MR. T. A. DENNY occupied the place of Chairman while a good meeting was held under the mulberry-tree on behalf of the Open-air Mission. Rev. JOHN MCNEILL cordially supported any effort to take the Gospel to the people out of doors. It was a grand work, and ought to be more largely done by the regular congregations. He would have an open-air Sunday, when all congregations should turn out, instead of worshipping indoors. He had recently addressed the preachers connected with the Open-air Mission in his own church, and had spent a very happy evening with them.

Mr. GAWIN KIRKHAM, secretary of the Open-air Mission, put in a special plea for support on behalf of that Society, which for thirty-seven years has steadily pursued the objects of its founders, viz., the promotion and practice of open-air preaching. Each of the thousand members of the Mission was pledged to this double object. Notwithstanding all the recent organisations which included out-door preaching in their operations, the need for a distinct Open-air Mission was as great as ever. This Mission had steadily stuck to its work, had shown others how to do it, had trained many preachers, had created a literature on the subject, had maintained sound doctrine, and was based on catholic principles. It had circulated twenty-three millions of tracts, and had been honoured in bringing thousands of sinners to the Saviour.

Mr. CHARLES COOK referred to the race-work of the Open-air Mission, its agents having laboured at Epsom and other races for more than thirty years. He also spoke of conversions from work in Hyde Park.

Children's Special Service Mission.

THE South Tent was crowded on Friday afternoon, when the claims of the children were brought forward. Rev. E. A. STUART spoke of the Children's Special Service Mission as a Bible society, tract society, and evangelistic mission agency combined. Besides making it one of their most prominent objects to encourage the daily reading of the Bible by the children in all lands, they circulate the Scriptures and gospel tracts in great profusion, but what they regard as their most important work is the holding of special missions up and down the country, with the aim of bringing to direct decision for Christ the large numbers whom they thus reach. This last department, he said, affords capital scope for the enthusiasm of Christian young men, and he specially recommended it as a fine training field for those desiring to enter the ministry. They would find that telling the gospel in simple language to young people was a splendid preparation for preaching to those more advanced in years.

The veteran worker, Mr. HENRY HUTCHISON, referred to the great blessing that constantly follows special missions amongst the young, and solicited the help of others to join them. Owing to several valued workers having gone forth to the foreign field, they will be very under-manned in the seaside work this summer, and he strongly appealed to Christians visiting watering-places where services are held on the sands to join in and render all the assistance possible. Mr. EDWIN ARROWSMITH drew attention to his work amongst the children of the upper classes. Whereas all sorts of agencies are in operation for reaching the poor, the children of the rich are almost entirely neglected, and he earnestly pleaded for more efforts on their behalf.

Mr. STUART closed with a few earnest words to the young people present, from the words, "Because ye belong to Christ."

Christian Police Association.

MR. J. H. TRITTON presided on Thursday in the South Tent over a meeting in connection with the Christian Police Association. Rev. E. W. MOORE delivered an address on the lines of the subject for the day—The Lord Jesus Christ as Leader, and the need of following Him fully.

Miss JOYNSON gave an interesting account of Gospel work among the policemen in Cheshire. Mr. DAVID BEATH urged everybody to get to work among the policemen. Everyone as they went about from day to day had the opportunity of dropping a helpful word as they spoke to them. Miss BARBER related an incident showing how the policemen themselves became missionaries to the crowds. A young man came out of a public-house where he had been drinking, and, meeting two policemen outside, invited the first one to "have a drink." "No, thank you," was the reply, "I'm a teetotaler." "Well, who'd have expected to find a policeman a teetotaler?" and, turning to the other, repeated the invitation to "come in and have a drink." "No, thanks; I'm like my mate; I'm a teetotaler as well." Then the two policemen proceeded to give him a right-down "straight" talking to about his soul's need. The young man listened, and then explained that he had left a godly home and come up to London to have "a good fling" in the world. That day he had gone out making up his mind thoroughly to enjoy himself, but he added, "Everywhere I have been to-day there has been somebody to talk to me about my soul, and now you policemen are the worst of all!"

A number of men having given testimony to the power of God to save and to keep from sin, and to live seeking to fulfil his will, Miss GURNEY asked for prayer on behalf of the Police Institute opened not long since in Adam-street, Strand, and that the men who frequent it may receive much blessing there. She also appealed for more Christian workers to interest themselves in the spiritual welfare of the police where no efforts are made on their behalf. She will gladly correspond with any desiring to take up the work.

General Notes.

THE early morning prayer meetings were as crowded and interesting as ever. Some think these the most enjoyable gatherings of the Conference. But those who can steal or squeeze into room No. 6 still think the 9 o'clock prayer meeting there the gem of the Conference. It is the morning worship hour for the Deaconesses, servants, orphans, and stewards. Some choice speaker is appointed to address the orphans, and herein lies the charm of the meeting; for men who feel they must be stately in the larger gatherings can afford to be simple here. For example, on Friday morning Rev. JOHN G. TRAIN spoke on "Doors," and what can be more delightfully suggestive than the following? There's a door we've got to open. There's a door we've got to shut; there's a door we've got to guard: there's a door we've got to enter; and there's a door we've got to keep in view.

Probably the most interesting and least known meeting is that for the waiters. Immediately the stewards have finished breakfast in the large refreshment tent on the last morning, Mr. Earee summons his waiters and assistants, some forty in number, who seat themselves near a table on which is a pile of books. On this occasion Colonel Morton advanced to the other side of the table, and in a manly, yet pleasant and spiritual way, gave the men a short address on Matt. xi. 29. The books (bound volumes of Faithful Words) were then distributed, to be carried home as mementos of the Conference.

Speaking of Colonel Morton suggests the propriety of expressing an opinion. All who know the loving, genial way in which his predecessor, Mr. James E. Mathieson, conducted the affairs of Mildmay, will understand how difficult it would be for anyone to succeed him. There can be no doubt that Colonel Morton has already produced a very favourable impression, and the Trustees are to be congratulated on having chosen so suitable a man for so difficult a post.

A Suggestion.

AN old attendant writes:—"Cannot something be done to limit the speakers at Mildmay? I notice year after year the tendency of the first speaker to encroach upon the time of the second; this year the transgressions in this direction were of a very glaring character. Two hours are allotted to each of the morning and evening meetings, yet frequently barely half an hour remains when the second speaker begins. On one occasion at this Conference only ten minutes remained of the two hours when the second speaker commenced! The Chairman begged for an extra ten minutes for this speaker, but to exceed the two hours for the entire meeting is bad policy. The audience grows impatient, and my sympathies are with the audience, because trains have to be caught, and other engagements kept. Why cannot the Chairman stop these long speakers? They put too much into their addresses, till the mind refuses to follow them any further. It seems to me that the Chairman ought to keep men to time if they are not able to time themselves."

A MISSION IN NEW ZEALAND.

DEAR SIR,—Knowing the deep interest you take in the work of God everywhere, I should like to tell you of a Mission recently held here by Rev. G. C. Grubb. With him were three laymen, Messrs. Campbell, Richardson, and Millard. We have had a very glorious work, especially in the stirring up of believers, many of whom have found there were heights and depths of the power of an indwelling Christ that until now they had never realised.

Nelson is very favoured. We have two Episcopal churches, with Christian ministers, and a truly Christian large-hearted Bishop, who is "one with all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity." It was cheering to see the crowds who came to listen to the old, old story, told so powerfully by one filled with power from on high. The last night fully two hundred of all denominations partook of the Lord's Supper in the cathedral. Christian tongues seemed loosed, and those who hardly dared to speak before, must speak now; they cannot help it. Many outside have been brought in. Will the Christians at home pray for us, that we may be kept living in the full power of a risen Christ with us?—Yours faithfully,

A NELSON READER.

MR. W. HIND SMITH is about to visit Australia and New Zealand, and possibly India. While family affairs are the immediate cause of the voyage, Y.M.C.A. matters will receive Mr. Smith's earnest attention.

ENGLISH GOVERNESSES IN PARIS during the holidays will find a friend in Miss Pryde, who, with the assistance of Christians, provides food, lodging, and a French education for the small outlay of 16s. per week. Her Home is also open on Sunday for any who desire to avail themselves of its hospitality, which some thirty or forty are often only too glad to do. No English governess in need of help is ever turned away. Miss Pryde's address is 152, Rue de la Pompe, Paris.

Mr. Moody's Summer School.

BY A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.

THE fifth annual summer school for Bible-study and personal consecration of college students under the leadership of that man of God, Dwight L. Moody, is now well organised and at work. Northfield was never in more pleasing attire to receive its influx of students than to-day. During the past year much of man's handiwork has been added to the charms of nature.

There are more than three hundred students already here, quartered in the seminary buildings and in tents about the great camps. They come in squads from the different colleges and States, while five came in from England this morning, one from Sweden, two from Germany, and three from France. Yale College is represented by twenty-five men, with goodly numbers from Harvard, Princeton, Amherst, Dartmouth, Lafayette, Richmond, and other collegiate institutions.

The missionary spirit, which has been such a prominent feature in these meetings in the past, promises to be as permeating and wide spreading as ever.

FIRST DAY.

Mr. MOODY had the first meeting opened with several short prayers, and gave a short address on the importance of prayer. Then he asked those students who felt inclined to state their individual objects in coming to the gathering. One young man said, "I come to get close to God, to know more of God." Another said, "I come from Colgate University, an institution that sends out 10½ per cent. of her men to the foreign field." Yet another, "I have tried to keep out of the foreign field for two years, and have, within two or three months, decided to go, and want to get firm in that conviction." Another caused the audience to smile as he said, "I belong to Dr. Gordon's Missionary Training School, on the way to China." A hearty reception was given to a student from Upsala, Sweden, a country represented for the first time, and to several Japanese young men.

THE FIRST SUNDAY.

Services were held in the village church to-day, about 1200 being in attendance. A choir of children, led by Miss Moody, assisted in the praise service. Mr. MOODY read from Luke xxiv. 24-53, describing the walk to Emmaus and the Ascension, making a few comments on the passages. Christ not only opened the Scriptures to his disciples, but their understanding also, and both openings were essential to every Christian.

Major WHITTLE preached from the words of Luke: "They worshipped Him, and returned to Jerusalem with great joy." The joy of the Lord is your strength, and when in a gathering of Christians there is no joy, it is because there is no life. We cannot work up this joy, but it is joy that comes from God when we worship and obey Him. In the true basis of worship there must be the personality of God revealed (2 Cor. ii. 4). God manifests Himself, and we must accept the manifestation, in order to have our worship accepted. The third true basis of worship is righteousness (Rom. iii. 21-25, vi. 22). What is righteousness? Accepted as right before God. The fourth thing for true worship is that the Spirit of God must be implanted (John iv. 13; Rom. viii. 26). Then the last point in the basis of true worship—the heart shall be rendered in joyful obedience, as in John xiv. 21.

Prof. W. W. MOORE spoke before the close of the morning session a few earnest words on perfect faith in Jesus Christ.

In the afternoon, Mr. MOODY spent an hour with a large gathering on Round Hill, at the back of his house, in giving out "nuggets" of the Bible, a discourse which he has frequently given and which is replete with Biblical quotations and references. Later on came the first missionary meeting of the school, when W. P. SPRAGUE, of China, gave an address. He said that he had returned from China after sixteen years' work, to let the people know that China is ready to receive the Gospel. The eighteen provinces are open to travel; there is Government protection, and foreign improvements are coming in. The missionary work has passed by its pioneer experiences, and now the missionaries are devoting themselves largely to the education and sending out of native young men as preachers. They are establishing self-supporting churches. He then appealed to them to enter the work by joining the thousand called for in China.

In the evening, secretary C. K. OBER had charge of the meeting, which took the form of general testimony from various young men present.

THIRD DAY.

Monday was largely devoted to an exposition of the Scriptures in one form and another. JAMES MCCONAUGHY, secretary of the Y.M.C.A., is to conduct morning Bible-classes, in which the time is to be divided as follows:—The study of the topic; treatment of a personal case; reports of personal work done, and selection of a case for the next morning. Editor F. K. Sanders, of The Inter-Collegian, conducted the first inductive Bible study. The hour was occupied in an introduction to the study of the first Epistle of John. The external evidence that John was the author is found in the belief of the early Christians of the Church, Polycarp, Papias, and Irenæus, while the internal evidence consists of the vocabulary, style, thought, and scope of both the Gospel and Epistle.

At the regular morning meeting, Mr. MOODY took up the subject of the Book of Matthew. Matthew refers to himself modestly, and the others do not give us much about his life. As Matthew invited those he knew to a feast with Christ soon after his conversion, it is a good thing for a young man who is called of God to begin with his friends. Some men we cannot get to church, but we can to a tea-party. Matthew was a wise winner. His rising from his seat and leaving his profession to follow Christ was undoubtedly thought a mad act by the Jews. In three years, however, he became one of the most famous men in history, and, if he accomplished nothing else, wrote the best life of Christ. There are sixty-five quotations from the Old Testament in Matthew. "How any one can attempt to throw away the Old Testament and believe in the New is incomprehensible to me. You will have to throw away a good deal of Matthew with it; the New goes with the Old." The word "kingdom" occurs thirty-two times in the book, and "Our Heavenly Father" twenty-two times.

You might call Matthew the shorthand reporter. None of the others report Christ so fully. The first sermon is the fifth, sixth, and seventh chapters, without exception the grandest sermon Christ preached on earth. It was like a bombshell to Judiasm; the laying down the principles of his kingdom.

The second sermon was delivered to the twelve. Many twist the meaning of verse 19, saying they are going to speak without preparation. That doesn't refer to preaching, but, "if you are arrested, and carried before a magistrate, don't get some sharp, Christless lawyer to defend you, but testify for Christ." The third sermon was preached in the ship to the multitude at Capernaum, and contains seven parables: the sower, the tares, the mustard seed, the leaven, the treasure in the field, the merchant and the goodly pearl, and the drag net. Take the drag net; go into a great city and preach, and draw in the net, and see if you don't get all kinds of fish. Sometimes it seems as if I had got a devil fish, sometimes a hard-shell crabb, or a soft-shell crab, an eel or a pickerel, and once in a while a good salmon, but often the worst-looking turns out the best. The fourth sermon is the most awful ever preached by a mortal; instead of nine blessings their are eight woes.

CAPE GENERAL MISSION.

DEAR SIR,—Since the death of my dear wife, my health has so given way that I am ordered to take a thorough rest and change, and to pay a visit to your shores. Under these circumstances I am sailing next month. Personally I am sorry to leave my post here, as the work is increasing very much, and needs all my attention; but I feel that, unless I take this needed rest, I shall break down altogether.

We have made, during the last nine months, very rapid progress in our Mission, and now number five-and-twenty workers and missionaries.

We are receiving cheering reports from all our agents, and souls are being won amongst our own countrymen, as well as amongst the heathen. We have the following missions, all in full swing:—A large hall in Cape Town, where a very blessed spiritual work is being carried on, under the superintendence of Mr. Frank Huskisson, and souls being saved every Sunday evening. We have also a splendid band of workers, who visit the town. Our two Soldiers' Homes are doing a quiet but good work.

Our Sailors' Rest is proving a grand success. Our new worker, Miss Jones, has the work well in hand; and, although she only commenced in March, she has already registered the attendance of upwards of twelve hundred sailors of all nations.

Mr. Walklett is hard at work in the Compounds at Kimberley, having seven thousand and more heathen as his parishioners; he is doing a real good work. Mr. Coates is at Kalk Bay, still in railway extension work, and reaching both coloured and white people.

We are hoping in a few weeks to have our new Transkei missionary at work. This will be rather unique. He will travel on horseback, visiting all the Cape Mounted Rifle stations, the men at present being utterly neglected—spiritually.

Mr. Jackson has just started with one of Rev. Andrew Murray's sons, who will do the Dutch work, on a four months' tour, visiting all the railway stations on the western, midland, and eastern systems. Mr. Malcolmson has been quite prostrated through overwork in the Orange Free State, and is now recruiting in Cape Town. He will do as much of my work as he can during my absence.

Our nurses have their hands full, and their services are much sought after. This will prove a very useful branch of our Mission. Miss Nugent Brown, of Ramsgate, is now on her way out. The Salt River work, founded by my dear wife, and carried on by the Misses Arnot, Mitcheson, Sprigg, and Rose Innes is very encouraging, and beginning to yield much-prayed-for fruit.

Mr. Dudley Kidd is on his way to Swazieland to procure land for our proposed Mission there in memory of my wife. We hope to send you more particulars about this and our proposed Medical Mission, in Pondoland, later on.

We find an increasing demand for literature, and are opening a nice little store in Cape Town in the course of a few days.

Our paper, The South African Pioneer, is answering well, and both at home and here, the circulation is increasing. I have many calls to hold missions, all over the Colony, but am quite unable to accept them until I get strong and well again. I hope on my return to fulfil engagements at Johannesburg, Pretoria, Oudtshoorn, Knysna, Graaf-Reinet, the Paarl, and other places.

God has been bringing our little Mission through a baptism of trouble, but the cloud is full of blessing, and already we are having the droppings, and we have very, very much to praise God for in the way He has led and blessed us. Our needs are great, and we feel sure many of our brethren would help us, if they could but see these various branches of work. We ask for your prayers. We have many more openings yet to fill, and are repeatedly hearing the cry, "Come over and help us."

When in England, I should be glad to hear from old friends, and gladly attend conferences, missionary, or other meetings. Mrs. Osborn is already pleading for South Africa and our Mission, on your shores, and I am sure you will procure open doors for her. Brethren, pray for us.—Your servant for Christ's sake,

W. SPENCER WALTON.

P.S.—My address in London will be Clenthurst, Versailles-road, Anerley, S.E.

STARVATION AT SUAKIN.

DEAR SIR,—A letter has been received from Dr. Harpur, medical missionary, C.M.S., dated Suakin, June 23. Dr. Harpur has been sent down there from Cairo to see whether the famine would afford any opportunity of commencing missionary work. He says:—

"The relief given here has in a slight measure lessened the distress, and certainly the mortality, from pure starvation. It has been given almost entirely by the Government. There are 2000 people outside the town in a continual state of starvation. The numbers keep about the same now, some dying off, and some new cases still coming in. The Government relief now is a small piastre (part given in bread and part in money) per head. This is given to 600, who do slight work. Durra (millet) is given to about 1000, each receiving a small measure (the size of a jam tin) of it a day, and children half that quantity. One hundred and fifty more are in the relief hospital.

"There is a very large number of children. To-day when distributing two sacks of durra among 615 people I counted 287 small children amongst the number, apparently under eight years old. Most of them were nothing but skeletons, their legs the same thickness from foot to body, their skin all hanging in folds. England as yet has only sent £48 towards the relief of these brave Hadendowas that you brought such high reports of when you came to Aden. If now we could help these brave people in their distress, we might be able to commence a regular mission at the end of the famine which must last at any rate until end of September. There will probably be left then a number of destitute orphans. Might not an orphanage be commenced with an industrial school? £1000 is wanted for the next three months. The Egyptian Government will probably give a grant. If £600 could be got from England we could start a separate relief fund."

A relief fund was opened at the office of the Aborigines Protection Society, Broadway Chambers, Westminster, about two months ago. I find from Mr. Fox Bourne, the secretary, that £75 have been sent out since the £48 to which Dr. Harpur refers. But £16 a day would be necessary to give to all the pittance of food Dr. Harpur speaks of. These poor people are the remnant of the gallant Arab tribes, the Hadendowas chiefly, whom we slew by thousands there a few years ago, and whose splendid bravery and utter contempt of death in the battles which then took place won the admiration of all who witnessed or heard of it. We mowed them down by thousands with our rifle fire, and then left the country a prey to anarchy, and all the miseries that have followed. Surely Christian England will not, for very shame, allow the remnant that is left to perish of hunger at our gates?

As to the orphans that may be left, steps have been taken to provide that they shall be cared for. As many of them as the authorities may see fit to hand over to Christian guardianship will be brought up for Christ, and may yet furnish missionaries for the Eastern Soudan.

I should perhaps add that this fearful famine has for months past prevailed all over that part of the Soudan, but that it is hoped that the crop which is due in September, or soon after, will bring some relief.—Yours faithfully,

F. T. HAIG, Major-General.

AN INTERNATIONAL TEMPERANCE CONGRESS is to be held September 3, 4, and 5, in Christiana, Norway. Various phases of the subject will be presented, and the discussion will be carried on in French, German, and English.

CHINA'S GREATEST CURSE.

JEALOUS of the bordering stranger
China built her guardian wall;
Fearful, too, of distant danger
Closed her gates to one and all;
But at length the sly invader,
Knocking with an ominous din,
In the guise of honest trader
Claimed the right to enter in.

China answered "No admission!"
Britain spoke with cannon roar;
Scorned to stand upon condition,
Hurled her bolts and forced the door.
Entered with the drug Satanic
Charged with foul and deadly fumes!
Tarnished lies the shield Britannic
Stonelike now on countless tombs.

Manhood's prime falls opium-smitten,
Dried and shrivelled in the smoke;
Souls are snared and serpent-bitten,
Blighted as by lightning stroke.
Widowed hearts by torture broken,
Robbed and desolate and lone,
Charge us with their woes unspoken
Chide us in their stifled groan.

While no hope of Heaven's bright morrow
Hallows yonder tear-drenched sod;
While yon wail of helpless sorrow
Struggles to the ear of God;
While an unoffending nation
By our own is "drawn to death,"
Shall we quench our indignation?
Must we meekly hold our breath?

What though wrong should fill our coffers
While it fills our cup of sin?
Where the cause of justice suffers
Boots it that the strong should win?
When the Judge of all creation,
Rising, shall avenge the right,
Who shall proffer vindication
For abuse of England's might?

By a Briton's love of freedom,
By his scorn of alien thrall;
By the impulses which lead him
To the help of those who fall:
By our Christian name and prestige,
By the love of God, we say
Let the death-drug's every vestige
From our realms be swept away.

OPEN AIR MISSION.

THE annual meeting of the West London Auxiliary of this Mission was recently held in Stafford Rooms, Tichborne-street, and brought together representatives from many of the churches and missions of the West-end. The report, read by Mr. William Davis, the hon. sec., emphasised the kind of preaching needed, and told of the success of the work.

Mr. Edward Trotter, who presided, pointed out the importance of the preachers receiving their message from the Lord, so as to be the Lord's messengers in the Lord's message (Haggai i. 13). Rev. D. M. McIntyre sketched the sympathy of the Saviour as an argument for the human side of the ministry. The Venerable Archdeacon Sinclair showed the need of open air-preaching from the fact that, as the result of a recent census of East London, it was found that only some 200,000 attended any place of worship in a population of 900,000.

Mr. R. C. Morgan urged the need of Divine guidance to secure success, from the story of Jonathan and his armour-bearer, in 1 Sam. xiv.; while Mr. G. Kirkham counselled young preachers to be prayerful, studious, and humble. The meeting was one of profit to all present.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.—Under the auspices of this Society two important conferences have been held on "Alcohol and Childhood." Some terrible facts were given concerning the effects, hereditary and otherwise, of alcohol in children.

The Papal Chisel in America.

By Rev. N. C. ALGER, Chatham, Mass.

Roman Catholicism and Jesuitism are two opposing elements. The mass of the Roman Catholic Church, because of its ignorance and superstitious beliefs, is far less dangerous to Protestant civilisation and Protestant ascendency than the shrewdness and educated intellect of its ecclesiastical leaders. Leo XIII. is under the complete control of the wily Jesuit—the Jesuit whom former infallible (?) Popes have banished; and the motto, "The end justifies the means," which was enforced under the screw of the Inquisition, and by the edicts of cringing Emperors, is still observed in its spirit, if not in the letter. The Jesuit is at the head of the ecclesiastical army. The scheme of centralisation is the movement of the hour, and cities have become the strategic points for the consummation of his deep purposes.

The Seamen's Bethel, Boston, where once rang the eloquent voice of Father Taylor with Methodist zeal and fervour, has rapidly undergone complete transformation. At its altar the persecuted sailor found light and peace. In Father Taylor, as the sailors loved to call him, the mariner had a sympathising friend and brother. Protestant hymns floated out of the open windows, and rang along the dark lanes and alleys of the North-end, and found their way into the dingy tenement houses, which could hardly be fitly termed homes. The drunkard on his ragged cot, and the organ-grinder in his cheerless attic, and the consumptive in his last lingering illness, were profoundly touched, and the birth of many an almost despairing character occurred through the instrumentality of those sweet songs of praise. For years Father Taylor lifted up his marvellous voice; for years that Bethel became the inspiration to many a life; and if we could catch one glimpse of the celestial inhabitants, we should discover hundreds who had been rescued through the precious influence exerted at the Bethel.

In 1871 Father Taylor breathed his last, and there went up to heaven one loud lamentation, from the Irish victim, who had been helped upon his feet to regain his manhood; from the Italian, and French, and American sailor, who had been taught to reverence God, and who were eager to show respect to the Bethel missionary. He had inserted a marble slab in the front of the Bethel, and chiselled the words, "Father Taylor's Bethel," upon its smooth surface, as a reminder of the glorious work accomplished. Now, behold the change! For some unaccountable reason, the Boston Port Society allowed that Bethel, dedicated to Protestant labour, to pass into the possession of the Roman Catholics. Scarcely had the necessary paper of transference been made out than there was seen a priest standing in front of that door, watching with grim satisfaction the workman employed with chisel and mallet cutting out of that marble slab the honoured name of the despised Protestant. The Pope of Rome has recently despatched some Italian priests to look after the 11,000 Italians in this section of the city, and a few weeks ago a priest, with two assistants and the altar boys, sprinkled the walls both without and within with holy water, to destroy the contamination of Christian prayers and Protestant hymns. Paganism has moved in, and erected its images of worship. Mary receives adoration, while her Son is thrust out.

Rome's resort is the chisel, with which she not only cuts out the names of Protestants, but she seeks

TO OBLITERATE THE FACTS OF HISTORY.

St. Bartholomew had too many Protestant victims, and she seeks to reduce the number from the thousands to hundreds, and from hundreds to tens, and even makes out that the ten were law-breakers, and worthy of punishment which they brought upon themselves. The Pope never commanded the slaughter, of course, because there was none; nor did the bells leap in their steeples; neither did Admiral Coligny suffer martyrdom he simply stubbed his toe, and fell upon the kerbstone, and died! There was no slaughter. There was no Inquisition. Spain did not in self-defence drive out the Jesuit, nor did France nor Mexico. There was no Spanish Armada, which was sent to overturn the throne of Queen Elizabeth. The marvellous chisel has eliminated from the slab of history all these supposed cases.

Recently a South Boston Roman Catholic judge, elevated to the bench, probably as a reward to his party, has attempted to cast ridicule upon two able histories soon to be decided on for text-books by the Boston School Committee, of which this judge is a member. He denies that the Roman Catholic Church believes in the doctrines of indulgences; but Professor Luther Townsend, of Boston University, shows that these Protestant histories are true to the facts, and he quotes in addition from Roman Catholic writers of eminent authority, and reveals Leo XIII. as himself issuing a decree on the occasion of his golden jubilee, and granting a full indulgence of all sins committed; and the Papal decree applies even to souls in purgatory, detained hitherto because sufficient money was withheld for such purpose. Not only does Professor Townsend show that prayers are offered to Mary, but that Leo XIII. sent out a prayer to be offered to Joseph, beginning thus:—

To Thee, O Blessed Joseph, do we fly in our tribulation, and, after imploring the help of thy most holy Spouse, we ask confidently for thy protection, &c.

Perhaps Rome will be glad to chisel these words out, as her prominent leaders declare that it is a Protestant slander to affirm that the Roman Catholic Church adores the Virgin Mary, and worships even Joseph. The chisel may work, when its mission is to eliminate the name of Father Taylor from a marble slab, but it is a complete failure when it attempts to destroy the well-known facts of history. Rome should weep over the characters which made such criminal facts possible. Tears, instead of the chisel, should be her resort.

SUMMER TRIPS.

Dear Sir,—Nearly 2500 took advantage of the facilities offered for enabling working men last year to visit the Paris Exhibition, and many expressed a wish that similar arrangements could be made for a visit to the Edinburgh Exhibition, the Forth Bridge, &c., during the autumn of 1890.

In response to this wish we have taken over Morningside College, near Edinburgh, a building containing 125 rooms, and possessing thirteen acres of pleasure grounds. Arrangements are being made for chartering special trains, and running weekly excursions during August. We are thus able to offer to working men the opportunity of a week's visit to "Auld Reekie," including railway fare, and board and lodging for the week, at an inclusive fee of £2 10s. The railway ticket will also permit of a day's excursion to Glasgow without extra payment, and special arrangements are being made for excursions to the Forth Bridge, a Sea Trip to Dundee, and admission to the Exhibition at considerably reduced rates.

The number we shall be able to accommodate each week will be strictly limited, but we shall be pleased, so far as our accommodation will permit, to book working men, other than those attending our own classes, for the different weeks in August. Applications should, however, be made immediately.

I may also mention that two large parties will leave for a Swiss excursion on the 17th and 23rd of the present month, price £6 for sixteen days, and two parties for sea trips to Madeira on the 30th inst. and August 8 respectively, price £10 10s. for three weeks. In addition to these we have our members' holiday Homes, for young men at Clacton-on-Sea, and for young women at Hastings, besides other provision for married couples, and those unable to afford the more expensive trips.—Yours truly, Quintin Hogg.

Good Reading for Sailors.—A gentleman who visits some six hundred sailors weekly on board their ships in the port at Gibraltar will be glad of any quantity of such publications (back numbers) as The Christian, Christian Progress, Christian Herald, Living Waters, Good News, British Messenger, &c., sent either regularly or at intervals. Address W. W., care of Mr. McPhee, 72, Church-street, Gibraltar.

MRS. WALL'S WORK IN ROME.

Mrs. Wall sees encouraging progress in her work among the Roman poor. From the report recently issued, we learn that the number of people present at the meetings was 6555. The Medical Missions have increased far beyond anticipation. The registered attendances during the year, amounted to 9290.

During the winter a meeting for the mothers was opened in the Hall near the Vatican. The priests watched the poor people continually, and threatened to excommunicate all who attended. This ban means the loss of the husband's work, notice to quit the little rooms in which they live, and much more sometimes. Mrs. Wall tells, among other stories, one of Marietta T——, a young woman who found the Saviour through visiting the Medical Mission. Her sufferings from a throat affection were very great, but she took all her sorrows and wants to Jesus, in the love of whom, after a time, she peacefully expired. The Bible-woman writes: "I never witnessed a brighter testimony to God's redeeming love. Marietta's poor mother has also learnt to trust fully in Jesus. She told me the other day, that although she has nothing in this world, she is sure that He who careth for the sparrows will not forget her."

The story of the conversion of an old woman, nearly blind, quite recently received into the Mission Home, is full of interest. Rosa Galassini lived at Marino on the Alban Hills, about twelve miles from Rome, and when young, enjoyed the privilege of learning to read. An old and friendless priest, who had died in her father's house, left among his books a large Bible, which Rosa read not only for her own instruction, but for the amusement of the family. Her "father confessor" asked to see the books she had been reading, and, once possessed of them, he refused to keep his word and return them. Years afterwards she took up residence at Rome, in days when the Pope yet retained temporal power. In confession she was asked whether she was quite willing to obey the Pope in everything. Her reply was: "I never speak against anyone. I feel I am a poor sinner, and I ask God to forgive me. As for the Pope, the Lord will do what He thinks best. He is King over all, and we must submit to Him." The priest, dreadfully angry, asked if she knew how to read, and when she replied "Yes," he said: "No woman ought ever to be taught to read; it is the worst thing they can do." To escape the Inquisition, Rosa left Rome, and had a hard time of it, through becoming blind. About six years ago, in a preaching-room in Via Serpenti, she heard an evangelist read the parable of the Prodigal Son. At once her memory took her back to the attic in her father's house, and the dear old book she had not seen for so many long years. At the close of the service, she asked the evangelist if he would lend her the book for a few days. Seeing her delight, he gave her a copy, which has ever since been her greatest treasure. She cannot see to read it herself, but is so glad when anyone will read it to her. The dear old woman was baptized, and joined the Church. She is full of joy in being able to live in the region of Christian love, rather than be an inmate of a Roman Catholic institution. Useful articles, for use in Mrs. Wall's varied work, will be forwarded to her if sent to the care of the Baptist Mission House, 19, Furnival-street, Holborn.

The Doré Gallery, 35, New Bond-street, S.W., is open for the admission at half price in parties of twenty and upwards (properly recommended) of Sunday-school teachers and scholars, and young men's and young women's societies, members of Bible-classes, orphanages, scholars of schools for the deaf and dumb, and young people and adults connected with mechanics' charitable institutions, mothers' meetings, parish associations. Application in all cases to be made beforehand by letter to The Doré Gallery, Limited (W. R. Anthony, Manager).

For the Young.

LOST IN THE AFRICAN FOREST.

IN his new book, Dr. H. M. Stanley tells a story about one of his black boys who was lost in the great forest through which the travellers were passing. They were suffering greatly for want of food, and they went in search of it:—

When 130 men have wandered about and about, to and fro, searching for food, the circle widens, and day by day the people had to go further and further away from the camp. It happened that while searching with eagerness, drawn on and on by the eager stomach, they were carried some miles away and paid no regard to the course they were going. When they wanted to return to camp, they knew not which way to seek it, and two full-grown men and Saburi, a boy of eight years, did not return.

I had a peculiar liking for the child. His duty was to carry my rifle and cartridge pouch. He was a dark cherub, as round as a roller, strong and sturdy, with an old man's wisdom within his little boy's head; frequently when the caravan was on its mettle, and a fair road before it, I looked back often and often to see how little Saburi trotted steadily after me. Being the rifle bearer, trained to be at my heels at any strange sound, I deprived myself of many a choice bit to nourish Saburi with, so that he looked like a little boy with a keg under his frock. But, alas! in the last few days the keg had collapsed, and he, like all the others, had gone into the wilderness to search for berries. On this day he was lost.

In the dark the guns of the carriers were employed to fire signals. About nine p.m. we thought we heard the boy's voice. The halloo was sounded, and a reply came from the other end of the camp. One of the great ivory horns boomed out its deep sound. Then the cry came from the opposite side. Some of the men said it must be Saburi's ghost wailing his death. The picture of the little fellow, seeing the night come down upon him, with its thick darkness, in those eerie wilds, with fierce dwarfs prowling about, and wild boar and huge chimpanzee, leopards and cheetahs, with troops of elephants trampling and crashing the crisp bushes, and great baboons beating hollow trees — everything terrifying, in fact, round about him—depressed us exceedingly. We gave him up for lost...

In the morning, little Saburi walked into camp quite unconcerned and fresh as from a happy outing. "Why, Saburi, where have you been?" "I lost my way while picking berries, and I wandered about, and near night I came to a track. I saw the marks of the axes, and I said, 'Lo, this is our road,' and I followed it, thinking I was coming to camp. But, instead of that, I saw only a big river. Then I found a big hollow tree, and I went into it and slept; and then I came back along the road, and so on, and so on, until I walked in here. That is all."

CHILDREN IN HOLLOWAY.

MUCH blessing has been granted to the services held in St. Barnabas' Parish (Vicar: Rev. Talbot Hindley) by Mr. H. C. De Candole and Mr. R. Callender, of Christ's College, Cambridge. All the week-day services closed with an after-meeting, when many children and young people stayed for further help and encouragement. The children did not at first grasp the idea of the "Individual Chats" which was offered them, but perseverance under God's blessing won the day. During the three last afternoons Mr. De Candole and Mr. Callender were busily engaged talking to those who came to see them There is reason to believe that much benefit has resulted. A goodly number have professed decision for Christ; others have joined the Scripture Union. Many of the workers have received great help.

The services were brought to a fitting conclusion by a special meeting for workers and friends in the church-room. God has answered the prayers offered up, but it needs to be remembered that the work has only begun.

TELL THE TALE.

BY PASTOR J. CLARK, ANTIGOUISH, NOVA SCOTIA.

TELL the tale of Jesus' love,
Tenderly and sweetly;
Like to one who fain would be
In its power completely.
'Tis a wondrous, wondrous theme!
Love o'er sin victorious!
'Tis the love of God's dear Son—
Let his praise be glorious.

Tell the tale of Jesus' love
Fresh from Truth's own pages;
All its hold on man it keeps
Through long-lasting ages.
While to you the passing years
More and more endear it,
Millions of the human race
Die and never hear it!

Tell the tale of Jesus' love
Where life's ills are thronging:
Nought like this in all the world
Meets the heart's deep longing:
Nought like this can cheer and bless
Sinful, dying mortals;
Nought like this can gild with light
Death's dark, gloomy portals.

Tell the tale of Jesus' love:
Think not, None will listen;
Soon, beneath its sacred spell,
Childhood's eyes will glisten.
Ay, and souls perchance even now
Wonder why you never Speak of Him whose name might bring Life to them for ever.

Tell the tale of Jesus' love,
Free from formal phrases;
Let each meaning word and look
Speak the Saviour's praises.
Heaven is listening! Wherefore wait?
Haste! for time is flying:
Speak as though you just had seen
Christ for sinners dying.

Tell the tale of Jesus' love;
Oh! 'tis worth the telling,
Where, amid the multitude,
Joyous strains are swelling;
Yes, and where one sorrowing soul,
Weary, burdened, lonely,
Has no friend to come between Him and Jesus only.

Tell the tale of Jesus' love,
Fervent prayer upbreathing:
Plead as Christ would plead with men,
Tears with words enwreathing;
Plead as one whose gladdened heart
Thrills with Calvary's story;
Plead as one who longs to win
Souls for God and glory.

Tell the tale of Jesus' love
While the strength is given;
Glorious work on earth is this—
Pointing souls to heaven!
Tell this tale of love until Soul from body sever;
Then, among the saints above,
Tell it out for ever!

SEASIDE SERVICES FOR THE YOUNG.

DEAR SIR,—Many of your readers will be interested to know the places where it is proposed to hold seaside services for the children during the present summer. The following is the list of of watering places in regard to which arrangements have so far been made, but I trust that the number will be considerably increased before the end of the season.

I need not say how greatly we feel the need of the earnest prayers of all friends of the work amongst the young, that God's special blessing may rest on these seaside gatherings.—Yours faithfully,

TENT MISSION AT SIDCUP.

MR. W. R. LANE has concluded a ten days' mission in a tent here, which has been a time of much blessing, believers having been much revived and not a few sinners we hope truly converted to God. The few Christians of different denominations who came together three months ago for prayer and conference and self-examination as to the spiritual deadness of the place, are now full of praise that God has graciously answered their prayers.

After a series of united meetings for prayer, it was decided to erect a tent for a week's mission. Although the weather was far from favourable the interest deepened and the attendance improved steadily from the first, the tent being overcrowded on the last Sunday evening, and well filled on the last two week-nights. The mission began after united prayer, and, carried on by united effort, was concluded by a hearty meeting for praise in Christ Church Room, which was filled to overflowing. Many written as well as spoken requests for praise were presented. Christians revived, backsliders restored, personal testimonies of decision for Christ, praise from teachers for members of their classes converted, in one case three, and in another five or six, were themes for thanksgiving in which the angels must surely have joined.

We commend this example of united work to friends in other small places where no separate section of the Church of Christ may feel strong enough for more aggressive efforts. Our taste of Christian unity has been so sweet that many of us hunger for more, and we are encouraged to contemplate further efforts in the winter.

Our friend Mr. Lane carries with him our affectionate prayers as he sails in a week or so to attend Mr. Moody's Convention at Northfield. J. J.

MR. WILLIAM FORBES, who has for about eighteen years held open-air services at the Crystal palace at the Temperance Fêtes, held a protracted service there on the 8th inst., assisted by several brethren. On the 4th inst. Mr. Forbes conducted a large party of the theatrical employés among whom he labours to Epping Forest for a day's outing. Gospel addresses were delivered, in which the love of Christ was pressed home to them. Friends desiring to have fellowship in this difficult work should communicate with Mr. Forbes, at 71, Tollington-road, Holloway, N.

Dr. Stanley's Book.*

The centre of interest changes so frequently in these pages that there is endless scope for remark and for extract. The title of the book of course suggests the dense and teeming forest that appears to cover a large portion of Central Equatorial Africa. On this point the great traveller takes occasion to correct the more partial view acquired by Professor Henry Drummond during his travels in Nyassaland. Chapter xxiii. is devoted to a description of the giant forest, and the teeming life—insects, reptiles, birds, and beasts—that finds in it a shelter and a home. The two pigmy races—the Batwa and the Wambutti—were objects of much interest to Dr. Stanley and his fellow travellers, and many curious facts concerning them are related. Though diminutive in physical frame, and in some respects very far down in the scale of human life, they are not without redeeming characteristics. They respond to kind treatment, and on occasion they have shown a touching fidelity not always found among highly civilised peoples. Speaking of the forest tribes generally, Dr. Stanley says:—

We have observed some singularly prepossessing faces, and we have observed others uncommonly low and degraded. However incorrigibly fierce in temper, detestable in disposition, and "bestial" in habits these wild tribes may be to-day, there is not one of them which does not contain germs by whose means at some future date civilisation may spread, and those manifold blessings inseparable from it.

The return journey of the expedition to Zanzibar, after Emin Pasha and a portion of his retainers had been collected for the march, was full of fresh and novel interest, though the journey was free from those perils by hunger that were experienced earlier in its history. The chapters that describe the Mountains of the Moon, towering in the grandeur of their eternal snows, the rich Semliki Valley, and those regions that cluster around the sources of the Nile, are scarcely second to any in the book for fascination and interest. Of course these topics afford ample scope for the wonderfully vivid descriptive faculty of the explorer. He was too unwell, from a severe attack of fever, to attempt any ascent or exploration of the Great Ruwenzori range, but Lieutenant Stairs made an expedition, the details of which are fully recorded. We fancy that what has been seen and here set down will be sufficient to whet the appetite of those adventurous spirits who are longing for new Alpine worlds to conquer.

Our concluding extracts will be from those parts of the volumes that bear on missionary work. In our report last week of the missionary farewell at Harley House, we cited Dr. Stanley's hearty testimony to the work on the Congo under Mr. Richards' care. After striking into the central regions, of course, the caravan lost all traces of missionary effort. Dr. Stanley, however, does not seem to have overlooked the possibility of the extension of such work far beyond its present boundaries. In describing the plateau where the expedition encamped while waiting for Emin Pasha's followers to arrive, he speaks of the desirable character of the situation, and says, "It has been the nicest site for a mission or a community of white men that I have seen for a long time." We trust that some Protestant Church will be first in the field, and not allow the Roman Catholics to outstrip them in securing a foothold at this healthy spot, overlooking the Albert Nyanza.

On approaching the Victoria Nyanza, Dr. Stanley was once more on familiar soil, and he repeats here much that was to him interesting news, about the ups and downs of Court life in Uganda, as related to him by two native Christians, who came as a deputation desiring his interposition. This, however, he diplomatically declined, and by and by he reached the south end of the lake, where he came on the C.M.S. Station then under the charge of Mr. Mackay. The meeting with the dauntless soldiers of the Cross is thus narrated:—

When we were about half a mile off, a gentleman of small stature, with a rich brown beard and brown hair, dressed in white linen and a grey Tyrolese hat, advanced to meet us.

"And so you are Mr. Mackay? Mwanga did not get you then this time. What experiences you must have had with that man. But you look so well, one would say you had been to England lately."

"Oh, no, this is my twelfth year. Mwanga permitted me to leave, and Rev. Cyril Gordon took my place; but not for long, since they were all shortly expelled from Uganda."

Then the traveller gives an interesting description of the Mission premises, telling how "out of the European quarter there trooped a number of little boys and big boys, looking uncommonly sleek and happy; and quiet labourers came up to bid us, with hats off, 'Good morning.'" Of Mr. Mackay himself the traveller speaks with the deepest reverential regard:—

He has no time to fret and groan and weep. If ever man had reason to think of "graves and worms and oblivion," and to be doleful, lonely, and sad, Mackay had when, after murdering his Bishop and burning his pupils, and strangling his converts, and clubbing to death his dark friends, Mwanga turned his eye of death on him. And yet the little man met it with calm blue eyes that never winked. To see one man of this kind working day after day for twelve years bravely and without a syllable of complaint or a moan amid the "wilderness," and to hear him lead his little flock to show forth God's loving-kindness in the morning and his faithfulness every night, is worth going a long journey for the moral courage and contentment that one derives from it.

The caravan rested at the Mission station for some weeks to recruit and Dr. Stanley's testimony is that "the effect of regular diet and well-cooked food; of amiable society and perfect restfulness, was marvellous." In Mr. Mackay's keeping a goodly supply of stores had been awaiting them for a long time; and in addition to these they got additional means of transport. A letter from Mr. Mackay to Mr. Stanley dated January 5 of the present year is inserted in the book. Mackay writes in a cheerful mood, but tells of a strange loneliness that hung about the place physically and mentally after his visitor had left. He hopes the explorer is "enjoying a more than well-earned rest after the fatigues and privations of African travel," and adds: "If any man merits the congratulations of Europe certainly you do." Further on in the letter he hopes that the Germans and the English "will keep the gunpowder out" of Africa. "In no other way will they ever be able to exercise any control on the chiefs in the interior." He further expresses the opinion that nothing but a railway from the lake to the coast will carry hope for that region. We cannot help wishing that this dauntless servant of God and of men had lived to see some more of the fruit of his long unwearied toil, and to hear the news that the British East African Company has at length resolved to construct the railway he longed for, and have commissioned an engineer to proceed to Mombasa for the purpose. Dr. Stanley's closing sentence in the chapter devoted to Mackay runs thus;—

To my great grief I learn that Mr. Mackay, the best missionary since Livingstone, died about the beginning of February. Like Livingstone, he declined to return, though I strongly urged him to accompany us to the coast.

In the beginning of the closing chapter of the book Dr. Stanley enters on some congratulatory reflections, pardonable enough, as to the share he had in the planting of Christian missions on the Victoria Nyanza and the Congo. With this final extracted paragraph we may fittingly take leave of these intensely absorbing volumes:—

In turning towards the sea, the thought came across my mind that elsewhere on the Congo, for 1400 miles from the western ocean, it had been permitted to me to float the steamers along that river; to build the stations on its banks, which in 1887 were to be of great service to me to carry myself and my followers along the great river; and to offer shelter where we should meet with welcome and hospitality, in the same manner as this missionary station which we were now about to leave had received us in 1889 with honour and regard. Truly I felt inclined to use the metaphor of the Preacher, and to admit that the bread I had cast upon the waters had returned to me abundantly after many days.

It was a little remarkable that the intrepid traveller, whose health has been so marvellously sustained under most trying conditions, should have been laid low with illness on the eve of his marriage last week. But fortunately he rallied in time, and on Saturday was wedded to Miss Dorothy Tennant in Westminster Abbey, in the presence of a very distinguished company. It was a gracious thought which led him to pause at the grave of Dr. Livingstone and lay upon it a wreath of lilies, but it is only one of the many tokens that he has given of his respect and love of that great missionary explorer. Mr. and Mrs. Stanley spend their honeymoon at Melchet Court, near Romsey, Hants, the residence of Louisa Lady Ashburton.

THE ANNUAL NATIONAL TEMPERANCE FETE was held on Tuesday, last week, at the Crystal Palace. During the day numerous entertainments were provided, including athletic sports, a concert by the Stockwell Orphanage choir and hand-bell ringers, and two concerts by five thousand voices (members of Good Templar Lodges). At midday there was a great temperance meeting in the theatre, presided over by Sir Wilfrid Lawson, and addressed by Revs. Hugh Price Hughes, Canon Wilberforce, Canon Leigh, and Mr. J. H. Raper. In the evening a number of open-air temperance and evangelistic meetings were held, various well-known speakers taking part. An interesting event in the day's proceedings was the dedication of a Good Templar Mission Van. It is to be in charge of Mr. and Mrs. Fisk, who will travel from village to village, evangelising and selling temperance literature, with which the van will be well stocked.

*In Darkest Africa. By H. M. Stanley. 2 vols. £2 2s. Sampson Low & Co. [Second Notice.]

REV. D. A. DOUDNEY, D.D.,

Editor of "The Gospel Magazine."

IT is scarcely possible to hear the name of Dr. DOUDNEY mentioned without at once associating him with some of the many works of which he is the prolific author. His Old Jonathan has been a favourite for years in many Christian households, and the same may be said of his "Retracings and Renewings," a kind of journal extending over nearly half a century, a fifth edition of which has lately been issued. The mere titles of the books, large and small, which he has written, take up no small space on the page of the catalogue of the British Museum Library.

The work, however, by which he is best known is The Gospel Magazine. Many throughout the United Kingdom know and esteem him highly as a faithful preacher of "the old Gospel." But it may safely be said that for one who has heard him preach there are scores, if not hundreds, who have had the most real and loving fellowship with him through the pages of this long-established serial. He has been so thoroughly at home in it, that at times it has seemed as if he had all his readers gathered round his arm-chair, and was talking to them, in the most unreserved and friendly vein, of the things of deepest and most vital moment to himself as well as to them.

As Dr. Doudney has now reached his jubilee as its Editor, a few words about the magazine (which had existed since 1766), may not prove unacceptable. The history of The Gospel Magazine is very much the history of Dr. Doudney himself; for, from a certain period of his life at least, month after month, he has taken his readers into his confidence, and has freely made known to them the chief incidents in his career, his trials and his triumphs, and what he has found truest and most sustaining in his own personal experience.

He was born at Mile End, Portsmouth, in 1811. At thirteen he left home to be apprenticed to a printer at Southampton. He does not seem to remember a period when he was not the subject of religious impressions; but it was some time before he distinctly felt that the Lord had proclaimed pardon to his soul. He was about sixteen when he was thus met in a very gracious and most unexpected way. He had been looking for some mighty change under a sermon, or in connection with some painful bereavement, instead of which his course was gradual, almost imperceptible. Doddridge's "Rise and Progress" was blessed to his soul, although the more he read of it the more miserable he became. He experienced the keenest agony of spirit, which he vainly tried to get rid of by attending the theatre. He took up the book of saintly Philip Doddridge once more, resolving to try, as he said, for the last time for peace. He fell upon his knees, and poured forth his soul in an agony of prayer.

"I rose from my knees," he writes, "and, walking round to another part of the room, I stood pondering over my state, when all of a sudden, and in the most unlooked-for way, these words were spoken to my heart with a power I can never describe: 'Son, be of good cheer; thy sins, which are many, are all forgiven thee.' A light and a beauty and a grandeur gilded the place, humble as it was. Everything was tinged with a glory brighter than the most brilliant rays of the rising or the setting sun. I could not understand what it all meant, except that my sins were all pardoned, and that I, who some time was far off, was brought nigh by the precious blood of Christ."

In 1832 he removed to London to gain greater experience. He commenced business in Holloway as a bookseller and printer, and in 1838 he started, in Long-lane, Aldersgate, the printing-house known as "The City Press." It was while carrying on business in his new surroundings that he became connected with The Gospel Magazine which had been conducted for more than forty years by Mr. Walter Row, and had subsequently passed into the hands of a popular clergyman, half a century ago, Rev. Bagnall Baker. He was a man of "High Church" sympathies, and did not edit the magazine for more than five months. Mr. Doudney purchased the copyright; but, at the time, had no thought of editing it. "Edit it yourself" was the advice given him by a friend with whom he had talked over the matter. He took the advice, and, on an early spring morning, "seated in our peaceful chamber in Bath Cottage, Hornsey-road," he wrote the opening address, in May, 1840.

When he took the magazine, he had no idea of writing the leading article regularly, but it is somewhat remarkable that, except in one single instance, he has never failed to do this. The Gospel Magazine in those years had made for itself a place in the literary world. Rev. Augustus M. Toplady, author of the hymn, "Rock of Ages, cleft for me," preceded Mr. Row and two or three others in the editorship. It is also noteworthy that the hymn commencing—

Hark! my soul, it is the Lord;
'Tis thy Saviour, hear his word;

was written by William Cowper for this magazine, and that Peronet's noble hymn, "All hail the power of Jesus' name," first appeared in the same serial. These facts are not without interest, as showing distinctly the repute in which it was held as giving the clear evangelic ring which was as greatly needed then as now.

After six years of editorship Dr. Doudney felt that he was called to the ministry of the Word. The Magazine was making its way, but to this heavenly call he could not be disobedient. So in 1846 he entered upon a preparatory course of training. He had not been without other training of a gravely touching character in the death of his dear wife and of three beloved children; and earnest and humbling were his self-communings when he looked forward to the ministry. His first work was in Ireland, where he began by taking schoolroom and cottage services. Very interesting are the accounts he gives of life at Annestown, in Ireland, in 1849, where he was privileged to see impressions for good made upon the most indifferent and sceptical. Three years later, when at Bonmahon, co. Waterford, he was pressed to take charge of a district in Sheffield. His Bishop, however, would not hear of his removal. Hence, he saw that it was his duty to remain at Bonmahon. It was here that he began work in connection with an industrial school, which was of the best service, and in this dark Popish village he accomplished the reprinting of Dr. Gill's commentary, a reprint from nine quarto volumes, as well as many other works. In this remote, sea-washed village, moreover, he commenced Old Jonathan, which he has ever since conducted. His labours in Ireland extended over nearly eleven years, during which he saw his eldest son enter Dublin University, with a view to the ministry, and had the joy of feeling that his own work was being divinely honoured in the salvation of souls.

In 1859 he removed to Bedminster, Bristol, with which his name for so many years has been connected. Space will not admit of our following the details connected with this his last sphere of labour, interesting though they are.

In the course of his second year at Bristol, he had the joy of seeing his eldest son, David, the last relic of his first family, ordained, and afterwards chosen as the first incumbent to the new church of St. James's, Carlisle. One feature of great interest in his ministry at St. Luke's has been the midnight service which he has been accustomed to hold on the last night of the year. These services have been continued throughout his ministry at Bedminster, the church, as a rule, being filled to overflowing. He has always been anxious to turn all seasons and events to the best account, by endeavouring to impress the lessons which they are so well fitted to teach. Thus his work at Bristol has steadily proceeded, until he has at length completed the jubilee year of his editorship of The Gospel Magazine. His old friend, Mr. W. H. Collingridge, of The City Press, has issued a statement in reference to a proposal to mark this jubilee year by presenting Dr. Doudney with a testimonial. From this appeal we have the pleasure of inserting one or two sentences.

"When it is borne in mind how faithfully Dr. Doudney discharges the duties of his ministry, the marvel is that he should have time to bestow, not only upon The Gospel Magazine and Old Jonathan, but on the books and booklets which drop from his pen in showers. There is not one of these which has not a distinctly evangelical aim, and which does not overflow with the heartfelt experience of the great doctrines which it has been his privilege to make known by pen and tongue."

REFRESHMENTS FOR RAILWAY MEN.—A lady correspondent urges that steps be taken to secure the supply of food, tea, coffee, &c., on stalls erected at railway stations for the use of guards and other employés. This plan is adopted on some Continental lines, and is a great boon, especially at night, to the men, who have no time for seeking it further afield. Doubtless this might be accomplished if friends would take the matter up in their own localities.

NEW SOUTH WALES.—The Minister of Public Instruction has decided to place a copy of Dr. Richardson's work on "Drink and Strong Drink" in the hands of every head teacher in the public schools of that colony. Teachers will be required to impart to pupils such instruction on the effects of alcohol and temperance as may be given without committing themselves to extreme views on the question of total abstinence.

WEARY TRAVELLERS IN WORTHING.

Some three and a half years ago, in this quiet Sussex watering-place, a seed was sown by the wayside, so to speak, that in God's mercy took root, and has now grown into a goodly tree. In plain language, this good seed was a visit paid by Mrs. Fooks, of Rutherford Lodge, to the common lodging-house kitchen of the "Volunteer" public-house. She was asked to go and see the sick child of a poor man. Her heart was strangely led out in sympathy towards those nomadic wanderers whom she found there seeking a temporary shelter. In short, it was a tramps' kitchen—not the place that a lady of refined tastes would choose to frequent. But no difficulty is too great for Christian sympathy to surmount. A Gospel song was the instrument by which Mrs. Fooks sought to gain the attention of these rough people, for whom nobody seemed to care; she was successful, for the touching strains struck many a tender chord of memory and of experience. Thus began a work among the tramps of the town, a new development of which was inaugurated by the dedication last week of a handsome "Travellers' Rest" in Clifton-street.

Having taken in hand this Gospel work, Mrs. Fooks could not draw back. For some time she went on, learning, as she says, by painful familiarity, how these social pariahs live, and how they die. She was led on by a Divine hand. By and by she opened a "Travellers' Rest" in a back alley, where many sad and sorrowful spirits were encouraged to take heart of grace, and was led to feel that someone cared for them. They were pointed to Him who is able to save, as He once came to seek, the lost; many were taught by faith to believe his Word, and to grasp his power, so that they were not only restored to a sober, industrious life, but received pardon for the past, and strength for the present path of holy obedience.

Of course, there were difficulties and hindrances of various kinds. Some who had not learned very deeply, if at all, in the school of Christ, said they were "only tramps!" Why should comfortable well-to-do people soil their fingers or spoil their garments by fishing in such muddy waters? Mrs. Fooks' answer was that a tramp has a soul, for the redemption of which Christ died; and though they have been downtrodden and stripped of all by yielding to some temptation of the devil, yet they can be lifted up and set on the Rock of Ages. They have hearts and consciences; ay, and affections, and feelings of gratitude to those who help them up out of the pit into which they have fallen. The downward way, alas! is proverbially easy; and once down, everything tends to keep them down, and drag them still lower. There are very few common lodging-houses in country towns, at any rate, that are not in connection with the beershop. As for the moral atmosphere that is bred in a tramps' kitchen of the baser sort—who can gauge it that has not experienced it?

As the work of search, of rescue, and of restoration went on, friends were made aware of it, and gathered around Mrs. Fooks, to lend a helping hand. It was necessary to get a more commodious place, but social prejudice and local circumstances made this a difficult business. At length a site in Clifton-street was secured, and a very pretty, commodious structure erected in a short space of time.

At the formal opening on Thursday last week, there was a good gathering of friends, all of whom were deeply touched and interested. Mr. T. A. Denny, who has been the most liberal helper in this enlarged effort, presided. He was in his gayest of moods. His highly eulogistic remarks as to the grand work that Christian women are doing in the world; and as to the special character of Mrs. Fooks' mission among tramps, fell on sympathetic ears. As an instance of the feasibility of reaching this class, he gave some interesting details of the success of a large lodging-house for poor men in Commercial-street, London. Some rather severe criticisms fell from him as to the pharisaic indifference and opposition to Mrs. Fooks' endeavour, by the highly respectable people of Worthing. He also expressed the opinion that when a man or woman is manifestly called and fitted of God for any special work, they should not be hampered by committees. Of the mission undertaken by Mrs. Fooks he said many pleasant and gratifying things, and his testimony as a practical man of business, looking for adequate results to an investment, were most weighty.

A short statement was made by Mrs. Fooks herself, in response to the call of the meeting. Many of the deeply interesting facts she told we have embodied in the opening paragraphs of this notice.

A number of local and other friends present added their most cordial congratulations and good wishes. Among these were Rev. F. Kruse, Rev. Mr. Elliot, and Mr. De Bear, of Worthing; Miss Webb, and Mrs. Gates, of Brighton; Mrs. Bryant, of Kingston-on-Thames (who has commenced a similar work). Mr. De Bear, as a Guardian of the Poor, expatiated very cogently and feelingly on the hardness and expensiveness of the Poor Law system of dealing with these "casuals." In contrast with this, he extolled the plan adopted by Mrs. Fooks of getting at the hearts of the men and helping them to a fresh start in life. Three men, trophies of the work, and now assisting it in varied ways, spoke briefly in words full of gratitude to God, and to Mrs. Fooks as the instrument of their restoration to a holy, useful life.

The total cost of the site and the new house in Clifton-street was £2135. A mortgage of £1000, and contributions promised up to the date of the opening, leave some £300 or so to be subscribed. We cannot think that such an excellent and practical Christian work as this is will languish for want of the needed support. To some extent, of course, it will be self-supporting, as the passing travellers will have to pay a small sum for their food and shelter. There is accommodation for sixty sleepers in the house, and we anticipate for it great blessing as a centre of Christian work among a much-neglected class.

Many friends may be glad to know Mrs. Fooks has a House of Rest for Christians at Rutherford Lodge, in the western part of Worthing; it is delightfully situated, close to the sea, and those who sojourn in it will enjoy many advantages, both physical and spiritual.

Pastor Owen Tidman proposes conducting special meetings for believers, and giving evangelistic services in Aberystwith and surrounding villages for three weeks, commencing on Tuesday next. He will be glad to meet with other Christians, and asks prayer for much blessing upon all the meetings. Letters to be addressed to care of Post Office, Aberystwith.

Bridge of Hope Mission.

IT is impossible for those not actually engaged in work amongst the lowest and poorest classes to realise the misery that lies underneath our social life. Every day and every hour we are brought face to face with sin and sorrow so dire that heart and flesh fail, and we are only able to go on because we can say, "God is the strength of my life." Those living in ordinary circumstances hear of a sad case now and then, but for us it seems only now and then that we hear of one case just a little less sad than the others!

We see more and more the need of keeping the Night Shelter, Rescue, and Preventive branches quite distinct, which we are able to do since we have had the new house. Perhaps a typical case or two from each will best explain our work.

One of our workers has come in from a visit in a neighbourhood where few would care to venture. In a small room, about 7 ft. by 11 ft., she found a young girl under sixteen years of age, who was the mother of the pitiful one-week-old infant lying beside her on the narrow ledge called a bed. In this same room were crowded together the girl's father and mother, two big lads, and a child of seven years! By an effort the bedside was reached, and the poor little mother spoken to. One of the saddest parts of this sad scene was the freedom with which the matter was discussed in the presence of the young family, showing how little they realised the terrible shame and sorrow that had fallen upon this young life. We hope that out of the evil good may be wrought, and that by patient teaching and training, this wild girl, steadied now by the responsibility devolving upon her, may yet become a useful woman. We can only give the barest outline of such a case, but any thoughtful mind can read between the lines and understand how much remains untold.

NIGHT SHELTER.

Another of our workers recently came in from a visit to the Cancer Hospital, and I will very briefly give the story of the patient whom she had been to see. One day last winter there came to our Night Shelter a woman rather over thirty years of age. She looked very ill, and we soon ascertained that she was suffering from cancer. We heard her story, corresponded with her solicitor, and found all her statements correct. She had been the wife of a rich and prosperous man, and had kept her servants and carriage. Her husband speculated, failed, and soon afterwards died. The rest is soon told. Drink was resorted to, and just when she should have been in the prime of her womanhood, she was creeping to our door, seeking charitable shelter where she might end her sad, short life.

Her distress of mind and body were terrible to witness, and the poor weary one was pointed to Him who alone could give her rest. She was prayed with, and she afterwards told us that with all her heart she followed every word of the prayer with childlike simple faith. She accepted the message of salvation, and was at peace. Many fruitless efforts were made to get her into a hospital; but being, as it proved, an incurable case, the difficulty was great, whilst the journeys to and fro intensified her sufferings. She was, however, so happy that, amid torturing pain, she was sustained by the great joy of newly found peace. She realised that death lay before her through a path of exceptional suffering; but, as she herself expressed it, it was only "Peace, perfect peace."

At last she was received in the Cancer Hospital, where she has been constantly visited, until, after long weeks of pain, dimmed by no shadow of doubt, she exchanged the Hospital wards for the Celestial City. Her last hours were soothed by the ministries of the worker who, under God's blessing, had been the means of leading her to Himself. She had lost sight of all her own people, and no one came to see her. Her gratitude was very touching, for she felt that, but for having been led to us, she might have died in the workhouse, uncared for, without God, and without hope.

It is difficult to write calmly, for my heart aches with the burden of such histories, whilst perhaps some will lay aside the stories so feebly told, and forget the tragedies which underlie all our common daily life.

RESCUE WORK.

But there are brighter pictures. We can tell of children and young girls, as well as older ones, rescued and saved. The joy of harvest has mingled with the sorrow of apparent failure. The other day, for instance, one of our former inmates came to see us, who is now a respectable married woman. She wanted to introduce her husband, for she had honestly told him her past history, and he wished to know us. Some five years ago, L—— had come to our door a degraded victim of drink and vice. But, thank God, his grace can save to the uttermost. After serving her time in the Home, she went to service. In attending a Baptist chapel, she found Christ as her Saviour, was baptized, and continued a quiet, consistent member. At the same chapel she met the respectable labouring man who is now her husband. They are both members of the church, and abstainers, so that we feel justified in rejoicing over this seal set to our work.

PREVENTIVE WORK.

We give thanks for many such rescued ones, but still greater is our joy over young lives saved from wandering into sin. From homes of the very worst description, little girls are taken and transplanted to the bright, healthful surroundings of our Cottage Homes, where they are trained for useful lives of future service. One such poor child, taken from a woman unworthy to be called a mother, is now in a place of service with Christian ladies who are carrying on the work begun in her training. She writes of her happy life and her Sunday-school, and is full of delight in anticipation of the Sunday-school treat; we almost wonder if this is, indeed, the ill-used, unhappy child who came to us three years ago.

Numbers are often misleading, but I might say that we have an average of twenty in the Night Shelter, forty-six in the Rescue Home, and about ninety children in the Preventive Homes. Still the work grows. We cannot stop when God so unmistakably gives the increase, for where He gives the vitality we know that He can and will sustain it. But we need the sympathy of those to whom He has entrusted the means, and we fearlessly say so, that they may share with us the joy of the service.

We sometimes wish that Christian friends would more often come and see what God is doing in our midst. They will be heartily welcome, and a word of prayer, or of sympathy, offered for his name's sake, is as a cup of cold water. We are always learning that our eyes must ever be towards the Lord. When ordinary resources fail, God's ravens are still in the air; and, even when the brooks are dried up, deliverance shall arise from another place.

"Bridge of Hope" Mission,
Betts-street, St. George's, E.

NORTH CAMP, ALDERSHOT.—In May, Mr. Thomas Wales commenced a mission in a tent belonging to the Evangelisation Society. The work has been continued by Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh, who is still labouring with much acceptance among soldiers and civilians. After a short rest Mr. Bradlaugh hopes to resume the work in the first Sunday in August, for another three weeks. Tracts, leaflets, or Gospel books will be gratefully received for distribution among soldiers and civilians, by Mr. John Poate, 1, James'-villa, Lynchford-road, Farnborough, Hants.

VIGILANCE AND RESCUE WORK.

DEAR SIR,—A quiet but effective work has been going on in the neighbourhood of Charing-cross. The last report of the "Charing-cross Vigilance Work and Rescue Committee" shewed that "there having been in all thirty-six houses dealt with by legal proceedings, twenty-three had resulted in the conviction of thirty-eight persons. Offenders had been mulcted in a total of £481 10s., besides the imprisonment of four culprits." The nett charge upon the funds at the disposal of the committee for this work was but £122 9s. 6d. The six months of the present year have been marked by still more vigorous proceedings and attended with still greater results.

It is voluntary effort that accomplishes the work, but it cannot be done without attendant expense; with greater means very much more might be done. This committee aims at the purification of the district in which it works, and has demonstrated that this object is not unattainable were sufficient aid afforded.

One special reason for action arises from the proximity of such evil houses to the various places of amusement. Did the Christian mothers of the Metropolis know one half the perils from which we wish to shield their sons, not a day would elapse before they doubled our means.—Yours, &c.,

S. BOURNE, Hon. Sec.

A MISSION WORK IN SOUTH ITALY.

ON a deep spur of the lower Apennines, between Pagani and Nocera, in the province of Salerno, is the Villa Pantaleone. The building has had a somewhat remarkable history, into the details of which we have not space to enter. It is at present in the possession of Signor Tuccillo, a convert from Romanism, and a most earnest student of the Scriptures. He and his English wife are very desirous to make the place a centre of mission work. In this endeavour they have met with determined and persistent opposition from the Roman Catholic priests, and those whom they have instigated to harass Signor Tuccillo in various ways. The Signor has, however, stood faithful, and he has ultimately had the joy of welcoming as helpers two English ladies who have gone to reside at his villa. A few young men were invited to study the Bible on Sunday, and since then each Lord's Day has seen gathered in the great entrance hall a crowd of eager people drinking in the truth.

The opposition has been continued, and it is most desirable that Christian friends who value the reformed faith should show their sympathy in this effort. If Christians could go out at their own expense and join the workers, those who speak French would find plenty to do among the Swiss factory people in the valley below. To those understanding a little Italian the signor will be delighted to give lessons freely. One great need is that the estate should, if possible, be set free once for all from Governmental extortion. This could be done if £500 were lent as a mortgage upon the grounds at easy interest. This would relieve the signor and materially forward the work. The estate becomes more valuable year by year, and when the signor is able to cut his large forest trees, he will realise many thousand francs; but the pressure is great just now. There are orangeries, extensive olive and filbert plantations, besides vineyards. The following two gentlemen, having been here, have consented to become referees:—Mr. W. R. Moore, barrister, King's Bench-walk, Temple, and Mr. Broome, publisher, 12, Richmond-crescent, Barnsbury, N.

A VISIT TO THE SCILLY ISLES.

THE following extracts are taken from the report of a colporteur sent to the Scilly Isles by the Christian Colportage Association :—

"It being now a very busy season, I found from 100 to 150 fishing boats there from various places: some from Penzance, Newyn, Mousehall; also from Lowestoft, in the east. As this is their best season for fishing, large quantities of mackerel, hake, and herring are being caught. As well as being their fishing season, the islanders are just concluding the flower season, as there are large quantities of lilies being grown on the Islands of various sorts; and it has proved a great boon to the place, as it is a means of bringing money to the Islands at a time of the year when there is nothing else making any return. They commence picking flowers directly after Christmas, and continue up to the present. As well as flowers, there are large quantities of potatoes sown. The greater part of the inhabitants are flower and potato growers. The potato harvest is now in full progress.

"Having visited the Islands three years since, I was recognised again by the greater part of the people, and many of them were able to speak of books they bought then: this made it more accessible for my visit this time. The first day I made sales in nearly every house besides speaking for the Master from house to house. One woman acknowledged buying a book on my first visit, 'Salvation: the Way made Plain.' Asked if the book had proved a blessing, she said it had.

"'Then you are a Christian?'

"'I hope so.'

"'That's not what you read in the book you bought of me.' I then began to talk to her, referring to 1 Cor. xv. 19, as well as other portions. She saw her mistake in hoping instead of trusting, and before we parted she said to me, 'For the future I shall be able to put hath instead of hope.'

"Visiting Tresco Island, where the Governor lives, I found this island very much neglected, and some of the people thought they were almost forsaken, having had scarcely anyone to visit them since I was last there. They described themselves as 'worse than any heathen,' and said they had not so much as a missionary to call on them. One woman declared there was only one Christian man on the island; but I was thankful to find this was not quite true, as I was encouraged to believe, after visiting all the houses, that there were others. But, taking them on the whole, there was a deal of ignorance as to salvation. My visit on this island was seemingly well appreciated, and the people requested me, if possible, to call again before leaving. I also found on this island that my visit three years ago was not forgotten, and many books, as well as cards bought then, have been well read and much valued.

"On Bryer Island, I found a different state of things; as, for something like twenty-five years, the people had met every Lord's Day evening, when (except when by any means a servant of Christ comes amongst them to preach to them) one of them reads Mr. Spurgeon's sermons. Apparently the greater part of them have become decided Christians, and are noted among the rest of the islanders for their piety. On the Sunday afternoon I went out to a country village called St. Mary's, and took part in a service with some friends of the place as well as fishermen. I found several anxious to know the Saviour. Two walked back with me, one of them living in the same town where I was staying, the other living in the village where we had been holding our service. I had a conversation with them, but neither seemed to come to a decision. But last Sunday, on going again to the same place, they asked me to conduct the meeting again. I noticed one of these men present, as well as others I had spoken to in the week, who were apparently anxious to know their sins were forgiven. After the meeting, I asked one of the men I had spoken to the previous Sunday if it was well with his soul, when he was able to say it was, and asked me to visit his wife. I consented, and was thankful to find, after a little conversation, that she decided for Christ. We had a prayer-meeting in the cottage, and both the husband and wife poured out their hearts in thankfulness to God for the blessing He had bestowed upon them."

After citing some more cases of interest, the colporteur continues :—"I am also sorry to say that I came across literature of a very light, frivolous kind. A Christian man told me it was being brought on the island by the cart-load. The last morning before my leaving, I saw one tradesman of St. Mary's had added to his stock of other wares a quantity of books of the very worst class, which, I fear, must prove very disastrous. The inhabitants are a reading people, and there is not much means for them to obtain good books unless something be done to keep up a good supply of them to counteract the bad ones.

"During my visit I called at every house, as far as I know, on the five inhabited islands, except perhaps a few on St. Mary's; and I have made sales in nearly every house, besides distributing a quantity of tracts. As at times there have been large numbers of fishermen, I have had the opportunity of distributing a quantity of tracts amongst them, besides speaking to them personally and collectively of the glorious Gospel of the grace of God. I found amongst them many bright Christians, and many who were exercised as to their spiritual needs. One young man, after I had been talking to them, acknowledged he was a backslider and was very unhappy, and left me apparently resolved to repent and turn to God; while another, who confessed he was a Christian, but had been following a long way off, also seemed stirred up to go on to serve the Lord better. I have also had the blessed privilege of sowing a goodly number of germs, as I have sold Bibles and Testaments, 112; books, 544; and Scripture text cards, 189."

Mr. H. D. Brown, the secretary of the Association (37, Farringdon-street, E.C.), writes :—

"This report has stirred in us a great desire to send a colporteur to Penzance to labour in that neighbourhood and regularly visit also the Scilly Islands. And we shall be thankful if any are willing to help by gifts, large or small. £50 will be required for one year. Already part of the money has been subscribed."

THE ARETHUSA TRAINING SHIP.—The Earl of Jersey, president, performed the ceremony of distributing the prizes to the boys of the Arethusa training ship, lying off Greenhithe, and belonging to the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children. The Earl of Jersey (who was accompanied by the Countess) made an inspection of the boys, who afterwards went through a few evolutions, and then marched past in ordinary and quick time, the band of the ship performing meanwhile. His lordship congratulated the winners of prizes, and asked the boys generally to bear in mind that good conduct and perseverance would be great aids to them in after-life. Major W. M. Mackenzie, deputy chairman of the committee, mentioned that a certain number of the boys from the ship went into the Royal Navy, and others into the Mercantile Marine. There was room on the ship for about 300 boys, but only some 180 were being trained at present. The cost was about £20 a year each, but if a larger number was maintained the expense of each would be smaller. The Arethusa was only a part of the really great work that was being done by the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, at a cost altogether of £20,000 a year. Their boys were not tainted by crime. Not only boys were cared for, but girls. At the present time there are nearly 1000 boys and girls in the several refuges and ships, who are being clothed, fed, educated, and trained for service in various ways at home and in the colonies.

Letters from France.—VIII.

THE following are extracts from letters by Lady Beauchamp and another worker :—

We have had some terrible scenes with drink. A crew of fourteen were leaving the Home to cross to England. The crimps were plying them with drink to the last moment, leading the men away till the steamer had left; men being dragged on board overcome with drink, almost each man had to have a watcher to bring him along and keep by him till the whistle blew to haul up the ladder.

On the other hand we have encouragement. Boarding-houses have had very few men, and almost all sailors leaving the ships have been brought into the Home. One crew had over £200 coming to them, which was thus rescued from the crimps, and sent on to England.

Our bar is increasing in usefulness; the other night we had thirty in at one time. A French soldier frequently walks two miles to come and spend his evening here, as he says it is almost the only quiet Christian place he can find in Hâvre; he is a child of God. A French bluejacket was here every night one week, and some Argentine Republic navy men also. Mixed in with these are English sailors, firemen, engineers, &c. It is a grand fishing ground. I am sure God is blessing. May we be kept looking at Jesus, and not at the stormy wind and waves which are contrary in every way. May the Lord send us some young men to visit the ships and draw the men in, and also help in meetings. We also are asking God for means to carry the vast work on. Often our resources are quite dried. We cry to the Lord, and He sends us just what is wanted to keep the work going. I dare not go into debt. May we trust and not be afraid for the countless needs. I have had several communications as outcome of your letters.

I am just off to Honfleur for the Sunday. It is a real "Rest," so quiet. We have taken another day sometimes there, as ships are coming in there, and we have got as many as twenty-two men up for the evening in the reading-room. What a corner for work this is. Honfleur does for tired folks; the country round is so very pretty and enjoyable.

One of the latest things we have been able to do is to have special evenings for the apprentices in the ships. We feel very much the importance of getting hold of these future officers in the merchant marine; so, whenever there are any in port, they will be asked to spend the evening with ourselves, away from the other sailors. We much fear that, owing to getting so little support from the public for the Hâvre work, we shall have to close the Rest at Honfleur, which Lady Beauchamp has supported entirely herself. It will be impossible for her to bear the financial burden at Honfleur and Hâvre with the little help that she gets for Hâvre.

There is abundant scope for work of all kinds to be developed. Not only may English ships come in on one tide with an aggregate of 250 sailors, but every week all the year round between 1000 and 2000 emigrants from all European nations and even Asia Minor pass through on their way to New York. These are most eager to have tracts and Gospels in their own language, and the visit paid to these vessels have revealed cases and incidents of pathetic and painful interest.

These particulars relating to Havre may be taken as showing substantially the needs and what may be accomplished at other foreign ports for our seamen. R. C. MORGAN.

MINISTERING CHILDREN'S LEAGUE.—The fourth annual festival service of the League took place on July 9 at Christ Church, Lancaster-gate. The attendance was excellent, notwithstanding the heavy rain. Rev. Prebendary Forrest, D.D., vicar of St. Jude's, South Kensington, hon. chaplain to the Queen, gave a very impressive address to the children. His text was from Proverbs: "Those who seek Me early shall find Me." The offertory was for the M.C.L. Homes at Athersham. Applications to start branches of the League are most welcome, and should be sent to 83, Lancaster-gate, London, W.

KENNINGTON CHRISTIAN MISSION.—For the encouragement of any who are anxious to engage in Christian work, but are held back by apparent difficulties, a word might be said in connection with this Mission. It was started in the beginning of this year by Mr. H. B. McPherson and two or three voluntary workers in Kennington Hall, Upper Kennington-lane, which was engaged for the work. Financial difficulties that were feared have happily been overcome. Mingled with much foreboding has been much joy in sinners saved, and an excellent work done. There is a good Sunday-school of poor children, for the most part taken from the street. The success is mainly due to systematic visitation among the poor with tracts and religious literature. The Mission is willing to render help by sending an evangelist for Sundays to conduct services in mission or chapel. J. SMALL, Secretary.

The Peace Congress.

THE proceedings of the Peace Congress, noted in our last issue, began on Monday, in Westminster Town Hall. The morning meeting was devoted to business matters relating to the arrangements of the Conference. In the afternoon, the Hon. DAVID DUDLEY FIELD gave his Presidential address before a considerable gathering of grave-browed men and women. He limited his survey to two points that he regarded as of much importance in connection with the maintenance of peace among the nations of the earth—arbitration and disarmament. Nearly all the disagreements that arise between nations could be settled, he contended, by arbitration. He was prepared to except matters bearing on the independence or sovereignty of any nation. But it was not made clear to us why disputes on these points should not be capable of peaceful solution.

The President went on to contend that if arbitration were inviolably accepted in the way proposed, there might be a wholesale disarmament, and European nations might at least content themselves with armed forces in the same proportion to their population as the United States, which is only 25,000 soldiers, besides militia, for 64 millions of people. One argument in support of arbitration is the fact that negotiations are always entered into at the close of a conflict, and therefore might be brought into play without any appeal to arms.

Arbitration has already been tried in international disputes some sixty times since 1815, and is not, therefore, a doubtful experiment. America has made provision for the settlement of differences between individual States by the arbitrament of the Supreme Court, and the large States of Kentucky and Indiana have quite recently submitted to a judicial settlement of a dispute that, if it arose between two distinct nations, would possibly be decided by the cannon and the sword. The United States has given another very encouraging proof of its desire for a pacific and amicable arrangement of national differences by calling an International Conference of the independent States of North and South America. With the exception of Chili and one other State, this Conference has unanimously adopted arbitration as the principle on which controversies between them should be concluded.

Among the other indications that this spirit is pervading the councils of the great nations, the President referred with much approval and hope to the friendly agreements entered into between England and Portugal, and England and Germany, with reference to their relative positions in Africa. Then followed a note of disapproval at the recent increase of German armaments, and of the contention by Great Britain that its navy ought to equal the navies of any two other nations. The startling fact was mentioned that out of each pound of the British National Debt, incurred this century, 16s. 3½d. has been spent on wars, and only 3s. 8½d. on civil expenses of Government.

The Chairman's words were indeed weighty, practical, and statesmanlike, and we trust they will make their due impression on the public opinion of Europe. The remainder of the sitting was taken up with the reading of communications from persons unable to attend the Conference, and with brief addresses from gentlemen respectively representing Britain, France, America, Germany, Denmark, and Sweden.

A conversazione was held in the evening for the special interchange of opinions on these deeply important topics. The Congress sits throughout the whole of this week.

MR. HENRY SMITH, of the London Evangelisation Society, who is conducting tent missions in Suffolk with much blessing, has completed services at Risby, Fornham All Saints, and Norton, where he held successful and crowded meetings last summer. His mission at Great Welnetham will close on July 18, and on the 20th he is announced to commence at Gedding.

TEMPERANCE CATERING.

ONE cannot do other than rejoice at the abundance of temperance advocacy in these days. And yet if we stop short at talk, however earnest and thoroughgoing it may be, we shall not accomplish nearly all that we desire. The most effectual method, after all, of checkmating the public-house, is to provide such places of refreshment as will at once attract the people and supply every legitimate need. A very interesting experiment in this direction has lately come under our notice. In Whitechapel-road an old drapery establishment was some time since artistically transformed into a place of public refreshment, where the strongest thing you can get in the way of stimulant is a cup of cheap but choice Indian tea or a bottle of honest ginger beer. Meals are served, supremely excellent in quality, generous in quantity, and at a price almost fabulously low. Needless to say, the "Tee-to-Tum" refreshment rooms have leaped, almost at a bound, into high popularity. It is most interesting at the dinner hour to watch the hungry crowd at the counter, ordering their modest but toothsome and nutritious meal; or, perchance, investing only in a cup of tea or coffee to wash down the economical luncheon they have brought in their pockets. The "Tee-to-Tum" is a real "victualling" establishment, without the "licence" that goes with the alcohol—whichever way you regard the word.

A very interesting feature of these establishments (for a second and still more attractive place has been opened at 226, Commercial-road) is the fact that they form poor men's recreation clubs. Upstair and auxiliary rooms are devoted to this, and all the advantages can be had for a very small weekly fee. There is quietness; there are papers to read; there are games to play; there are comfortable lounges; and the free and easy programme admits of indulgence in the weed. We should hope the day will come when our hard-working friends can enjoy themselves and spend their time rationally without the pipe or the cigar. Meantime this concession is made, that there may be no excuse for yielding to the dangerous attractions of the liquor saloon.

"The cup which cheers but not inebriates" is well to the front, and purchasers of the tea have all the advantage of getting it direct from the grower, and thus saving the cost of the middleman. We understand the far-seeing friends who have started these "Tee-to-Tums" purpose adding to their number in crowded neighbourhoods as quickly as possible. We hope the number of them will soon be legion; if every corner gin-shop in East London could be turned into one, a benign revolution would be effected in our social economy that imagination almost refuses to picture.

MR. JOHN A. GROOM, whose comprehensive work in connection with the Watercress and Flower Girl Mission (8, Sekforde-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.) is widely known and appreciated, has, we regret to learn, been too unwell for some time to appear in his place at the Sunday evening services at Foresters' Hall, Clerkenwell-road. The prayers of our readers are asked on his behalf, and for the work of the Mission.

PASTOR ARCHIBALD BROWN, of the East London Tabernacle, has received a call to the pastorate of Albert Baptist Church, Melbourne, which is under his consideration. The work of his church (says The Baptist) is still flourishing. His Saturday night Tabernacle prayer-meeting, at which about 1000 people, largely working men, regularly gather, must be well nigh unique under the sun. Miss Eleanor Mary Brown, the pastor's second daughter, has just been accepted for missionary work by the China Inland Mission. She will, however, devote the next six months to a preparatory course of home mission work, prior to leaving England. Another daughter, the eldest, is a nurse, doing good service in the London Hospital; while a third Miss Brown is occupied at Harley College, assisting in the work of Dr. Grattan Guinness.

TOLERATION IN SPAIN.

DEAR SIR,—While in England full liberty of worship is granted to the Romanist, Greek Church, Mahommedan, or Buddhist, it is otherwise in Spain. This new Hall in Criptana, La Mancha, some 100 miles due south of Madrid, was hardly opened for worship about fourteen months ago, when, after two services, it was surrounded by yelling crowds, instigated by priestly fanaticism, and through a tissue of Jesuitical falsehoods was ordered to be closed by the alcalde of the town. Nor was this all; no stone was left unturned literally, for a volley of stones was of frequent occurrence when Mr. G. Lawrence or his daughters ventured into the streets. Not only were they assailed in, outside, and around the town, but frequently the house they lived in was in like manner bombarded, and through the intrigues of the chief priests, scribes, &c., Mr. Lawrence has been obliged to change his house four times. They thought finally that they had succeeded in banishing him from their coasts, but he happens to be made of much the same stuff as Stanley and General Gordon, &c., and has held the fort in spite of all the besiegers; through his faithfulness he has, I trust, won a signal triumph which will be of use all over Spain to the cause of religious toleration.

The last attempt to kill him, by a man rushing on him with a pair of shears, was foiled by a good friend of ours, who came to his rescue when the enemy had him in his grip, and who administered one or two well-directed blows, which made him decamp most briskly. Mr. Lawrence went immediately to Madrid to lay matters before the authorities, and between articles written in the Madrid journals, the British Ambassador, Sir C. Ford, and a branch of the Evangelical Alliance there, Mr. Lawrence has obtained decided and special help from Señor Capdepon, Minister of the Interior, who ordered the Governor of the province to take the matter into his hands at once. The result has been an order issued by the Governor of the Province of Ciudad Real as under, to the Alcalde of Criptana, Dn. V. Ruescas:—

"In consideration of the official dispatch received, and in view of the eleventh article of the present Spanish Constitution and other legal provisions adapted to the case, this provincial Government has decided: That the Evangelical chapel established in Criptana be re-opened, and that you be herewith instructed to protect the members of that faith in their rights and privileges, and to defend them against any attack or annoyance for religious motives, delivering over to the proper tribunals any persons who should so molest them.

"I desire that you give this matter your special attention, and warn you that you not only give due instructions to the town police, but that you also see that such orders are carefully and thoroughly carried out. Only thus will you be able to prove that your town is the abode of civilised people, and so save me the disagreeable task of being compelled to punish any disobedience or lack of diligence in the execution of this order."

Since the above has been issued the hall, closed for twelve months, has been reopened, and services held in it without any further disturbance; by the good management of Mr. Lawrence a house adjoining the hall has been obtained with good apartments and many conveniences and schoolroom, 54 ft. by 18 ft.. But sundry repairs and furniture, and other monetary arrangements made to save time and hinder litigation require a sum of £100 before the end of November, and we trust that all those who take an interest in the Gospel work in Spain will help us. Mr. Lawrence's three daughters are excellent Spanish scholars, and have ninety children in their school. The colportage of the neighbouring provinces has been placed under the same direction, and Mr. Lawrence is peculiarly fitted for this work. Miss Lawrence writes in a recent letter that she is much encouraged in spite of all her sorrows, and that with patience for the poor, ignorant people she expects that rich sheaves will be gathered in due season.

Yours in Christ,

W. GREENE, Oriolet, Loughton, Essex.

YONDER:

In Memoriam—WILLIAM RICHARD JONES, aged 28 years, who passed into the presence of the King, June 5, 1890, within a day's sail of Plymouth, while returning from Australia.

"Hoping soon to follow this, and grasp your hand once more."—His last letter to me.

O GLADSOME greeting, tearless and triumphant,
O hope fulfilled to hearts that waited long;
O day of days the night of sorrow ending:
The voice of weeping melting into song!

There, precious friend, shall be our happy meeting,
Not on the shores of earthly ocean-wave,
Not 'mid the scenes of sorrow and of parting,
Not 'neath the shadow of an early grave.

But YONDER, where the grave's deep gloom is vanquished,
And death is swallowed up in victory;
Robed in the glory of the resurrection,
Bearing his image whom we longed to see!

He giveth grace, and then He giveth glory:
To me the grace to tread the pilgrim way;
To thee translation into cloudless rapture,
Walking with Jesus in eternal day.

'Tis but a moment, 'tis but light affliction,
Though, weeping oft, we shrink beneath the load;
Then glory dawns, exceeding and eternal,
Where all the ransomed have their blest abode!

There, friend and brother, you shall bid us welcome—
Loved ones restored, nor ever more to part;
Raising the song we loved to sing together,
Perfected praise possessing every heart!

O happy day of recompense for labour!
Sweet fellowship, for ever undisturbed!
O sight of sights, the unveiled face of Jesus!
Gazing on Him whom once on earth we served!

Open-Air Mission. FRANK COCKREM.

AN INDIAN CHRISTIAN VILLAGE.

REV. C. H. HOCKEN, of the Wesleyan Mission House, Hassan, Mysore Province of India, writing to a friend in London, under date May 16, says:—

Not very far from Belur we have founded a Christian village, the people of which are all Koramas, a wandering tribe living by hunting and plunder. In their uncivilised state they are a terror to the neighbourhood in which they encamp. We are working amongst this tribe, and have, in our newly founded village, about forty of them. When they become Christians they abandon their nomadic and thievish habits, and settle down as farmers. To make a start, they need a little help. We get the Government to make them a grant of about six acres of land each. We also lend or give, as the case demands, about £5 each, to build a house with mud walls covered with straw, and also to buy a pair of bullocks for cultivation. The first settlers have paid back all they borrowed, but the small fund which we raised for this purpose is not sufficient to meet the demand, and is now exhausted.

The honesty of those who were once notorious thieves is remarkable, and they themselves afford a striking proof of the power of religion to raise the most degraded. They are now most industrious, and have brought waste land under cultivation, and are most of them quite independent of the Mission. This village, sprung up in the wilderness, with its little chapel and cheerful, consistent inhabitants, is a striking object-lesson teaching the value of Christianity to the surrounding villagers.

This work, I think, if properly managed, is likely to assume large proportions. Others are anxious to leave their wandering life and settle down as Christians with our people. I have just got a grant of another twenty-six acres of land from the Government, and could settle more, as far as land is concerned, but my fund is exhausted. It is a kind of work which makes an excellent impression on unconverted Hindus; it removes their prejudices, and softens their hearts towards us.

VILLAGE ITINERATION.

DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST,—Experience has taught me that our Lord's instructions, "Take nothing for your journey," vide Matt. x.; Luke ix.; Mark vi.; Luke x., &c., are as practicable to-day in North and South Africa as they were 1890 years ago. But I have had my doubts as to England and other European countries, and so, in order to discover the Lord's mind, a friend, A. Ravilions by name, and I, started off in the middle of June. We took train from Tunbridge Wells to Buxted, a village we had never previously visited; we called at several cottages, and, without exception, found the people—like the followers of the false prophet Mohamed—steeped in fatalistic darkness. But we met two Christian women on the road, who advised us to call on the blacksmith at Hadlow Down. We found him to be a bright warm-hearted Christian. He was delighted to make our acquaintance, and pressed us to come to his home for a cup of tea, and we spent a very pleasant hour with him and his like-minded wife. We then went on to a village called "Five Ashes," and inquired for the "worthy" one, being directed to the house of the police constable, who, however, was away from home. But his good wife cordially invited us to come in and take tea, and when we told her about the way in which we were travelling, she insisted that we should remain for the night.

On Sunday morning after breakfast we started for Mayfield, visiting the cottages scattered along the way, but failed to find a single Christian. On our arrival, seeing the town so well stocked with chapels and churches, and desiring to devote our time and attention to the less enlightened villages, we decided to move on, and ascended a hill on the other side of the town. Following a footpath through a meadow, we sat down under the shade of an oak tree intending to spend a quiet hour in the study of the Word. But, hearing music and singing, and seeing a mission hall in the distance, we went to the service, and on coming out Ravilions met an old friend, whom he did not at first recognise, and who introduced us to Mr. Snell, the minister of the Congregational Church. He asked us to assist him in the open-air and evening services, and I shall always have pleasant reminiscences of the kindness and hospitality received at his home. One man, named Adams, at the farewell testimony meeting, which was held at Mayfield last Monday, said that he had for many years been a confirmed smoker, and that he had been led to trust there and then, and that all desire had been immediately removed. There were also other testimonies of a similar nature. And thus has it fared with us. We have made our requests known to no one but to God, and to his honour we can thankfully say, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us." During the last eleven days which, by the way, have been very pleasant ones, we have visited Buxted, Hadlow Down, Five Ashes, Mayfield, Wadhurst, Woods Green, Lamberhurst, Goudhurst, Cranbrook, Benenden, Hawkhurst, Burwash, Rotherfield. We have borne our testimony in most of these places, and we have every reason to believe that our labour has not been in vain.

Sussex is rapidly being Romanised. Corrugated iron chapels are to be seen in most of the villages in connection with schools, which are usually built in a more substantial manner of stone or brick, with a view to permanency. We live for the day. Rome's unchanging motto is semper eadem. Twenty years hence the iron chapel will be replaced by a stone church, and its seats will then be filled by the lambs who are being bought and sold to-day.

We came here yesterday at the request of our brother Turnbull, from Pitlochrie in Scotland, whose labours in Mayfield the Lord has been pleased to honour. Some have been turned from darkness into light, and from the power of Satan unto God, and others—Christians of long standing—have been led to enter through faith, into what is generally known as the higher Christian life. Our brother has started a good work, under the title of the "Kent and Sussex Village Mission," address, Miss Morgan, Mount Pleasant, Tunbridge Wells. He has offered to supply our needs, and, as this does not necessarily do away with the principles upon which we are working, we feel inclined to accept pro tem.; for past experience in Morocco has taught us that an invitation of this sort should never be rejected.

I feel more than ever convinced that the Church, if she is ever to overtake her work, will have to revert to Apostolic lines. For Christ, although He was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might become rich; and it behoves us as his disciples to follow in his footsteps, for "the disciple is not above his Master, nor the servant above his Lord. It is enough for the disciple that he be as his Master, and the servant as his Lord." Unity is strength, and experience teaches that there must be perfect unity; a single note of discord destroys the harmony. The Spirit is grieved, and light then becomes darkness. Those who would trustfully follow the good Master must not only be justified, but sanctified through faith.

"Tarry ye till ye be endued with power from on high," was the text given to me on my return from Morocco, by Mr. Wilkinson, of Mildmay.—Yours faithfully in the Master's service.

Letters to the Editor.

THE DODS AND BRUCE CASES.

DEAR SIR,—Rev. John Dymock's reply in your issue of July 4 to "A Free Churchman" on June 20 can afford no satisfaction to those who are wounded in their spirits by the disloyalty to the Word of God manifested in the proceedings of the recent Free Church General Assembly. Secular newspapers, like The Times, and all intelligent readers of the reports of these proceedings, have this in common, namely—a perception of the complete inadequacy of the motion carried by the majority vote to deal with the charges brought against the Professors implicated, and the utter impotency of that motion when set in contrast with the tremendous censures and brave words pronounced in the speeches of the movers and seconders. It is the old cry (Jer. vi. 14, viii. 11; Ezek. xiii. 10) repeated, and Church history, like secular history, repeats itself, "Peace, peace, when there is no peace."

The leaders probably knew well that stronger motions, followed by stringent proceedings, would have landed them in a minority, and that is of course abhorrent to leaders anywhere and everywhere. The sad and solemn truth is that, in regard to these new teachings and the liberties taken with God's Holy Word, "the people love to have it so." I have an affectionate remembrance of Henry Drummond and his evangelistic helpfulness in 1875; but the immense popularity of his recent booklet, "The Greatest Thing in the World," is one of the straws on the surface of the present-day current of thought which shows whither the Church is drifting. What a pity that so beautiful an analysis of 1 Cor. xiii. should have been marred by an offensive disparagement of faith in his opening page; for, "without faith it is impossible to please God," and there is no short cut to love and good works (I mean from God's standpoint), until the vital union between God and the human soul has been effected. So thought the Apostle Peter (second Epistle i. 5-7), when he tells believers to add to their faith Christian courage, knowledge of God, self-control, &c.; and it is significant that the last-named of all these distinguishing features of the true Christian is "love," probably because it is the most difficult of attainment. If it be "the greatest thing in the world" (and I, for one, would be slow to deny it), it is not the first thing—the first thing, the indispensable thing, the all-important thing, is faith.

What was the characteristic teaching of the moderates of unhappy memory, who are referred to, and justly so, by "A Free Churchman"; they preached morality, they preached good conduct, they preached good works; they did not know, or, if knowing, did not warn the people, that life was a pre-requisite to any goodness that God could look upon; and the advice given to young men by the modern school, to aim at "saving their lives rather than saving their souls," is futile, and can result only in disappointment. New Gospels of humanity have widened the gate, and broadened the way that leadeth unto life, to let the crowd pass in; or they have provided ingenious ladders for those who object to enter in by the door, and these climb up some other way to get into the fold somehow; but can all this advanced thought and nineteenth century enlightenment prosper? "He that goeth onward (marg. 'taketh the lead'), and abideth not in the teaching of Christ, hath not God" (2 John ix.)

Mr. Dymock's argument, based upon the zeal and devotion of many of those who voted with the majority, is a precarious one; good and earnest men sometimes make mistakes, and run into error. In England, in these days of Ritualism and Romanising, one often hears the apology for men who indulge in these practices, "but so and so are such earnest men"; truly, but the more earnest the more dangerous, if they are on the wrong track.

Jubilee celebrations are much in vogue now. If the Lord tarry, the Free Church of Scotland will be preparing to celebrate in 1893 the memorable exodus of 1843, which stirred the nation to its depths, and called forth the sympathies of Christian people all the world over. What better jubilee could we welcome than a repetition of the faithfulness of that epoch, when men were loyal to great truths, and gave up their earthly homes and prospects in witnessing to the crown rights of our Redeemer. In contending for other but equally important aspects of "the faith once for all delivered to the saints," might not the faithful of this generation also count upon the unchanging faithfulness of a covenant-keeping God, to provide, as fifty years ago He provided, for the needs of the men who came out in obedience to his claims?

One word more. As in all past ages of the Church, errors culminating in soul-destroying heresies, have had their origin, not amongst the masses, but amongst the learned, so is it now; the danger is in our colleges, in the exaltation of human research and human wisdom, and from the neglect in all the Churches of the teachings of the prophetic word; and so again it comes to pass that many blessed truths, and chiefly the blessed hope of Christ's personal, pre-millennial and speedy return, are "hid from the wise and prudent, and revealed unto babes. Even so, Father; for so it seemed good in thy sight."—I am, sincerely yours,

JAMES E. MATHIESON.

DEAR SIR,—Your three correspondents, in their different ways, must have rather increased than diminished the difficulties which many of your English readers feel on this subject. In this attempt to clear it up a little, I keep to the former case, not having studied the other.

"A Free Churchman" makes a most complete mistake when he likens the present situation to that of the moderates and evangelicals; for undoubtedly many of our best ministers and elders voted with the majority. Why did these good men and true do so, while some of them were thoroughly on the other side? For one reason, many were against a libel, from the peculiar difficultics of the case. How successfully libel Dr. Dods for views of which the Assembly was perfectly cognisant when it appointed him as their Professor? There lay the root-error, embarrassing the subject at every turn. No compact had been entered into that Dr. Dods should turn over a new leaf; how then commence a process for his expulsion because he continued on the old leaf?

The uselessness, therefore, of a law case made many vote for "peace" rather than for a forlorn struggle after "purity;" choosing Dr. Adam's motion as conveying the most censure, and thus defeating the motion of least censure against the man and the views of which they disapproved.

Further, many godly men voted with the majority from apparently the same process of reasoning as Mr. Dymock's, assuming that those who themselves hold the doctrines of the Confession of Faith cannot teach anything against them. This idea, with the kindred one, that like "the king," good men "can do no wrong," has misled many excellent Nathanael-like minds. Such forget two points: (1) There are two ways of holding doctrines—one with the firm grip of faith that they are God's doctrines; the other with that easy-going, slippery touch which results in their being taught as non-essentials. (2) It is precisely the men of "understanding" who are to "fall;" and those who are to "depart from the faith," must have held the faith (Dan. xi. 35; 1 Tim. iv. 1).

The question has never been "What are Dr. Dods' personal views?" but "What has he taught broadcast by means of the pulpit and the press?" Everything else is irrelevant. My readers can easily answer this question for themselves, if they will procure a copy of our Scotch Confession of Faith,* and of the now celebrated "St. Giles' Sermon."† Let them be compared, the one with the other, and both with the Word of truth. I leave the result with God.

The minority, who did not look at perplexing and roaring waves, but at compromised truths, are left in a very difficult position, and require much wisdom and judgment for their future conduct. Fervent prayer ought to be made for them by all who keep to the faith once delivered to the saints. Every energy should now be devoted to the coming-on Revision of the Confession, so that its grand old Bible doctrines may be conserved; some revisions there must and usefully may be, but such a Confession should be left to us that any recurrence of such irregularities as have been lately condoned may be promptly met and dealt with.

QUESTIONS RE CONVENTIONS.

DEAR SIR.—In THE CHRISTIAN of June 27, the question is asked by a correspondent: "What is the outside testimony regarding the advance in holiness of those who have had the experience of the higher life?" May I be permitted in answer, to refer to the case of a clerical friend of my own, who died about two years after the Oxford Convention. I had known him well for seven years previously, and in some respects they might have been called years of failure, as, though a devoted Christian and a faithful pastor, he had occasional outbreaks of violent temper which greatly marred the effect of his ministry. He had done all he could to conquer this infirmity, which made his life a perpetual struggle, and which the doctors assured him was unconquerable, and arose from physical causes.

The secret that he found at the Oxford Convention completely changed his life. Those who had not known him before found it impossible to believe that he had ever had the slightest difficulty of the sort, though he was placed afterwards in very trying circumstances, and those who had known him, could only wonder at the marvellous effect of grace, upon what seemed an invincible fault. He himself spoke of it as a triumph of God's power over both soul and body.

Another friend of mine, a lady well known for Christian work, used to be of such an anxious temperament that she constantly lay awake at night filled with anxiety for the future. For the few years that she lived after attaining to this higher life, her wakeful nights, as she herself told me, were a source of nothing but joy, as the deep peace she enjoyed kept every anxiety away.—I am, yours faithfully,

M. B.

DEAR SIR,—In reference to the correspondence in your columns on the subject of Conventions, though prevented by various causes from attending them for some years, I have read with interest the reports of many, and they have often formed the topic of conversation with friends. I will give as briefly as possible the result of my observations.

While fully admitting that many of the Lord's people have received much blessing from attending Conventions, especially in the matter of full, personal consecration, and apprehension of the power of Christ in them, the question arises, Is not much harm done in the opening meetings by supposing that all those present need to begin again at the beginning, and continue through the course of teaching up to the praise meeting at the close? Compare, for instance, the last meetings of one Convention, where everyone is full of praise for blessing received, with the opening meetings of the next, where many of the same people are full of sorrow for blessing lost. Surely this is not as it should be. Ought not the Christian life to be holier and more matured each year, and is not the very teaching which is laid such stress on at these meetings, viz., that there is no need for continual failure, undermined by the apparent supposition that all need to begin again exactly where they began the preceding year?

We read in 2 Tim. iii. 14, "CONTINUE thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them;" and we may take with this the words of the Lord Jesus in John viii. 31, "If ye CONTINUE in My word, then are ye My disciples indeed."

Is there not a danger, in these days of many Conventions, attended largely by the same people, of putting them in the place of Christ? May they not even tend to carelessness of walk and neglect of personal communion with the Lord, and dependence upon the next Convention to regain the "lost blessing"?

Is not the great need a daily, hourly, momentary Convention with the Lord Jesus Christ, through the power of the Holy Ghost and through his Word, which must lead to a life of entire consecration to Him, manifested to those around by a spirit of love, gentleness, forbearance, and acts of kindness, instead of criticism and want of love, too often seen in those who take a prominent part at these Conventions, and who, entrenching themselves behind the fact of having received a special blessing, believe that therefore all they do must necessarily be right, when those around can see many inconsistencies in their lives?

Is not the way to "continue" to live in the spirit of Paul's words in 2 Cor. iii. 18, R.V.—"We all, with unveiled face reflecting as a mirror the glory of the Lord, are transformed into the same image from glory to glory, even as from the Lord the Spirit"?—Yours faithfully,

W. J.

DEAR SIR,—You recently inserted a letter of mine in which I referred to the experience of John Newton in the matter of consciousness of progressive holiness, as I suppose I may term it. I could not then lay my hands upon the very words of that eminently experimental Christian, I have now found them, and in case any of your readers might be interested in them, I subjoin the extract. It occurs in a letter to Joseph Foster Barham, Esq.—a much-esteemed member of the Moravian Church at Bedford — of whom Newton says, writing to Mr. Bull, "I have no person in these parts with whom my heart so thoroughly unites in spirituals, though there are many I love."

It will be observed that Newton expected to make the attainments of which he speaks, by degrees. Am I right in supposing that it is there that many Christian friends nowadays will say he made his mistake—that he might have attained it at once?

It will be observed, also, in what direction he believed he had gained after many years of Christian experience. I am not familiar enough with the writings of the friends referred to, to know whether or not their experience corresponds.—Yours sincerely,

SENEX.

EXTRACT FROM CARDIPHONIA.

I have no idea of any permanent state in this life that shall make my experience cease to be a state of warfare and humiliation. At my first setting out, indeed, I thought to be better and to feel myself better from year to year; I expected by degrees to attain everything which I then comprised in my idea of a saint. I thought my grain of grace, by much diligence and careful improvement, would in time amount to a pound; that pound in a further space of time to a talent, and then I hoped to increase from one talent to many, so that, supposing the Lord should spare me a competent number of years, I pleased myself with the thought of dying rich. But, alas! these my golden expectations have been like South Sea dreams. I have lived hitherto a poor sinner, and I believe I shall die one. Have I, then, gained nothing by waiting upon the Lord? Yes, I have gained that which I once would rather have been without—such accumulated proofs of the deceitfulness and desperate wickedness of my heart as I hope, by the Lord's blessing, has in some measure taught me to know what I mean when I say, Behold, I am vile....I was ashamed when I began to seek Him; I am more ashamed now; and I expect to be most of all ashamed when He shall appear to destroy my last enemy."

ROMANISM.

DEAR SIR,—After much study of the subject, I would suggest two most useful works to place before the English public, in order to enlighten them as to the real claims and pretensions of Rome at the present day, which have been increasing and developing in deadly mischief for the last two hundred years.

I refer to Pascal's "Provincial Letters," and Professor Salmon's "Infallibility of the Church" (London: John Murray, 1888).

Could these two works be published cheaply, and widely circulated, they would surely convince every impartial reader and searcher for truth that the Spirit which inspires the Papacy is the same as ever, and that its diabolical designs have never changed, but are only carried on by means of tactics and weapons changed to suit the present age. Christians are ordered to add the wisdom of serpents to the harmlessness of doves; I feel that nowadays there are myriads of Englishmen who, through political prejudices, critical doubts, modern sentimentality, or other causes, cannot gather the truth from their Bibles, and who will not be much affected by the history of ancient persecutions, but who might be attracted, and, by the help of the Holy Spirit, be brought to a right view of the dangers of Romanism, through the arguments and exposures of a Roman Catholic like Blaise Pascal, and the calm and liberal reasoning and proofs set forth by that great authority on Scripture exegesis, and lover of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Provost of Trinity College, Dublin.

With regard to the "Provincial Letters," it may be objected that they are out of date now, and that the casuistry exposed in them has been disowned and condemned by the Roman Curia; the fact, however, remains, that the Society whose members could imagine such a system of worse than heathen immorality still flourishes, and is triumphantly furthering the interests of the Papacy. It is true that the Society of Jesus has been suppressed in many countries; but there is every reason to believe that this fact has not in any degree lessened its power for evil, any more than that the loss of his temporal sovereignty has really weakened the influence of the Pope over the mind and conscience of his followers.

As a friend of Roman Catholics, and a well-wisher to your efforts for the truth, but not possessing any other powers, I place myself at your disposal to the extent of my moderate pecuniary means, in case you should deem it feasible to spread real knowledge in some such manner as I have suggested.—I enclose my card, and remain, Sir, yours very truly, LECTOR.

DEAR SIR,—I am one of those who are most thankful for the bold stand you take on the side of God's truth against error. I think those who, like Mrs. Carr, object to your opposition to Romanism, do so in consequence of lack of information concerning that system of error and tyranny. I would recommend all such to procure and peruse thoughtfully.

(1) "Danger and Duty: A few Words to Fellow Protestants," by Rev. G. Everard. A 32-page letter-size pamphlet, published by Messrs. Nisbet & Co.

(2) "Which is Right: The Church of Rome or the Word of God?" A 4-page leaflet published by the Irish Church Missions to Roman Catholics, 11, Buckingham-street, Strand.

(3) "Which Sovereign—Queen Victoria or the Pope?" by the late Dr. Wylie, published by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, price 3d.

(4) "Is not the Church of Rome the Babylon of the Apocalypse?" by the late Canon—afterwards Bishop—Wordsworth, published by Messrs. Rivingtons, price 1s.

No. 1 forcibly shows our "danger" from Rome and Romeward tendencies, and gives the true Christian spirit in which to perform our "duty" in the face of such "danger."

No. 2 throws light upon some of the terrible teachings of the Church of Rome, e.g., "Jesus, Mary, and Joseph, I offer you my heart." "Mary commands in heaven." "Those who do not serve Mary cannot be saved." "Thou, O Mother of God, art omnipotent to save sinners." "Thou (Mary) art the only hope of sinners." "Oh! Lady in heaven, we have but one Advocate, and that is thyself." "Both the Son and the Mother effected human redemption, and obtained salvation for man." "MARY SO LOVED THE WORLD AS TO GIVE HER ONLY BEGOTTEN SON."

Does not such teaching dishonour God the Father, and God the Son, and, therefore, grieve God the Holy Spirit?

No. 3 gives us a little insight into the intolerance of Rome, and what she would do if she could. For instance, in chap. iv. we have a compend of the Canon Law of the Church of Rome, by which every Romanist is bound, as promulgated ex cathedrâ by the late Pope Pius IX. in an "Encyclical" and a "Syllabus," and endorsed by the present Pope Leo XIII. in these plain words: "The teaching given by this Apostolic See, whether contained in the Syllabus and other acts of our illustrious predecessor, or in our own Encyclical Letters, has given clear guidance to the faithful as to what should be their thoughts and their conduct in the midst of the difficulties of times and events. There they will find a rule for the direction of their minds and of their works" (Weekly Register, Sept. 6, 1884).

Here are a few examples of the rights and powers of the Church as laid down by the Canon Law. The Church has the right—

(1) "To require that the Catholic religion shall be the only religion of the State, to the exclusion of all others."

(2) "To alter conclusions of a National Church Council" (as for instance the Maryland Act, referred to by Mrs. Carr), "and to reject the claim of the Government of the country to have the matter decided in the terms adopted by such National Council."

(3) "To make bishops promulgate the Pope's decrees, without the consent of their rulers."

(4) "To claim dominion in temporal things for the clergy and the Pope."

(5) "Of treating all marriages, which are not solemnised according to the form of the Council of Trent, as invalid" (as the Pope has just declared to Her Majesty's representative, Sir Lintorn Simmons, concerning such marriages in Malta, that they "are not and shall not be valid." To this Sir Lintorn Simmons replies "that Her Majesty's Government will cause a Project of Law to be introduced in the Council of Government in Malta, in accordance with the declarations" made by the Pope, and Lord Salisbury writes, Feb. 14, 1890, that "Her Majesty's Government approves of Sir Lintorn Simmons's proceedings"), "even those solemnised according to a form prescribed by civil law."

(6) "To prevent the State from granting the public exercise of their own worship to persons immigrating into it."

(7) "Of requiring the State not to permit free expression of opinion."

(8) "To require the State not to leave every man free to profess his own religion."

(9) "To employ force."

(10) "The Pope has the right to annul State laws, treaties, constitutions, &c.; and to absolve from obedience thereto, as soon as they seem detrimental to the rights of the Church, or those of the clergy."

(11) "The Pope has the right to absolve from oaths and obedience to the persons and the laws of the princes whom he excommunicates."

(12) "He who kills one that is excommunicated is no murderer in a legal sense."

Finally, Leo XIII. in his Encyclical (Tablet, November 14, 1885) repudiated the idea of "equality," or that "each man should be allowed freely to think on whatever subject he pleases"; and he condemned any Government in which "everyone will be allowed to follow the religion he prefers." In a letter addressed to the Cardinal Vicar, March 25, 1879, he asserts "that he understands the liberty and dignity of the Roman Pontiff to signify—removing from Rome the means of practising and propagating whatever, in the opinion of the Romish Church, is heretical; and that, if he possessed the liberty he claims, he would employ it to close all Protestant schools and places of worship in Rome."—Times, April 11, 1879.

Farewell, therefore, to all civil and religious liberty, if Rome again has the ascendency.

No. 4. Concerning this essay I may just say that Bishop Wordsworth answered his question in the affirmative, and, though he challenged refutation, no member of the Church of Rome has ever attempted a reply, which implies that the Bishop's statements are unanswerable.

Yours faithfully, SIDNEY PIKE.

[We have received a number of other letters on this subject, but we regret our space will not allow of their insertion.—ED.]

WRITING TO MISSIONARIES.

DEAR SIR,—For a year past I have written almost every Sabbath a letter to some missionary in the foreign field, and I desire to bring the matter before your readers, that the scheme may be taken up and increased. During that time I have written forty letters to various parts of the world, where missionaries are labouring—to Jamaica, China, Fiji, Spain, Basutoland, Hayti, Canada, Italy, New Hebrides, Germany, France, Jerusalem, Natal, West Africa, Cape Colony, Brazil, India, Madagascar, Buenos Ayres, Japan, Persia, Portugal, Spain, and West Indian Islands. I have received nineteen answers to my letters, every one containing notes of thankfulness. During the same week as I write, and also the week I receive an answer, I make special mention in my prayers of those to whom I write and those who send me replies.

There are many who could write a few simple sympathising lines that would cheer lonely hearts that perhaps could not otherwise do much for the Master. There are also many earnest believers whose sympathies are confined to the special one or two heathen lands with which their Church has a connection. For my own part, I do not think I had ever much interest in, or even knew what missionary efforts were being put forth in such countries as Japan or Persia, until I saw them and their needs mentioned in THE CHRISTIAN. Then I wrote to workers there, and my interest in them has been awakened.—Yours very truly,

E. D. NICOL.

GOD'S DUMB CREATURES.

SIR,—May I make an earnest appeal in your columns to visitors to Keswick on behalf of the horses employed in their service? In the crowded season, especially at the end of this month, they are often sadly over-loaded and over-driven. Christians, grateful for the great privileges they enjoy at Keswick, are entreated to remember the brave and patient animals which minister to their comfort and convenience; to refuse conveyances already full, or drawn by lame or tired horses; to insist on walking up steep hills; and to help the work of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals in the Lake District.—Yours in the service of God's dumb creatures, (MISS) P. H. JOHNSTON.

The Beeches, Carlisle.

THE OUTPOURING OF THE SPIRIT.

DEAR SIR,—Will you kindly open your columns to enable your readers to obtain a correct understanding as to the use of the term "Outpouring," in so far we may be able to determine this from the Word of God. May the term be used in our own days, to express a revival in the Church of Christ, or an awakening among the heathen? or was the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, as promised in the Old Testament, so fulfilled on the day of Pentecost, as to preclude the further use of such an expression? It is true that the words "poured out" were used by Peter in Acts x. when the Gospel was preached to Cornelius and his friends; but it has been affirmed that although there was but one day of Pentecost, yet generically there were three, namely, on the Jews, in Acts ii.; on the mixed race of the Samaritans, in Acts viii.; and on the Gentiles, in Acts x.

On the other hand, are we warranted in concluding that the prophecies of Joel had their final fulfilment on the day of Pentecost, or may we not hope for a further fulfilment as expressed in the figure of the early and latter rain? Further, it is true that the Holy Spirit was poured out at Pentecost to dwell with and in men, and that we live in the dispensation of the Holy Spirit; but may we not say with reverence that the third Person in the Trinity is none the less omnipresent, that is to say, in heaven and on earth. It would be well if we could have a clear statement as to the propriety or impropriety of praying at the present time for an "outpouring of the Holy Spirit."

Yours, &c., NEMO.

BILLINGSGATE CHRISTIAN MISSION.—On Sunday evening, at the new hall of this Mission (opposite the Fish Market in Lower Thames-street), an eight days' special mission was opened by Mr. Henry Lakin. The mission is specially intended for the spiritual benefit of the men engaged in the great centre of the fish trade, and during this week meetings are being held daily at noon and at seven p.m.

AGED PILGRIMS' ASYLUM, HORNSEY RISE.—Rev. Dr. Doudney, of Bristol, preached the anniversary sermon of this beneficent institution, so pleasantly situated in North London. At the public meeting, Mr. James Inskip, of Bristol, presided, and the meeting was addressed by Rev. S. C. Stirling, E. Mitchell, W. Sindon, and others. The report of the secretary, Mr. W. Jackson, showed that the number of inmates at present is 124, all of whom are pensioners of the Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society. Pensions ranging from five to ten guineas per annum are given by the Society to 1224 persons in different parts of the country. Each pensioner at Hornsey Rise is allotted a separate room, which is entirely under their own management, and where they can spend the evening of their days in peace and comfort. They are all Christian people, prevented by the infirmities of age from any longer earning their sustenance, though still left as pilgrims to the "City which hath foundations, whose Builder and Maker is God." The work of the Society is entirely carried on by the aid of voluntary subscriptions.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, JULY 20.—Psalm LXXII.

CRITICS insist that for in the inscription should be of, and that therefore this glorious Messianic Psalm was composed by Solomon. A conclusion which is not contradicted by ver. 20, which was evidently appended (with the Doxology) by those who divided the Psalter into books, the second of which closes with this glowing description of the Lord's Anointed and his reign. Behold the kingdom of heaven which is already set up, and shall come yet more and more.

1. This reminds us of 1 Kings iii. 9-28. In all judging and advising we need to catch sight of that which is in God's mind, and to reproduce it. This is what the Holy Spirit did for our Lord, and will do for us (Isa. xi. 2, 3, 4). How instantly this petition was answered (see the next verse).

3. Peace as the result of righteousness (Isa. xxxii. 17; Heb. vii. 2). It was, and still is, common in the East to announce great events from the tops of the mountains (Isa. xl. 9).

4, 5. Compassion for the poor makes the throne endure. But how infinitely true this is of our Lord, to whom so many of these expressions must apply (Rev. v. 9).

6. The mown grass is that which is shorn. On the shorn blades, suffering still from the scythe, that gentle rain descends which heals and revives, emblem of the blessed work of the Holy Spirit.

7. "Till the moon be no more" (R.V.)

8. The river Euphrates (Exod. xxiii. 31; Deut. xi. 24).

10. Tarshish, on the far West, by the Straits of Gibraltar; Sheba and Seba, nations in South Arabia famed for their wealth. "The most uncivilised, the most distant, the most opulent shall pay homage to Christ.

11. Kings of wealth, and thought, and music, and art, have already acknowledged Him, and shall (Rev. xix. 16).

12. Our needs are arguments and reasons with Christ.

15. "Men shall pray for Him continually, and they shall bless Him all the day long" (R.V.). "We pray for Christ," says Augustine, "when we pray for the Church of Christ; because it is his body." We pray for Him when we say, "Thy kingdom come." Though Christ is King of the poor, He shall have abundance of gold.

16. Though there be but a handful, yet such shall be the marvellous increase that the slopes of the mountains shall wave with corn as Lebanon with cedars. As there is abundant produce in the country, there shall be vast populations in the city, numerous as blades of grass.

17. "His name shall have issue"; it shall reproduce itself (R.V. marg.). The Gospel of the name of Jesus begets children in every nation enlightened by the sun. Well for us if we claim those blessings which are in Him for us (Eph. i. 3).

18-20. This doxology reminds us of Psa. xli. 14, where the first book is closed. It is a sublime aspiration, in which we, who see the beginnings of this beneficent reign, may well unite.

MONDAY, JULY 21.—Psalm LXXIII.

This and the ten following Psalms are ascribed to the family of Asaph, the eminent singer (2 Chron. xxix. 30). The author describes his conflict with a strong temptation to envy the wicked. The 37th and 73rd discuss this problem, which was the great stumbling-block of the saints of old.

We may divide the Psalm thus: How he came into the temptation (1-14), how he got out of it (15-20), how he profited by it (21-28).

1. This is the great principle on which he stands, as on a slab of granite. "Only good is God." Whatever appearances there may be to the contrary, there is no doubt as to his perfect beneficence. The Israel is not after the flesh, but after the spirit (John i. 47). If you are washed in the blood of Christ, believe that every wind which blows on your life comes from the quarter of God's love.

2. Almost, but not altogether.

4. This might be rendered, "no pangs up to their death," or it may mean, that their death is easier than that of the godly. Their life flows on in a softly flowing current. "Men may die like lambs, and yet have their place hereafter with the goats."

6-9. What a picture! Their garb and chain, their eyes and speech, the imaginations of their evil heart overflowing (7, R.V.). They blaspheme God in heaven, and wander through the earth in search of garbage.

10, 11. Some think that these verses indicate that the perplexity of the saints, coupled with the baleful influence of the wicked, make the Lord's people apostatise; others, that we are here taught the anguish caused them by the tyranny of the proud oppressor.

13. "Surely godliness does not profit. I have lived up to all I knew to be right, keeping my conscience void of offence, and yet plagues and chastisement have been my daily lot. Is there a God, or is He other than good, that He so deals with his most faithful servants?" Plagued, contrast ver. 5.

15. It seems treacherous to breathe such thoughts about God, and yet it is an infinite pain to doubt God's perfect integrity. Ah, the agony of a suspicion that God should not be perfectly wise and good.

17. Let us view things from God's standpoint, and take in the whole course of his providence, weighing their future retribution with their present estate (Jas. v. 11).

20. "The awaking of God is a metaphor for his ending a period of probation or indulgence by an act of judgment," and here it would seem that death, which separates a man from his prosperity, is specially referred to.

21, 22. When a man is nearest God, he is most full of self-loathing. God forgives him, but he cannot forgive himself.

23—28. In spite of all the follies and sins of the past and present, we may have God's constant presence, and in Him have all and more than all that the Godless find in their wealth. God in heaven, God in the pathway of daily life, God in the heart, this is blessedness.

TUESDAY, JULY 22.—Psalm LXXIV.

This Psalm was composed when the Chaldeans destroyed the temple and city (compare ver. 8 with Jer. lii. 13-17). The Psalmist describes his people's miseries (1-11); recounts the reasons why they should still trust in God (12-17); and concludes with urgent petitions for help (18-23).

3. "Lift up thy feet," i.e., come not slowly, but quickly, to restore ruins which otherwise must be perpetual.

4. The shout of the foe breaks in on the holy calm of congregations gathered for solemn worship, and heathen standards wave over the buildings consecrated to God.

5. "They seemed as men that lifted up axes upon a thicket of trees" (R.V.)

8. As early as Samuel's time there were meetings on fixed days for worship (1 Sam. ix. 12, x. 5). And these were probably maintained by the prophets, and anticipated the synagogues of later times.

13, 14. These monsters stand here for the Egyptian hosts.

15. The Chaldaic adds to the Jordan, the Arnon and Jabbok (Num. xxi. 13).

16, 17. Our God is the God of nature. What can He not do? The night may be overshadowing your life, but it is as much his as the day; and there are treasures in darkness.

18. It is lovely to feel that God's glory and our deliverance are identical (ver. 22).

19. What an exquisite similitude for the Church in its simplicity, weakness, and defencelessness.

20. There is no stronger plea with God than this, for the covenant is ordered in all things and sure.

This Psalm may be recited by the saints in all times of the Church's depression.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 23.—Psalm LXXV.

It is fitting that the wail of the previous Psalm should break forth into the glad thanksgivings of this. The title resembles that of lvii., Destroy not: and probably this triumphal ode was prepared to celebrate a deliverance of which faith was sure. Reference is probably made to Sennacherib's invasion in the time of Hezekiah (Ps. xlvi., lxxvi.). The north is therefore omitted, as one of the quarters from which help would come (6); it was thence that the invader came.

1. The believing soul gives thanks before the blessing of deliverance has come to hand. Its ear is quick to detect the pibroch of the relieving force, though the cannonade of the foe is fiercer than ever.

2. This is the reply of Jehovah, while his people are yet speaking (Isa. lxv. 24). "When I shall find the set time," i.e., when the set time has come.

3. What a comfort it is to feel that amid the chaos and anarchy which sweep the surface, God is holding fast the solid foundations, on which we may build without fear.

4. The Psalmist here becomes the speaker. The horn is the strength of certain beasts, and is the symbol of the power of the ungodly (Deut. xxxiii. 17; 1 Sam. ii. 1-10; Dan. vii. 7). The word occurs frequently in this Psalm.

6. Promotion stands for deliverance—the lifting up of God's help.

8. God's judgments stupefy by their suddenness and terror (Rev. xvi. 19).

10. The prophets are sometimes said to do things in which God is evidently the Agent (Jer. i. 10). This is emphatically the Psalm of the Second Advent.

THURSDAY, JULY 24.—Psalm LXXVI.

If the former Psalm anticipated Sennacherib's overthrow, this was written after it (3 and Isa. xxxvii.).

2. Salem was the ancient name of Jerusalem, and signifies peace. God can only dwell where there is peace (Acts ii. 1). The dwelling-place of God is among his people.

3. God snaps the proudest instruments of war.

4. The world-kingdoms are compared to mountains covered with spoils, but the city of God is fairer than the best.

5, 6. God did but speak a word, and the warriors of the king of Assyria slept their last sleep. The poet seems walking through the camp on the morning after the dread catastrophe.

> The eyes of the sleepers waxed deadly and chill,
> And their hearts but once heaved, and for ever were still

9. God sometimes seems to sit and allow matters to take their course, but He is waiting for the set moment to interpose; and when He arises, as He ever will, on the behalf of his people, the earth is still, as nature before a thunderstorm.

10. What is meant in malice is changed to blessing. And there is a limit beyond which the rage of his enemies cannot pass (Job i. 12; 1 Cor. x. 13).

11. Vow and pay (2 Chron. xxxii. 22, 23).

12. "Cut off" as a vinedresser would cut off shoots. The breath, i.e., the life of princes (Rev. xiv. 18, 19). How terrible must be the wrath of the Lamb, to those who have defied and resisted his love.

FRIDAY, JULY 25.—Psalm LXXVII.

This Psalm is still ascribed to Asaph, but it is after the manner of Jeduthun (inscription, R.V.). There are resemblances to it in Hab. iii., so it must have been composed before the end of Josiah's reign, in which Habakkuk lived. The carrying away of the ten tribes and the imminent captivity of Judah may have furnished the occasion of this sad lament.

We may divide at the Selahs.

1-3. A description of his anguish.—How often do we need the day of trouble to make us seek the Lord. "My sore" is better rendered, "my hand was stretched out" (R.V.). This refusal of comfort recalls Gen. xxxvii. 35 and Jer. xxxi. 15. What excessive grief is here!

4-9. A contrast between past and present.—In this scarcity of comfort, Trapp says that the Psalmist was glad to live upon his old stores, as bees in winter. Particularly he remembered his song in the night, which is equivalent to that "glory in tribulation" of which the New Testament is full (Job. xxxv. 10). It is wholesome to compare the present with the past, if we are conscious of any backsliding, that we may repent; and that we may be led again to the feet of Christ.

After long days of gloom and anguish have darkened the soul, it begins to fear lest it may never emerge from the darksome forest into the open. Melancholy and depression are apt at putting questions, but faith has ever an answer ready.

"Will the Lord cast off?" No (Rom. xi. 1).

"Will He be favourable no more?" He will (Lam. iii. 32).

"Is his mercy clean gone for ever?" No (Psa. ciii. 17).

"Does his promise fail?" No (Heb. vi. 18).

"Has God forgotten to be gracious?" No (Exod. xxxiv. 6).

"Has He in anger shut up his mercies?" No (Lam. iii. 23).

10-15. Faith restored by memory.—The years of God's past love are not likely to be all in vain. Has He loved from eternity, and will He forsake or forget in time? God's way is in the sanctuary, i.e., it is holy (13); but it is in the sea, i.e., it is full of mystery (19). "Some providences, like Hebrew letters, must be read backwards."

16-20. A poetical account of the passage of the Red Sea.—The thunderstorm here described is almost implied in Exod. xiv. 24. God does as He will, but no difficulties are obstacles to Him, and, what He has done, He can do. "Great was the power of these two men, but neither was the shepherd of the sheep, each was a servant of the Great and Good Shepherd, who made use of their hands."

SATURDAY, JULY 26.—Psalm LXXVIII.

This Psalm is specially addressed to the children of Ephraim, as representing the northern kingdom of Israel, and is intended to show the cause of their rejection, and to warn them against incurring further judgments. It may date from 2 Chron. xiii. Is not Asaph a type of our Lord, who is ever thus pleading with his Church?

Divide thus: A call for attention (1-8); the story of Israel's many rebellious and providential deliverances in the wilderness (9-39); the narrative is continued to their settlement in the land of Canaan (40-55); the reason for and the fact of the transference of leadership from Ephraim to Judah (56-72).

9. During the time of Ephraim's headship, the nation failed at the gates of Canaan to go forward to take the land.

12. Zoan, or Tanis, was a very ancient city on the Nile, capital of a district, here called a field.

20. What faithless hearts are ours! God has filled heaven and earth with proofs of his love, and yet we distrust Him.

21, 22. Nothing so grieves and angers God as unbelief.

33. An epitome of the forty years' wanderings.

43-51. Several additional descriptive touches are here given to the account of the plagues.

49. Not evil spirits, but agents of suffering and pain.

50. "He made a path for his anger," i.e., He did not restrain it.

61. 1 Sam. iv. 1.

66. He smote his enemies backward.

72. Sincerity of purpose and tact in handling men are essential to a true ruler and guide.

Obituary.

REV. T. J. R. TEMPLE.

Rev. Thomas James Reece Temple, for thirty-four years pastor of Sydney-street Congregational Chapel, Bethnal Green, fell asleep in Jesus at his residence, 41, Approach-road, Victoria Park, in his sixty-ninth year, after six weeks' illness.

GENERAL CLINTON B. FISKE.

This well-known Prohibitionist died last week from the effects of an attack of influenza. General Fisk was a conspicuous Prohibitionist, and in 1886 was a candidate of the Prohibitionist party for the Governorship of the State of New Jersey. In 1888 he was a candidate, put forward by the same party, for the presidency of the United States.

GENERAL KIRBY.

St. Servan has sustained a grievous loss in the sudden removal of Lieut.-General Kirby, late 94th Regiment, and formerly Adjutant-General of Bombay. Leaving home on the afternoon of June 28, in his usual health and spirits, he went to the post-office, posted his letters, and, while putting some stamps into his purse, fell, and with one sigh passed away. His ministry and prayers at the bedside of the sick, his large loving heart of sympathy with all who were in sorrow of mind, body, or estate, his loving counsel to the erring, his open-handed liberality and readiness to help in every good work, have endeared him to all, and won the respect of the whole community. The French, as well as the English, feel that a great and good man, and a true and tried friend, has been taken away from their midst. He was secretary and treasurer of the St. Malo and St. Servan Sailors' Rest, of which he was the most liberal supporter. He also has for many years hired a "Salle des Conférences" in St. Malo, where the Gospel has been faithfully preached, and where many have been brought to Christ.

Keswick.—On Monday afternoon, July 21, before the opening of the Convention, a Y.W.C.A. meeting will be held in the Drill Hall from 4.30 to 6 p.m., convened chiefly for prayer. The meeting will be open to all ladies interested in work amongst young women.

Lost and Found—Luke xv. 1-10.

Golden Text: Verse 10.

"Publicans," by reason of their occupation as tax-gatherers for the Romans, were despised and cast off by the religion of their day. They were associated with "sinners"—a term which describes the outwardly vicious. These two classes were the non-church-going people. Religion had cast off them; and they in return had cast off religion. Yet, it was these who responded to the Saviour's call (xiv. 35). Such teaching as his suited them; so they "drew near," not out of mere curiosity to see, but with a heart-hunger after the word of life—"to hear" (1). In such spirit let every scholar come to his class.

The murmuring of the Scribes and Pharisees revealed their true character. They totally misunderstood the God whom they were supposed to serve. Their complaint, "This man receiveth sinners," implied a charge against Jesus of being in secret sympathy with sin. They had no other way of explaining his familiarity with those whom they despised. Yet, in complaining, they unconsciously preached the Gospel. What more blessed and encouraging truth can there be than that which his enemies urged against Him? Though intended for his reproach and dishonour, He accepts it as a crown of glory; and, instead of denying it, He justifies and enforces it by the parables that follow.

The lost sheep (4-7).—"What man of you"—Jesus again makes their own conduct contradict their murmuring. For a sheep they would do what they blame Him for doing on behalf of men! "The ninety and nine," like the nine pieces of silver (8), and the elder son (25), represent the self-righteous Pharisees. They are called "just persons, needing no repentance" (7), not because they are such to Jesus, but because they deem themselves such. Even allowing them to be such, they are still "in the wilderness" (4), i.e., "uncultivated plains, pasturage, in opposition to tilled fields."—Godet. They remained where the one sheep had strayed from, but were not at "home" (6). Like the thousands to-day who never give up outward religious worship, but are not saved. The first step in their salvation would be the knowledge of their sin and their actual need of repentance. It is not over them, but over the restored lost one (7), that the Shepherd rejoices. Self-satisfied though they are, their condition is even more alarming than that of the sinners whom they despise.

The condition of every sinner is fitly represented by the stray sheep (Isa. liii. 6). How defenceless it is! It is a prey to every kind of enemy. The wolf (John x. 12), the lion and the bear (1 Sam. xvii. 34) may devour it. A sheep is never safe away from the shepherd's care. Neither is the sinner safe when not committed to God. His enemies are Satan, evil companions, false friends, and sinful and fascinating pleasures. How helpless too!—Not only without defence against powerful foes, but utterly unable to find its way home. A sheep has folly enough to stray, but never wisdom enough to return. If it is to get back, it must be brought back. Apply the lesson—a wandering sinner cannot save himself by good resolutions, prayers, or repentance. His only Saviour is—

The Shepherd.—Who is this? (Ps. xxiii.; Ezek. xxxiv.; John x.). What kind of shepherd is Jesus? Good (John x. 11); Great (Heb. xiii. 20); Chief (1 Pet. v. 4). Note his compassion.—He goes "after the lost." He pities those who have no pity for themselves, because He better knows their danger. His perseverance.—"Until." He spares no pains, and labour, and effort. How much his search costs Him no one can tell; but He does not give it up. His tenderness.—Having found, He does not drive us home, nor merely point us the way; but carries us. The way to be saved, therefore, is not to make great effort, but to cease from self-effort, and let Him take us into his arms. His power.—Is there not security "on his shoulders" (5)? See how his knowledge, his love, and his might, are all occupied in our salvation.

The joy over the salvation of the lost one (6-7) is too great for the Shepherd alone. Others must share it with Him. How nearly heaven is related to earth! With what interest the work of Christ among men is observed up yonder! This is a severe and condemning rebuke to the Pharisees. They neither give the joy their own salvation, nor are they capable of sharing it with the Lord. They murmu at that which makes heaven rejoice.

The lost coin (8-10).—It was the misery of the lost sheep which moved the shepherd's compassion; it is the value of the coin that leads the woman to seek so diligently. The coin itself was worth about eightpence. To a woman whose whole wealth consisted of ten such coins, the loss of only one was serious. There is a worth about every human soul, even though it be lost in sin. It is not only God's pitying love, but his sense of our value that prompts Him to save. How different his estimate from that of the Pharisees!

The search is carefully described. Is not the lighted candle the Word of God? the sweeping the house, the convicting power of the Law? the diligent search, the patience and perseverance of Divine grace? Among the mire and filth of sin, God seeks and finds some of his brightest jewels. Matthew, from among the publicans; Magdalene, from the demon-possessed; Saul, from the persecutors. But they need seeking diligently. A lady, who had dropped into the mud a precious ring, tried to recover it by using the point of her parasol, but in vain. Jesus saves sinners by coming down amongst them.

The joy (9, 10) of the woman in her humble home is a picture of the joy among the angels. God rejoices before the angels, and they rejoice with Him.

LESSONS.

"All souls are mine."—The Shepherd said "my sheep; the woman spoke of the piece "which I had lost." God has a proprietorship over those who are still in sin. They belong to Him who made them, who preserves them, and who ransomed them.

Salvation is by Jesus alone.—The longer the sheep is away, the worse its condition. The longer the coin is lost, the more it becomes covered with dirt. Neither can restore itself. If Jesus did not seek and save us, we could not be saved at all.

It is the lost whom Jesus saves.—Even in our Sunday-schools there are those represented by the ninety and nine who do not know their need of salvation. Who have strayed from Him? "All" (Isa. liii. 6). Confess your lost condition. He saves such, though others despise them.

The joy of salvation.—It is experienced both in heaven and on earth. God and the holy angels share it; the restored sinner finds it; and the servants of God know it too.

Appeals.

Hoppickers' Mission.—Six large tents were erected last year for the preaching of the Gospel, &c., and well filled. We want to erect the same number this year or more. The season will soon be on us, and we are not ready. Many old friends have died during the past year. There never was a greater need. Will friends remember us at once? S. Chinn.

Alton, Hants.

"Children's Friend" Mission Holiday Home, near Farnborough, Hants.—During the summer we have been enabled to keep the Home full of poor London children, who have received great benefit. Our funds are gone, but we have still a great number to go. Help will be thankfully received by the Superintendent, George Fuller, Brunswick Hall, Poplar, E. Bedding would also be thankfully received.

Open-Air Mission.—Just now this Mission is exceptionally tried by a diminished income. That it is doing a work sorely needed, and doing it well, there can be no doubt, and it ought to be liberally sustained. Its agents laboured last year at 620 races, fairs, and other special gatherings of the people, at which they gave 634,070 tracts and Gospel books. Most of these gatherings would have been unvisited but for this Mission; therefore it has a strong claim for support on Christians in the provinces, as well as in London. In the midst of all its summer work it should not lack funds. The treasurer is Lord Kinnaird, 1 Pall Mall East, S.W., and the secretary, Mr. Gawin Kirkham, 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, W.C.

The Highway and Hedgerow Mission.—Dear Sir,—May I appeal through your columns for £200 to be devoted to carrying on the important work of the Sailors' Institute at Southwick-by-Sea. Captain Moorhouse desires to place this building in the hands of local trustees, but is unable to do so until this sum is raised. Subscriptions to Captain Moorhouse, Thorpe, Saxmundham, Suffolk. It is further proposed to raise a guarantee fund of £350 per annum in order that Captain and Mrs. Moorhouse may be set entirely free to carry on their successful Gospel work in gipsy vans and travelling hall, and thus that the burden and strain of collecting may be spared him. Any sums for this purpose will be received by him, or by Mr. Gawin Kirkham, 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, W.C. The report for 1889 can be had on application.—Colonel J. F. Morton, Superintendent, Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, N.

Midnight Meeting Movement.—The Committee contemplate opening local reception-rooms in various parts of the Metropolis.

THE MISSIONS OF PALESTINE.

I HAVE just finished the canvass of Palestine for the "Encyclopædia of Missionary Work," and with a much-worn body and much-quickened soul would encourage your readers with a brief story of my travels. Certainly, if I were not a missionary myself (independent and self-sustaining), I would contribute more liberally and more fearlessly than ever before to the cause. The trip from which I have just returned was one of great hardship, and not a little peril. The time for travel had gone by, and the season of heat and thirst, and swarms of noisome insects, and skulking robbers, and bands of roving Bedouins, was on. But thanks to Him who saved from all. The Palestine field is almost monopolised by the English missionaries of the Church Missionary Society, and the Society for the Promotion of Female Education in the East. And, American as I am, I rejoice equally with them in their noble work and marked success. I wish your Islam-partnership Canon could reside here for a time, and travel among the people with whom the missions have to do, and witness how steadily and surely their mines are being driven under what has been timidly called the impregnable works of the false prophet.

The degenerate "Christianity" of this land has been the great hindrance to true Christian progress, as its noisy pomp and gaudy show have ever attracted the eyes of the Moslem inquirer for truth, only to disgust him at its gross immoralities and fooleries. But the many Protestant missions and out-stations, with their gentle kindnesses towards the poor and sick and helpless, illustrating the principles of the religion they teach, are winning the recipients and spectators, and enabling a fairer and more sincere comparison of the two systems; while the many schools are sending out thousands of little torches to glimmer and shine in the moral darkness of the villages, and everywhere agitate the growing question, "What is the matter with our religion, that it affords us no neat and comfortable schoolhouses and kindly hospitality?"

I strongly believe that the opposition of the Government and the obstacles thrown in the way form an important element in the means by which God is working the great change here. The defenders of slavery in America, by their strenuous efforts and unjust measures for its protection, did very much for the abolition of the system. Now, the liquor men of America, by their persistent manipulation of both the old political parties for the defence of their vile craft, are madly and blindly doing their large part for the thorough national prohibition that will soon be the rule of the land. And just so, the Turkish Government, by every little blow struck at missionary interests, every obstacle thrown in their way, is working unwittingly in the interests of God's great plan for the furtherance of the Christian cause, by stirring up inquiries as to "Why cannot our religion cope with Christianity?" And, when such questions are so frequently asked, the people look round for the answers—and find them. Many of the more intelligent Mohammedans are honestly and earnestly considering such matters, while free-minded, progressive ones are expressing views in favour of a free contest and the survival of the fittest. It is wonderful how these Protestant missionaries have ingratiated themselves into the minds and hearts of the people that they have been able to reach, and how decidedly those people denounce the occasional hindrances thrown in the way by petty, thieving officers under the guise of "Government."

As a rule, and an almost invariable one, the masses have never come in contact with the worse classes of the West, and, from their experiences with the missionaries, suppose that all Franks and Americans (whom they class together as "howadji") are almost angelic; and are ready to show them the greatest regard, and trust them to almost any extent.

At a village in the mountains of Galilee, a native woman who had two little girls in the Sisters' school, at Nazareth, approached me while at lunch at the village spring, with the unconditional offer of her beautiful boy of eight years, to be taken with me to America. Both appeared to regard me as "infallible," and the child was more than willing to go, so confidential was his little heart made by their acquaintance with the missionaries. Overpowered by his artless beauty, and open, innocent air, I accepted the gift, and carried the little treasure upon my horse behind me the three days' journey to Jerusalem, and put him into Zion School. These women are by no means careless of their children. Upon the contrary, they are remarkably affectionate toward them, keeping them well shod and clothed, and often going barefoot and almost naked themselves. The ceremonies of the "giving away"—both the part of the child and his mother—constituted a little play of rarest impressiveness and beauty, and I can never forget the obligations that it laid upon me as the new "Papa," which was one of the very few English words used by that little tongue. I wish I had the ability and confidence to write up the whole beautiful affair for your readers.

Jerusalem is the centre of battle, at which the forces meet with most unyielding stubbornness. Quite a number of the noble workers have gone to England for a short rest and to regain lost health. My only personal acquaintance among such is Mr. D. C. Joseph, of the Evangelical Mission to Israel, who left here some two months ago sadly shattered. I hope that in the kindly dealings of the Master his restoration and return may soon gratify the many oft-inquiring friends among his people, to whom he appears so devoted.

T. J. ALLEY.

Jerusalem, June 25.

NEATH, SOUTH WALES.—Miss Jackson has concluded a fourteen days' mission at the Gospel Hall. Much blessing has been experienced, and souls brought out of darkness into light.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on the following:—A three weeks' tent mission at Burton, commencing on Sunday, July 20, by Messrs. Denman and Sage, of the Evangelisation Society.——Special services on July 20 and 21, by Mr. Opie Rodway, in the Baptist Chapel, Blockley. ——PRAISE: For great blessing at the "Hall-by-the-Sea," Margate, on Sunday evening, July 13.

BURSLEM "WAKES."—Mr. Brown, of the London City Mission, held evangelistic services at Burslem, in the Potteries, for four days, amongst the Show people and others who attend the "Wakes." This was his tenth annual visit. During the four days he conducted six open-air meetings, and one indoor service, visiting nearly all the shows and travellers, giving them tracts, &c.

STRANGERS' RESTS.—DEAR SIR,—We are issuing a revised list of Strangers' Rests, Bethels, and Sailors' Homes, all over the world, for distribution among our sailors, and shall be very glad to receive at once the names and addresses of any such places which have been newly opened during the past two years, so that they may be added to the new list, which we are anxious to publish as soon as possible.—Yours faithfully,

J. THEODORE ISAAC, Hon. Sec.

Strangers' Rest, 163, St. George's-street, Ratcliff-highway, London. E.

EBBW VALE.—A successful united mission has been conducted by Mr. Chas. Inglis. The marquee in which the meetings were held has been crowded nightly, and on Sundays hundreds were unable to gain admission. A pleasing feature has been that more than two-thirds of those attending the mission were men from the coal-pits and the iron-works. The after meetings held in one of the neighbouring churches were very largely attended by those who were anxious, and we believe nearly all who entered the inquiry room left rejoicing in a knowledge of sins forgiven. The afternoon Bible meetings were greatly appreciated by Christians, and many thank God for the help they have received.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

In connection with the Church Missionary Society, a special ordination service is to be held at St. Augustine's Church, Highbury New Park, on Friday, July 25, at 10.30 a.m., when a missionary proceeding to North India, will be ordained by the Bishop of Bedford. The sermon will be preached by Archdeacon Sinclair.

At a meeting held at Windsor under the presidency of the Bishop of Marlborough, it was resolved that a Church League should be formed to move the nation to take up the question of the dwellings of the poor, and the Primate will be requested to give it his sanction and counsel. Rev. Arthur Robins, rector of Holy Trinity, Windsor, was appointed secretary.

A Sunday evening service for "men only" has become a monthly institution at St. Luke's, Liverpool. At the service on Sunday week, the vicar, Rev. T. J. Madden, spoke on "Evil Spirits," and at the conclusion of his sermon the Bishop of Liverpool addressed the men. Dr. Ryle took for his subject "Be good, get good, do good," and made a stirring appeal to the men to take their stand on the side of God, and to live good, manly, Christian lives.

A special service in connection with the Liverpool Diocesan Lay Readers' Association was held in St. Saviour's, Everton, on Monday, last week. The Bishop of Liverpool preached from Num. xi. 29: "Would God all his people were prophets, and that the Lord would put his Spirit upon them." In the course of his remarks, Dr. Ryle dwelt at length upon the importance of laymen doing their part in the evangelisation of the masses, and expressed his gratitude that in the diocese of Liverpool many were becoming alive to this duty.

CONGREGATIONAL.

"Gipsy" Smith, of Manchester, has been holding services at Winchmore-hill, N. (Rev. J. Jermyn, pastor), in connection with the anniversary of the Sunday-school. There were very full attendances.

Rev. Arthur Hall, of Craven Chapel, Regent-street, has accepted an invitation to the pastorate of Mount Pleasant Congregational Church, Hastings, lately vacated by Rev. William Bolton, and he proposes to enter upon his duties on Sunday, August 17.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. John McNeill preached at Regent-square Church on Sunday, and started on Monday for his holiday, the first portion of which he is spending in Ireland.

The induction of Rev. John Skinner, late of Kelso, to the professorial chair in the Presbyterian College, London, will take place in Regent-square Church on the afternoon of October 10.

At a future meeting of the London Presbytery (North) Rev. R. M. Thornton intends to move that a committee be appointed to arrange for a foreign missionary meeting in connection with the English Presbyterian Church, to be held in Exeter Hall each year during the May meetings, and to stir up missionary zeal in the congregations of the Presbytery.

METHODIST.

A series of Sunday afternoon meetings for men have been organised at Saxe-Coburg-street Church, Leicester, by Mr. J. T. Walters. The meetings have been attended by a thorough working-class audience.

News has reached England of the death of Rev. John Badcock, who, some thirty-three years ago, went out from Shotley Bridge as a missionary to the West Indies. At the time of his decease he was the chairman of the St. Kitts Wesleyan district.

Southwark Wesleyan Chapel has been renovated, and better adapted for the aggressive evangelistic work of which it is now the centre. At the re-opening meeting a large company of friends gathered to encourage Rev. J. H. Hopkins in his efforts to establish a vigorous mission in this district. The chapel, an old building, with a history of some eighty years, had become almost deserted, but since it has been incorporated in the London Mission, and placed in charge of Mr. Hopkins, the attendance has largely increased, and the membership has risen to 200.

BAPTIST.

The pulpit at Providence Chapel, Oakham, was occupied on Sunday week by Rev. William Lush, who recently seceded from the Church of England. Mr. Lush was ordained priest in 1858, and was vicar of Snargate and Snave, Kent, from 1881 until about three months ago.

Rev. F. C. Spurr will close his ministry at "Longcross" Baptist Chapel, Cardiff, on Sunday next, July 20. After a holiday on the Continent he will hold a series of "missions" (in connection with the Baptist Forward Movement) in London, commencing Sunday, September 14. His new address will be 35, Ladywell-park, Lewisham, S.E.

A most interesting service was held on Sunday afternoon, June 29, at Lake-road Chapel, Portsmouth, when seven young people, between the ages of twelve and fifteen, publicly declared their faith in Christ by being baptized. They had previously been carefully examined as to their belief and ground of assurance. Most of the scholars of the parent and two branch Sunday-schools, and a large number of adults were present. The pastor, Rev. Charles Joseph, administered the ordinance.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

Rev. T. T. Matthews, who is visiting his native land on furlough after twenty years' service in Madagascar, in connection with the London Missionary Society, preached in St. George's-road Church, Glasgow, on Sunday week, and gave an interesting account of the progress of Christianity in the island. He affirmed that the outlook for the country is very hopeful, the only danger being that it may be hindered by outside interference.

Reporting to Inverness Presbytery of his visit to the Free Church Assembly, Rev. Murdo Mackenzie declared that the Assembly just past was the most unsatisfactory he had ever attended. He could not but regret that the Church in which he had been brought up was now on the "Down Grade." By the decision of the last Assembly, there were certain doctrines made open doctrines in their Church, which a few years ago would not have been tolerated for a moment. Mr. Mackenzie added, however, that notwithstanding this he believed that no Church in the land stood in a better position than the Free Church. It was because there was life in her that they were having so many controversial subjects discussed.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Wesleyans of the Belfast district have sent an evangelist to labour in the popular watering-place of Bangor, co. Down.

A Sunday School Union, embracing eight schools and about 100 teachers and 1000 scholars, has been formed under hopeful auspices at Portadown.

A couple of young men have been subjected to considerable persecution by Romanists in Donegal, where they had been conducting an evangelistic mission for two or three weeks.

Revs. Dr. John Hemphill, of Philadelphia, and John Hall, of New York, are at present in Ireland as delegates to the General Assembly now meeting in Belfast. Dr. Hemphill is one of the most eloquent preachers in America; last year his congregation raised a sum of 40,000 dollars for religious and benevolent purposes.

The Irish Baptist Home Mission have resumed tent work for the summer. There are two tents pitched at present, one at Castlewellan, co. Down, the other at Coolehill, co. Derry. Very encouraging reports have been received concerning the work. Large congregations assemble to hear the word of life plainly and faithfully proclaimed, with blessed results to the souls of many sinners being saved and the Lord's people revived.

Rev. Wm. Park, the popular minister of Rosemary-street Church, Belfast, was unanimously chosen Moderator of the Presbyterian Assembly for the current year. Mr. Park is probably the youngest minister ever selected to fill the chair of the General Assembly, and is well known even outside the bounds of his own denomination as an able, earnest evangelical minister of the Gospel of Christ. The various reports presented were on the whole very encouraging, and the addresses delivered were of a high spiritual tone and order.

THE NATIONAL BAND OF HOPE BAZAAR, at Exeter Hall, continued open all last week, and until Monday evening. The amount realised was somewhat over £4100.

EMMANUEL CHURCH, MAIDA-HILL.—Mr. Henry Thorne lately conducted a mission in this parish. His Bible-readings were much appreciated. Although Mr. Thorne was in a poor state of health, he laboured with great energy; and we believe that real blessing has followed his clear and earnest setting forth of the way of life. Mr. W. H. Bradlaugh took his place on three days, when Mr. Thorne was unequal to appearing in public, and spoke with power. We trust Mr. Thorne will soon, by God's means, be entirely restored to health.

Christian Police Association.—A correspondent writes:—"Workers are greatly needed in connection with the work of the Association in Warwickshire, Northamptonshire, Yorkshire (especially north and east), all the counties in North Wales, parts of Lancashire, parts of Durham and Northumberland. Monmouthshire, Cambridgeshire, Norfolk, Oxfordshire, Bucks, several counties in Scotland and Ireland, and several districts in London. For further particulars apply to Miss C. Gurney, Police Institute, Adam-street, Strand, London.

Christian Evidence Society.—Addresses in connection with this Society are given at the following open-air stations on Sundays during July:—Battersea Park Gates, 11.15 a.m.; Camberwell (Station-road), 11.30; Cambridge-road, 11.30; Clerkenwell-green, 11.30; Edmonton, 6.30 p.m.; Finsbury Park (Band-street), 3.15; Hyde Park (Marble Arch), 11.15, 3, and (Wed.) 7.30; Kingsland-green, 11.15; Midland Arches, 11.15; Mile End Waste, 11.15; Old Pimlico Pier, 11.30; Plaistow-green, 6.30; Regent's Park (Gloucester-gate), 3.; Southgate (New), 11.15; Southgate (Old), 7; Victoria Park (Fountain), 3; Wood Green, 7; Whitechapel Church (Outdoor Pulpit), Mon., 8.

PULVERMACHER'S

WORLD-FAMED

GALVANIC BELTS,

FOR the CURE of NERVOUS DISEASES,

HAVE RECEIVED TESTIMONIALS from over FIFTY MEMBERS of the ROYAL COLLEGE of PHYSICIANS of LONDON, including THREE PHYSICIANS to

HER MAJESTY the QUEEN.

RECENT TESTIMONIALS.

GALVANISM v. LOCAL WEAKNESS.

Liverpool, June 20, 1890.

Dear Sir,—You will be pleased to hear that I am regaining my health and vigour fast, and have lost all the pain in the back. Your treatment has indeed been to me the pearl of great price, and has succeeded in stopping the waste and decay from which I was suffering. I will answer any inquirer through you, and beg to remain,

Yours truly, J. F.

Messrs. Pulvermacher & Co., 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

Cross-street, Sudbury, Suffolk, June 19, 1890.

Dear Sir,—Since I purchased your Galvanic Belt my health has greatly improved, and I do not catch cold as I used to. I am also able to undertake extra duty without fatigue, and will testify by private letter to any inquirer.

Yours very truly, R. DAY.

Messrs. Pulvermacher & Co., 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. PARTIAL PARALYSIS.

Barton-on-Irwell, Lancashire, June 17, 1890.

Gentlemen,—Allow me to add my testimony to the great value of your Galvanic Bands. I was suffering from paralysis, the result of internal injury and spinal weakness, and you recommended me to have your Galvanic Combined Band, price 50s., which I purchased on the 19th March, at which time I could scarcely walk. I am thankful to say that your treatment has made a new man of me, and I am now as strong as I was before I was injured. All my friends compliment me on my improved appearance, and I beg to thank you for what your invention has done for me. If you publish this please do not use my full name and address, but you may refer any inquiries direct to me.—Yours very truly, H. RICHARD.

Messrs. J. L. Pulvermacher & Co., 194, Regent-st., W.

GALVANISM v. PAIN and SWELLING in the KNEE.

Chalford, near Stroud, Glos., June 14, 1890.

Dear Sir,—The Galvanic Belt I purchased from you in January last for swelling and pain in my knee has quite cured me. The swelling speedily disappeared, and I have now been free from pain for two months, and can walk quite as well as ever, for which I am truly thankful. — Yours respectfully, C. CHANDLER.

Mr. J. L. Pulvermacher, 194, Regent-street, London, W.

GALVANISM v. NERVOUS DEBILITY and EXHAUSTION.

Crossley-terrace, Hanson-lane, Halifax, June 13, 1890.

Dear Sir,—In reply to your inquiry, I am very glad to inform you that your Galvanic Belt and Combined Band have effected a complete cure in my case, for which I thank you very much. I was suffering from nervousness and great weakness.—Yours very truly, S. LUKE.

Mr. J. L. Pulvermacher, 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. RHEUMATISM.

Llan Festiniog, June 7, 1890.

Dear Sir,—I feel it difficult to properly value the great benefit I have received by wearing one of your Electric Belts for Rheumatism. It has proved a complete and permanent cure for rheumatics, as two years have now elapsed without my having the slightest attack.

Yours very truly, OWEN JONES.

Mr. J. L. Pulvermacher, 194, Regent-street, London, W.

GALVANISM v. NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

The distressing symptoms of NERVOUS EXHAUSTION, LOSS of MUSCULAR POWER, RHEUMATISM, SCIATICA, PARALYSIS, EPILEPSY, &c., are speedily removed by means of PULVERMACHER'S world-famed GALVANIC BELTS, which convey the electric current direct to the affected parts, gradually stimulating and strengthening all the nerves and muscles, and speedily arresting all symptoms of premature waste and decay.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

(THIRTY-THIRD SERIES.)

LETTER FROM A PATIENT WHOSE CASE APPEARED IN MY WEEKLY SERIES

(IN THE FIRST WEEK OF JUNE LAST).

Mrs. K. S. P., a widow lady and governess at Coventry, who was cured of phthisis (both lungs affected), and whose wonderful case was fully narrated in the week named, writing me Febuary 26th says:—

"I am very thankful to inform you that I have been very nicely all the winter and gaining strength. If ever I take a little cold I resort to a dose or two of the medicine, and am soon all right again. I believe it has been the means of saving my life." She also says:—

"You are at liberty to use my full name and address. I should be pleased, should anyone wish to see me personally, to give all the information I can. (Mrs.) K. S. PACKWOOD, 24, RUSSELL-STREET, COVENTRY.

LETTER FROM AN OLD PATIENT CURED OF CONSUMPTION.

Mr. GEO. GREGORY (who does not wish his address published, but permits me to refer to him) writing on behalf of a Consumptive friend says:—"I was formerly under your treatment, and I attribute my recovery from an undoubted case of Consumption entirely to your advice and medicine, and I take every opportunity of speaking highly thereof."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

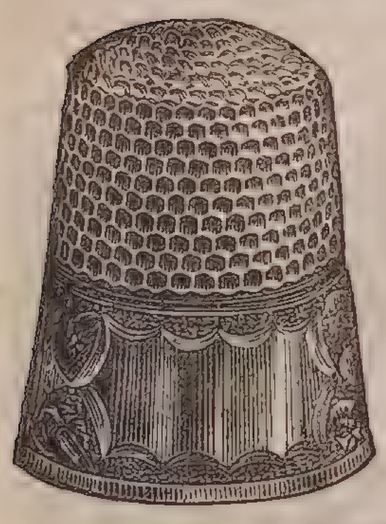
The "DORCAS" THIMBLE.



(Horner's Patent.)

STERLING SILVER.

The Queen, May 8th, says:—"The 'Dorcas' Thimble is more durable than the generality of these almost indispensable work-table implements; it is made in three parts, the inner and the outer being silver, and the intermediate Steel; these three are all struck up together, forming a resisting power not obtained in silver only. What is more uncomfortable than sewing with a thimble that has seen service to such an extent that it has holes in its sides? With the 'Dorcas' Thimble this annoyance vanishes."

NEW WORK by REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

Tried by Fire:

EXPOSITIONS OF THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PETER.

Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.; Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"Delivered first as Expositions in the course of my stated ministry, and in pursuance of my constant custom, they were afterwards published week by week in the pages of The Christian, and in response to very many requests are here preserved in a permanent form.

"Written amid the multiplied engagements of a busy life, it would be impossible to estimate the benefit to heart and thought by bending over these translucent depths of sacred truth—so calm, so still, so profound, so counteractive of life's feverish haste: and it is my earnest hope that these Expositions may pass on to others some of the blessedness which their preparation has brought to myself."

Extract from Preface.

"The popularity of Mr. Meyer's Expositions is a good sign of the times. This, the latest, is one of the best, and is full of tender Christian wisdom. There are many unobtrusive signs of thought and culture throughout, but the chief charm of the book is its earnest simplicity."

PRESS NOTICES.

"In its subject and in execution this biography is of no commonorder. We have found the study of so sweet and noble a life, a joy to our heart and a stimulus to our zeal. . . . The sketch is a vade mecum for any who seek to be saviours of the sin-sick, and helpers of the poor."—Cambridge Congregational Magazine.

"This book sets forth the labours of one of the truest and noblest of women. It ought to be in every Sunday-school library and every family."—Christian Commonwealth.

"This is one of the most readable biographies we have had the pleasure of perusing. . . . Christian workers will find it a most helpful, stimulating, and instructive book. We have great pleasure in recommending this interesting work."

THE RAILWAY MISSION, GRIMSBY.—In 1888, a mission-hall in connection with the above was built at a cost of £700, the site being kindly granted by the Manchester, Sheffield & Lincolnshire Railway Company. The hall will accommodate nearly 1,000 persons. A debt of £400 seriously hinders the work: the trustees are very anxious to remove it this year. Grimsby is the terminus of the M.S. & L. and the Great Northern lines. 2,000 men are employed in connection with the same in the town. An evangelist has recently been engaged, and much good has already been accomplished. Open-air meetings, Temperance and Gospel meetings, with house to house visitation, are regularly carried on. Grimsby has a population of about 50,000, only 15,000 attend the services of God's house. A wide field—white unto the harvest. The M.S. & L. Company have recently very kindly given £50 towards the removal of the debt. An earnest appeal is made to readers of 'THE CHISTIAN' to kindly help us. Donations will be most thankfully received and acknowledged by Mr. W. MUDD, Sylvan Villa, Dudley-street, Grimsby, the Hon. Treasurer; Mr. W. A. BURKITT, 56, Weelsly-street, Grimsby, Hon. Secretary; or Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.

DAY IN THE COUNTRY.—Funds are respectfully solicited for the poor Adults and Children of the Christian Gee-street Mission and Ragged Schools, which have been carried on about twenty-eight years for the benefit of the poor of this neighbourhood.—Subscriptions, please address to Hon. Superintendent, HENRY RUDGLEY, 23, Falcon-square; or Messrs. BARCLAY, Bankers, 54, Lombard-street.

ROYAL FREE HOSPITAL, GRAY'S INN ROAD.

President: The Marquis of DUFFERIN and AVA.

BUILDING FUND APPEAL.

An earnest appeal is made for Funds to enable the Committee to rebuild the front portion of the Hospital. This, the only remaining part of the Barracks of the Light Horse Volunteers which occupied the site of the present Hospital in the early part of the century, is now much dilapidated, and has become quite inadequate and unfit for the present needs of the Charity. It is therefore imperative that the work of rebuilding should be undertaken without delay, in order to meet the ever-growing demands upon the Hospital. It is estimated that the cost of rebuilding the front portion and furnishing it will be about £20,000. Admission to the Hospital is entirely Free, no letters of recommendation being required. Contributions for the Building Fund and for the general expenses will be gratefully received by Messrs. BROWN, JANSON & CO., 32, Abchurch-lane; or at the Hospital by

CONRAD W. THIES, Secretary.

THE UNSUCCESSFUL CANDIDATES.—The sum of £3 15s. 6d. is urgently needed to complete a collection which is being made in aid of the 17 poor people who failed at the late Election of Pensioners on the Incurable Fund of the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, Queen Square, Bloomsbury. Donations are earnestly solicited by ROSA PEARMAN, Vice-President Ladies' Samaritan Society, at the Hospital as above. Gratefully acknowledged, £2 per Morgan & Scott.

WHO WILL HELP to send poor Children and Adults for a day to the Seaside, also the suffering for a fortnight into the Country? These out of St. Luke's, and Clerkenwell.—Please send, PHILIP GAST (Minister of Spencer-place Chapel, Goswell-road), 12, Noel-street, Islington.

GUY'S GUIDE TO DIGESTION

Is an interesting account of the time taken to digest nearly every article of food known. Business anxieties and harassing family cares interfere so much with the healthy activity of the stomach that all should pay attention to the digestibility of food. When roast pork takes five hours and twenty minutes to digest, and venison only one hour and thirty minutes, it will be seen of what infinite consequence to happiness is this Guide. It will be sent GRATIS and POST FREE to any reader who will write for it.—T. GUY & Co., 4, Ludgate-circus, London, E.C.

PRESS NOTICES.

"In respect of truthful portraiture, nothing could be more desirable than the sketches here presented; many of the faces familiar to the public of to-day starting from the pages with the vividness of life. The subjects are drawn from a very extended tract of religious life; and a meed of praise is rendered equally to the popular pulpiteer; the worker in the slums; the gleaner in the Indian mission field; and the South African evangelist."—Scottish Leader.

"This handsome, large, quarto volume, beautifully bound, is one of more than ordinary interest to the Christian reader. It contains upwards of one hundred biographical sketches, with remarkably life-like portraits of men and women who have been—and some of whom still are—eminent workers for God at home and in foreign lands."—English Churchman.

"The statement on the title-page that the portraits are 'life-like illustrations' is no empty boast. Of the kind there are few which more nearly fulfil the exacting requirements of popular taste, or indeed of artistic criticism. The letterpress also is admirable. The book is handsomely bound in cloth, with gilt edges and lettering. As a worthy record of noble lives it deserves a place on every Christian drawing-room table."—Methodist Recorder.

"This handsome volume will be valued by all who are interested in the Christian life and work of our day. The portraits are very good, and the accompanying sketches are models of brief, terse, and adequate biographies. The volume will form a handsome feature for the drawing-room, and be especially suitable for presentation."—Baptist Magazine.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. G. C. Grubb, who has just returned from his mission tour in Ceylon, New Zealand, &c.

In October a new periodical in German, on the lines of The Christian, is to be published. It will be entitled the Evangelisches Allianzblatt, and edited by "Hans Tharau" and Gustav Kaiser; it will be issued bi-monthly from the Christian Meeting and Alliance House, Blankenburg, Schwarzthal, the annual subscription being 3s. in Germany, and 4s. in other countries. It may be ordered in England through Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

Another instance of the persecution of the Lutherans in the Baltic provinces, by which Russia hopes to strangle Protestantism there is reported. Pastor Grimm, of Riga, has been sentenced to loss of all civil rights and privileges, to banishment and confinement in one place in the province of Perm for two years, has been forbidden to enter other provinces for ten years, and excluded for another ten years from the capitals. His alleged offence is that he spoke slanderously of the Greek Church, and so far back as 1880 confirmed in the Lutheran doctrine a girl belonging to the Orthodox Church. The slander was that he spoke of the latter as a "heathen faith"—a description scarcely too strong when it is considered how that Church is saturated with superstition and idolatry; and, as regards the latter part of the charge, it may be pointed out that the names of persons are often placed upon the Greek Church registers in a very unfair manner; indeed, a Russian commissioner who was sent to investigate these matters in 1864 reported that of the 140,000 persons on the register as converts, scarcely one-tenth really belonged to that communion.

It has been announced by the Chaplain-General to the forces that in future vacancies for army chaplains will be advertised, in order that the widest publicity may be given to the vacancies, and Rev. Dr. Edghill has added to the notification:—

> It will be useless for men to apply whose characters and capabilities will not bear the strictest investigation. We need men of power and love, and of a sound mind; men whose words and lives can lay hold of and influence our soldiers.

We trust that all who have the spiritual interests of our troops at heart will pray that a great blessing may follow this new departure.

A somewhat remarkable illustration of the growth of Continental opinion in favour of the Sabbath rest was afforded a few days ago in the French Chamber of Deputies, when, during a debate upon the Bill for regulating the hours of labour for children and women, the Deputies decided that one day in seven should be a rest day, and a section of the Chamber nearly succeeded in getting a clause passed to make that day of rest the Sunday, 210 Deputies voting in favour of it. The result probably will be the same as though legislation had secured to the women and children the blessing of the Sabbath, for, doubtless, most employers of labour will select that day as the "one in seven," and the advantage which will follow the resolution of the Chamber can, therefore, hardly be calculated.

It is gratifying to learn, from the report presented on the 18th inst. at its sixty-sixth annual meeting, that the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals had made representations which will, it is believed, put a stop to the disgraceful bull fights in Paris, and to similar brutal sports in Naples. It may be hoped that consideration will now be given to the dreadful sufferings of live stock on board cattle ships. The indefatigable Mr. Plimsoll has sent out a pamphlet on the subject through Kegan Paul & Co. After the ship Erin had been allowed by the inspectors to have 475 cattle on board, 527 were driven on her, and the ship with 74 men has, after seven months, never been heard of. The close packing of the animals brings cruelties and dangers to which public attention has not been too soon directed.

Congregational singing, according to Mr. J. Spencer Curwen, is in danger of becoming extinct. This is attributed to the sacrifice of melody, which Mozart declared was essential to effective music, for the sake of complicated harmonies. If congregations are content with this recent fashion, and to have their singing done for them by a choir, they must reckon upon an untold loss in the profit and enjoyment of public worship, and also in the growing alienation of the people. Scripture teaches us to make melody in our heart to the Lord, but there will be a difficulty in obeying the injunction when new customs make no provision for the melody of the voice.

The persecution of the Jews, which has slumbered for a time, appears to be reviving. It is stated that the Russian Minister of Finance has ordered the authorities of Russian Poland to report on the number of Jews, and to the extent of their trading, in that country. From this it would appear that the Government contemplate prohibitive measures against this scattered, peeled, and persecuted people. The effect of this, as of previous similar acts of oppression, will doubtless be that many Hebrews will turn their steps towards the land of their fathers, in the hope that there they may at least die unmolested. Russia is thus once more unwittingly fulfilling her part in the Divine programme of the world's history; for not only does "the sure word of prophecy" point to the restoration of the Jews to the Promised Land, but also to the fact that it is at the hand of this ambitious and restless Power—this "overflowing scourge" (Isa. xxviii. 18)—that Israel's greatest distresses are to come upon her. But, on the other hand, these sufferings of the seed of Jacob are a distinct call to Christians to come to their aid, and by assisting the various agencies for their temporal relief and spiritual benefit, to make some amends for the many wrongs done to them by professing Christians in former days. Such kindnesses will have a reflex action, for of the nation, as of their city, it may be said, "They shall prosper that love thee."

An agent of the Bible Society in Australia sends the following: Two men of business, and of the world, were overheard talking in Sydney about the prospects of trading in Madagascar. One of them was a German of Hebrew race and religion. He had lived among the Malagasy, and spoke of their advancing civilisation, and of the high condition they were attaining. The Sydney man of business asked the other how he accounted for the strange fact. The reply from the German Jew was:—

> "Well, you see, the missionaries always have the sense to give their people the Bible; thy Madagascar people have had it long, and you mae depend upon it that, whatever you or I may choose to think about the Bible, there is no book in the world like it for lifting up a nation. I have seen it myself in that island, and seen it for myself elsewhere."

The people of the United States who care for the morals of the nation are making a vigorous effort to abolish the State lottery in Louisiana. This began its career in 1868. It has sold tickets to the value of 168,000,000 of dollars. The shops opened on its behalf in New Orleans alone are between eighty and a hundred, the patrons of which are chiefly negroes. It is calculated that these places take 2500 dollars a day from the very poorest people of the city. The same thing goes on in hundreds of "policy shops" in other cities of the State. Strenuous efforts are being made to extend the lottery franchise for another twenty-five years when the present one expires, and brave men are making a valiant fight to bring the demoralising and impoverishing institution to an end. Many here will wish them God speed.

Canon Isaac Taylor's latest attempt to exalt Mohammedanism at the expense of Christianity has met with the defeat which it deserves. He has been endeavouring to make it appear that the late Alexander Mackay shared his mistaken and unworthy views on this subject; but we learn from a contemporary that Rev. R. P. Ashe, who is intimately acquainted with Mr. Mackay's opinions, has most distinctly stated that the devoted missionary "held that it would be fatal to allow Islam to occupy the field before Christianity had been preached," and that "it is an outrageous distortion of his views, as I understand them, to represent him as believing that Mohammedanism might be encouraged as a preparation for Christianity." Between that blighting system, which everywhere reduces its followers to a dead level of social depression, despotism, and semi-barbarism, and the glorious "Good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people," there is a great gulf, which no apologist can bridge over. Of Islam it has been elsewhere truly said that "always, and everywhere, it has been a cancer in human nature, rapidly or slowly developing according to the character of its environment, but never cured or curable, except by the entire extirpation of the poison."

In the face of the frequent demands made in these days for "liberal views" of truth, which shall be in harmony with the opinions required by "the thought and science of the age," but which views, when analysed, are as hazy in expression as they are presumptuous in conception, leading men into quagmires of doubts and questionings, the following words recently uttered by the Bishop of Liverpool are worth quoting:—

I believe that there is nothing which has yet been found better than the simple old Gospel of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ which Paul and the Apostles preached wherever they went. Whether to the high, the low, the rich, or the poor. Nothing better than that old Gospel has been found for doing good to the souls of mankind. A missionary from China has told me that if there is anything which lays hold on the poor people there, it is the simple story of the crucifixion of our Lord Jesus Christ. It is not the morality or the miracles of the Gospel, or even the wonderful sayings and speeches of our Lord Jesus Christ, but the old story of the cross, of the blood of the sacrifice, of the satisfaction of Christ in dying for sinners on the tree—that is the power for good in touching the heart and awakening the conscience.

Canon Wilberforce on the Rich Man and Lazarus.

We cannot but express our profound regret that Canon Basil Wilberforce should have given the weight of his very important influence to the support of the doctrine of Universal Restoration. That he has done so is clear from his article, entitled, "Thoughts on the Parable of Dives and Lazarus," which appears in this month's issue of his parish magazine. He quotes the words of S. Ambrose, who says: "Dives, the sinner, is pressed with penal agonies that he may escape the sooner"; and on the lines of this quotation he interprets the parable.

The article bears unmistakable evidence that the Canon has allowed his feelings to run away with his judgment. This appears, first, in the contradictions with which it abounds. For example, in one place it is said that Dives was in hell "for no recorded fault beyond that of being rich and prosperous"; further on he is referred to as "self-centred and proud," who "despised" the beggar, and who is therefore one of "the most abandoned"; while later on we read that "Dives goes to hell, not because he was wicked, NOR because he was rich." If the Canon had carefully thought out the subject before writing, would he have been guilty of such glaring contradictions?

His reference to evangelical doctrine shows the same want of accuracy. These are his words: "The God of man's imagination and conventional theology may be appeased, eluded, or cajoled. The true Father of Divine revelation, whose unalterable will is that every child of his shall be sanctified, is inexorable in the assertion of his demands, unflinching in the application of his chastisement." This passage pains us. An imperfectly considered theory that has got possession of the Canon's feelings should not lead him to utter such a caricature of the doctrines taught in the Thirty-nine Articles to which he has solemnly subscribed. At the same time, we feel bound to point out how these words show the connection between the theories of Universal Fatherhood and Universal Restoration; the second is the necessary corollary of the first.

As a piece of exposition the article displays the same want of care. The only foundation on which this dangerous theory is built is suggested by the rich man's concern for his five brethren. From this it is inferred that selfishness was giving place to "solicitude for the brethren." It is therefore an inference only, and that of a very doubtful character, that leads the Canon to this theory. But, while magnifying this inference, he explains away the solemn words put into the mouth of Abraham as to the impossibility of crossing that gulf which divides the lost from the saved.

Besides which, he ignores altogether the obvious teaching of the parable as suggested by its connection. Clearly this needs to be read with the four which precede it. All were suggested by the complaint of the Pharisees that Jesus received publicans and sinners. In the first three He justifies his own action by describing the publican as the lost sheep, the lost coin, and the lost son. In the third, the Pharisee appears in the elder brother; in the fourth, his unfaithfulness towards God is described in the unjust steward; and in the fifth, his attitude toward the publican appears in Dives' contempt for Lazarus, his inevitable and terrible doom is foretold, and the important lesson alike to Pharisee and publican is given in the words, "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead."

We call special attention to this last consideration, because it shows that the aim of the parable is directly opposite to that of the Canon's article. The parable declares the sufficiency of the Divine Word to produce repentance now, and the utter hopelessness of those who reject its testimony. The tendency of the article is to produce an exactly opposite effect. If there is salvation hereafter through the purging fires of the spirit world, why pay such heed to the Word of God now? We cannot but feel that the article does not interpret, but rather contradicts, the teaching of the parable.

Our object in writing is not controversy. We are moved by deep concern for those whom the Canon's words may mislead. We know how great his influence is. He bears an honoured name, and possesses brilliant gifts, that has given him in an unusual measure the ear of the people. Such influence gives great weight to anything he says, and carries with it solemn responsibility. The evidences of inconsiderateness with which his article abounds lead us to hope that he may yet, after mature deliberation, retire from a position so destitute of support, and so calculated to weaken the present effect of the Divine Word. But we have discharged a very important, though painful duty, in seeking to guard the unwary against being misled.

IN DARKEST LONDON.

O YE who are ambitious,
And ye who would be great,
Ye who would rise through noble deeds
To place of high estate,
Ye strong of nerve and sinew,
Who never know a fear,
Go, emulate our Stanley,
But in our London here.

Go, penetrate the forests
Of ignorance and sin,
Where grows the deadly upas tree,
And all is dark within.
Where rain of superstition
Unceasingly doth fall,
And shades of want and famine
Continually do pall.

Where droppings of contention
Fall from each leafy spray,
And murky clouds of darkness,
Ne'er seem to pass away:
Where dwarfs in all but evil
Are met on every hand,
And pigmy men of pigmy mind
In opposition stand.

Where poisons of corruption,
Hereditary, bring
The serpent of consumption,
With ever deadly sting;
Where undergrowths of evil
Obscure the sun and skies,
While vapours of miasma
And malaria arise.

. . . .

For there are little children,
Who, pining till they die,
Have never seen a wild-flower grow,
Nor chased a butterfly.
They live in crowded cellars,
And breathe the tainted breath
Of loathsome fiends of drunkenness,
Pollution, crime, and death.

And there are feeble women,
Who work the live-long day,
And far into the hours of night,
Sewing their souls away.
And others so degraded
(O Heaven! that it should be),
Who live in lowest depths of sin
Their lives of infamy.

And there are men in London
Who make us blush for shame,
For they are men in form alone,
Unworthy of the name;
They live in vilest sensualness,
And coarse brutality,
And demon-like in human guise,
Their passions all set free.

Then forward to the rescue,
Ye men of valiant heart!
And in this work before you,
Go, bear a noble part.
And forward, gentle women,
Of helpful hand and true,
Go, join with the explorers
And show what you can do.

Go, plant the flag of Jesus,
And your allegiance bring,
Till all earth's darkest places
Acknowledge Him their King.
His power is all-sufficient
To make all darkness light,
And his bright beams of righteousness
Dispel the shades of night.

DIABOLOS AND HIS DEMONS is the title of an exposition of Scripture teaching, by Elizabeth A. Needham. Not pretending to be more than a sketch, it is certainly very suggestive, and proceeds on lines distinctly loyal to the authority of Holy Writ. (Albert Needham, Publisher, Manchester, U.S.A.)

THE THREE GARDENS.

BY REV. JAMES CULROSS, D.D.

THE GARDEN WHERE THEY LAID HIM.

I.—What men have thought concerning Hereafter.

DEATH seems to end all. The "stern agony" comes; the machinery of life is arrested in its movement; all the signs by which we knew that the man lived have disappeared; there is no response to voice, or look, or touch; the frame so wondrously fashioned is resolved into "kindred dust," and becomes

> Brother to the insensible rock,
> And to the sluggish clod, which the rude swain
> Turns with the share, and treads upon.

But does death end all? Is night the beginning and the end of being? Is love kindled in the human breast only to be quenched in eternal oblivion? Is beauty born only to wither? Is the goal toward which we are moving darkness, and coldness, and corruption—a winding-sheet, and a coffin, and a chamber of clay?

For appearances may be illusory. The sun seems to set; the earth seems to be at rest; the sky seems to be a solid dome; the man seems to be dead; is all this real? May not something have escaped the process that we call dying? Have we told all when we have told that the heart has ceased to beat, and the breath to come and go? I look into the dead face; appearances say, all is over for ever. I knock at the door of the funeral vault; no voice bids me come in. If I enter unbidden, the tenants are dumb; none challenges me; none stirs or turns in his narrow bed—it is stillness, coldness, silence, the charnel-damp. Is this all, then? Science answers, I know nothing; I cannot deny a life beyond, any more than I can affirm it. While the man lived, there was that in him which was not subject to my analysis—which defied all my tests. As to a hereafter, I neither find token of it anywhere; nor do I know anything to contradict it. You must go with your question somewhere else: I cannot answer it.

Struggling against appearances, the heart refuses to believe that death is the extinction of being, "the first dark day of nothingness," and reaches forth in desire and hope toward a life to come—as the leaf reaches toward the sunlight. "Wherefore hast Thou made all men in vain?" "In death there is no remembrance of Thee; in the grave, who shall give Thee thanks?" "Wilt Thou shew wonders to the dead? Shall the dead arise and praise Thee?" "Man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?... He lieth down and riseth not; till the heavens be no more they shall not awake nor be raised out of their sleep." Words like these, so full of sad regret and longing, as of men surprised at so poor result from so glorious promise, tell plainly enough what the heart of man yearns after, and pleads for with inextinguishable desire.

The caterpillar sinks into apparent death, from which in due time it soars into a resurrection of beauty. The husbandman buries the seed-corn in the ground, and afterwards reaps his golden harvest. The oak, stript of its foliage, and seeming a skeleton, puts on its glory again in the spring-tide. But in such cases there has been no real death. And any hints thus given of a future for man are too shadowy to be of any value.

Passing by the seductive analogies of nature, which go for nothing when the stress is felt, moral considerations present themselves, and do something to vindicate the universal longing of the heart. I believe in God, infinite, eternal, and unchangeable in his being, wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness, and truth. I must believe, therefore, in great possibilities for the life which He has created, and in issues proportioned to the measure of the being—greatest of all for the life that can move in the plane of righteousness, truth, and love. But are not wider spaces of time and freer conditions required for the unfolding of these possibilities, the working out of these issues? Is there ample enough scope within our narrow and transitory and burdened career on earth? May not God provide due scope in a world to come? Is it likely that He meant no more in placing man on the stage than only "to please himself for a while with such a spectacle, and then at last clear the stage, and shut up all again in an eternal perpetual darkness"?*

For by universal confession the present is incomplete. The "goal" is never reached. Darkness falls ere the day's work is done. The world is full of unrealised ideals: of buds that never open, of beauty withered ere it is unfolded, of music dying out in silence or abruptly stopped ere the measure is completed, of plans devised but never executed, of careers arrested just when a year or two more promised glorious success, of love and noblest purpose kindled only to be quenched again. We are limited on every side. The sun of life goes down, leaving us to dream of what "might have been," but is not. Can it be—the question again forces itself upon us—that the present is man's all? Is not ampler room needed for the unfolding of the just issues of the present? Ought not these issues to be realised? And is not that ought the demand for a life to come? Can I believe in God, and not hope for a Beyond and Hereafter?

Further, in the physical realm, under the laws of nature, we are subject to retribution. If a man breathe poisoned air, his health suffers. If he squander the golden hours of youth and the opportunities of manhood in inglorious sloth, he earns a dishonoured old age. If he yield to vice, he brings on disease and shame. We have here not something accidental and occasional, but the rule which is enforced without respect of persons. Sooner or later retribution comes. Is it so in the spiritual realm? It may seem as if things were "loose" in this realm. We find a retributive system instituted and carried out so far, but left imperfect, halting just where we should expect the final act. Is the "halt" a full stop? Does it create a presumption of final impunity for wrong? Rather it is as if we should chance to come upon a building of noble design and grand proportions, begun but not finished. Blocks of marble lie about, on which we observe recent marks of the chisel, ladders, planks, scaffolding, all in readiness. We assume at once that the building is not meant to remain as it is; some day, we conclude, it will be finished, and finished in keeping with what is already disclosed of the architect's idea. This may stand as a parable of what we find in the moral region—a retributive system sufficiently disclosed to reveal some, at least, of its ruling principles, but not complete.

Reason and conscience alike suggest the probability of a day of account, in which the principles of Divine procedure shall be vindicated and fully carried out. Can it be that all is over with the godless man, the man of selfish luxury, sleek and full fed, haughty, overbearing, unscrupulous, free-thinking? and with the poor whom he oppressed, and of whom he made stepping-stones—when this brief life ends? And if not, does not this imply an existence beyond the grave? This, however, is not proof, and does not give certainty. Not until reason and conscience enter into "the sanctuary of God" do we attain assurance that his righteousness has larger scope than this earth, and man's three score years and ten. But when we do enter there, the otherwise inexplicable and tragic riddle of life comes to be understood. True, it may be but a "part" of God's "way" that is shown. But just as the astronomer, who sees the comet only for a week, can determine its orbit, and follow its flaming course through space, so the heaven-taught soul, in the sanctuary-light, can believe in a righteousness and love which transcend all human imagining, and in a Hereafter in which God shall show Himself to be God.

With God in our creed, no difficulty arises from the seeming impossibility of our surviving death. I am is as great a marvel as I shall be.

Whether from considerations like these, felt rather than weighed by the understanding, or whether as a pure instinct, the idea of a future life has haunted the human race, like a kind of home-sickness, from the beginning of history. Everywhere and always it is an adjunct of religion. In India and the mysterious East, among the ancient Assyrians and Babylonians, in Egypt, in Greece and her colonies, among the Germanic and northern races, and in the new world as well as the old—the idea meets us.

Take the ancient Egyptian, by way of example. He placed the doctrine of an after-life in the very forefront of his creed. Those whom we call the dead, he called the living. Life here was but an episode in an eternal existence. The earthly home in which he dwelt with his wife and children was but the "hostelry" where he put up for a time; his tomb (as Diodorus Siculus tells), hewn out of rock, and placed high above the floods of the swelling Nile, was his "eternal dwelling-place." There his embalmed body would lie through the long centuries, in some mysterious way visited and re-visited by his soul, the deathless second self, till finally, attaining a state of pure virtue, the soul was received into a place of security and bliss. In this place of felicity it passed the years, living as on earth, breathing untainted air, resting at noontide under the shade of palm or sycamore, cultivating the fields of Hotep, as the living cultivated the valley of the Nile; till, in the far-off future, the body should be reclaimed and re-animated.

It is true that the belief in a life beyond was held by the heathen uncertainly. It was "one guess among many," a theory or fancy rather than a faith, and they were ever painfully searching for some surer ground on which to rest. It is true that it had but slight "grip" of the consciences of men in general, and was worthless as an anodyne for sorrow or an inspiration to heroic and virtuous endeavour. It is true that it was wholly insufficient to satisfy the deep craving of the heart. And it is also true that by not a few it was mournfully or passionately denied. That great and keen thinker, Aristotle, calmly ignores it. He finds no legitimate place for it in his system. So, too, in the system of Epicurus, which at once sets man free from Divine control, and emancipates from that "dread of something after death" which so "puzzles the will."

The elder Pliny shows what progress was made in educated thought up to his day. "All religion," he says, "is the offspring of necessity, weakness, and fear. What God is, if in truth He be anything distinct from the world, it is beyond the compass of man's understanding to know....The vanity of man, and his insatiable longing after existence, have led him also to dream of a life after death. A being full of contradictions, he is the most wretched of creatures; since no other has wants transcending the bounds of its nature....The greatest good that God has bestowed on man, is the power of taking his own life." The belief in immortality he stigmatizes as an "accursed frenzy," and asserts that to entertain it, "doubles the pain of dying."

He has successors to-day. Says one: "I would not for a moment hesitate to prefer annihilation to everlasting life." To maintain the impossibility of getting out of existence seems to him the most awful thing imaginable.

* Howe: "Blessedness of the Righteous."

PAUPERISM IN ENGLAND AND WALES has fallen to 23 for every 1000 of the population—little over half of what it was a quarter of a century ago. This is something to be thankful for, even admitting what, doubtless, is quite true, that the falling off is to a large extent due to the development of that Christian philanthropy which takes upon itself the task of providing for so many of those in want.

Missioners in Conference.

Following the custom of the time, the clergymen who do special mission work in connection with the Church Parochial Mission Society meet once a year for mutual consultation and exhortation, and for waiting on God in prayer. This year's three days' Conference took place last week at Roxeth Church and Vicarage, a beautiful and secluded spot on the western slope of Harrow-hill. The vicar of the church is Rev. J. F. Andrews, who at one time was assistant missioner to Rev. W. H. Aitken, and who, of course, retains a deep interest in the work of his old Society. There were between sixty and seventy clergymen at the Conference, and the proceedings were of the most practical and helpful kind.

The first day was devoted mainly to matters bearing on the internal management of the Society, its maintenance and its extension. On the second morning, Mr. Aitken gave a short but most weighty address in the church, on the dangers of spiritual elation. He cited various cases from Scripture history, illustrating the perils that arise to God's servants from the very success that they strive after. In applying this to the mission workers of to-day, he compared the special missioner to those who are called in to help in reaping the harvest for which there has been much patient sowing and waiting in past days or years. The subtle dangers of self-gratulation are apt to assail the successful missioner, and these must be jealously guarded against. On the other hand, spiritual depression may come from self-centredness, as well as spiritual elation. If the worker does not meet with the recognition and outward success he looks for, he is apt to become unduly cast down. "Seekest thou great things for thyself; seek them not." Let the true servant of Christ leave himself in the hands of his Master; then success and failure alike will give him to realise that his dependence must ever be on God alone, and that to God must the praise be ascribed.

Immediately after, a conference was held on the best methods of DEALING WITH UNBELIEVERS.

After some prefatory words from Mr. Aitken, a remarkable address was given by Rev. J. A. Harrison, who has had very large experience in taking the Gospel message to various classes of Agnostics and unbelievers. Any résumé of this most valuable utterance would not do it justice, and we hope to be able to give it in extenso, in an early issue, from the author's manuscript. Mr. Harrison is a very busy man, for he had travelled overnight to come from the North of England to the Conference, and he returned to fulfil his engagements there at the conclusion of his address.

An animated and suggestive discussion ensued, all the speakers expressing their high sense of the importance of grappling with this problem, and their appreciation of Mr. Harrison's views and experiences. Canon Lester reported a wonderful decrease of the open advocacy of infidelity in Victoria Park, in the East-end, largely owing to the earnest and faithful labours of Mr. Celestine Edwards. He thought that this evidential kind of work ought to be entrusted to specialists; only such men can hope to meet the numerous questions that are raised by infidel opposers. Rev. J. H. Haslam also had some very encouraging things to say about successful effort of this kind among the industrial masses in certain parts of Kent and Surrey. On one occasion some very rough men had threatened to throw him into the Thames. He boldly faced the situation, and adopted a friendly, conciliatory tone, with the result that a week's mission was conducted there, and was largely attended.

Towards the close of the interesting conversation, Mr. Aitken remarked that one great mistake often made in dealing with those of sceptical views is to regard them as being necessarily antagonists. The Master Himself would have approached them in a friendly way, and we ought to do the same. Mr. Harrison had observed to him, in conversation before the meeting, that in his experience he always found that Christian controversy disarmed unbelief. Mr. Aitken related some very interesting cases met with in his own experience, in which persons who professed scepticism or agnostism had, by kindly, sympathetic treatment, been led to apprehend savingly the truths of the Gospel. Let us not ask from them too much at first, but rather seek to lead them gradually step by step into the fuller light that comes to every true inquiring soul. On the general subject of evidential missions in connection with parish special missions, he thought it was a great pity that such a man as Mr. Harrison could not be set apart for the work for which he is so eminently fitted. Some facts were cited, showing the great need for such work, even among those who regularly attend the churches. The general view expressed by all the speakers was that latent unbelief and religious doubts are "in the air," and an effort ought to be made under the guidance of God to cope with such a condition of things.

ITINERANT MISSIONS.

An excellent and practical paper on this subject had been prepared by Rev. J. Cullin; as he could not be present, it was read at the after conference by Mr. Aitken. Assuming that these "flying" visits are mostly required in places where a more extended mission has never been held, or would not perhaps be invited, Mr. Cullin urged that a spirit of gentleness and sympathy should characterise all advances to those clergy whose goodwill it is desired to secure. "Conciliatory words and ways often make possible that which a self-confident zeal may fail to achieve." These initerant missions are intended to awaken a desire for, and to prepare the way for, a longer and more systematic endeavour; there are many cases where this brief and tentative visit would be welcomed, or at any rate entertained. Of course it could only be held with the consent of the incumbent. It is very desirable to get the co-operation of the Bishop in making the arrangements, so that he may commend the mission to the clergy. Missioners should be sent out two and two, and plans made that would enable them to pass from place to place easily. Such missions should be arranged for at convenient seasons, and not as a rule when the country people are busy harvesting. "Yet we have seen such a mission carried out in the month of August, two missioners going on foot from place to place, stopping now at a stone quarry, now at an outlying hamlet, now in the centre of a small town, speaking to such groups of people as they meet with, preaching at night in the churches, and lodging in any labourer's cottage, who is hospitable enough to ask them to share his plain fare ere the travellers passed on. Than this can anything more Apostolic be conceived?"

As illustrating the results of such a mission, Mr. Cullin told of one where all the church were as feeble and as hopeless as they could well be. On the occasion of the visit the Vicar was deeply impressed and aroused, and avowed his purpose to become a different man. After three years the place was re-visited, and there was such a change everywhere that the missioner could scarcely trust the testimony of his own senses. There should not be any stereotyping of methods; let them be adapted to the conditions of the parish or the district. The itinerant missioner should be no novice, but one experienced in practical dealing with souls and full of sympathy with all sorts of men. Of course hindrances will arise, among them being the difficulty of finding men willing to give up two or three weeks to a wandering and laborious life. But where the mind is set on doing God's will and seeking the salvation of his fellows, these difficulties may be converted into a holy discipline and a divine inspiration.

A short address followed on "Teaching Missions," by Rev. D. W. Barrett. He thought in ordinary evangelistic missioning sufficient prominence was not given to doctrinal teaching and to the expositions of Church principles, and he advocated special endeavours to the explanation of these and cognate topics in an orderly and definite way. In his own parish he has a catechetical meeting every Saturday for this purpose, and it answers very well.

ON REVISITS.

Some exceedingly interesting testimony was contributed on this subject by Rev. G. Howell, of Liverpool. He deemed such revisits by the missioner to be not only most helpful to the local clergyman and to the people, but highly encouraging to the worker himself. Even in places where no revisit was invited or desired, he had heard of no little blessing having resulted from the mission; it ought, however, to be well timed, so as to make the most of the opportunity. When paying these return visits, he had found those who had been in a state of soul anxiety ever since the original mission, and whom he was able to lead into spiritual light and liberty. These second visits should in most cases be directed to a deepening of the spiritual life; though they will also be found to result in fresh conversions. This testimony was seconded by Rev. Dr. Morris, who said he tried to utilise the summer interim, when extended missions were scarcely feasible, for paying brief return visits. He was also in the habit on these occasions of pressing on the people the claims of the Parochial Mission Society.

AN ITINERATING EXPERIENCE

of great interest, and graphically told, came from Rev. A. Willink, who described one such flying Gospel campaign in South Wales, in which he had engaged, with Canon Mason, in the pleasant summer time. He and his companion went out with their knapsacks, walking from place to place, and trusting to the hospitality of the people for food and shelter. They experienced the most wonderfully generous kindness on the part of those whom they visited. As an illustration of their varied and almost romantic experiences of this kind, he told how one evening they shared the hospitality of the blacksmith of the village; the next evening they were entertained at the great castle of the place; the next at a small quiet country rectory; the next at the village post-office; the next at the village school house, and so on. Altogether they had a delightful time, and the holiday element was so mingled with it that the work was carried out without any undue exertion.

A Welsh clergyman, Rev. A. Britten, who had previously been a stranger to the work of this Society, expressed in very warm terms the gratitude he personally felt for stimulus received at the Conference. He also told of many opportunities of reaching the Welsh people through itinerating missions. Rev. S. Darwin Fox feared that sometimes a flying mission was made the excuse for not having an extended mission, and this was to be deprecated. Rev. J. Haslam, on the other hand, had much to say in favour of itinerant country missions. He had found that through them many were influenced who resided in the west of London during a portion of the year, but could not be reached there. In closing the conversation, Mr. Aitken strongly urged that "teaching missions," so-called, should be kept perfectly distinct from those of an evangelistic nature, and not regarded as a substitute for them.

THE EVENING CONFERENCE

was an exceedingly solemn and searching time. Two addresses were given by Canon Lester and Rev. A. R. D'Arcy on the work of the Holy Spirit, and the necessity of recognising his claims as affecting the different departments of mission work. The Canon reviewed some of the great religious movements of recent years—the revival under Messrs. Moody and Sankey, the Gospel temperance movement, and the work of the Salvation Army. All these were distinct and divinely originated testimonies to some department of religious truth; but they were only partial in application. The great want of the time, in his opinion, is the consecration of professing Christians. As to the selection of mission preachers, that also must be the work of the Holy Ghost. True missioners are born and not manufactured.

Mr. D'Arcy strongly emphasised the need of Holy Ghost power in connection with all departments of mission work, even in the arrangement of what may be called trivial details. He also laid much stress on the need of united intercessory prayer before and throughout a mission. He had experienced much blessing in connection with this, and the number of distinct answers given to prayer offered in response to special requests sent in was very remarkable.

The rest of the evening session was a time of deep contrition of spirit before God in confession and prayer. Mr. Aitken led the way both in wrestling petition for a fresh enduement with the power of the Holy Ghost for service, and in the confession of individual shortcomings that had proved hindrances to the work of God. These occasions are much too sacred to be enlarged upon in print, but all present must have felt that the Spirit was indeed brooding over that little prostrate company of preachers, as their hearts' desires were outpoured in words of great feeling and urgency. Some words of mutual exhortation were mingled with the prayers. One good brother—Mr. Hill, from New Zealand—awakened much interest by telling how many of the ministers of the Gospel in Melbourne have for some months been meeting weekly for special and prolonged entreaty to God that He would revive his work in the midst of that great community, and would remove any hindrances that might arise from the default of the workers. As we have said, this was a very solemn and heart-searching time, and it must surely leave its mark on the future of the Society's work.

The third day of the Conference was "a quiet day," set apart for meditation, communion, and waiting on God. Addresses were given at intervals by Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe.

LEPERS AT THE CAPE.

A LETTER has been received by Rev. W. T. McCormick, of Brighton, from Miss C. Boyes, representing the case of the lepers at Robben Island. The chaplain, Rev. A. R. M. Wilshere, has had to return from active service, owing to age and infirmity. An influential and representative committee has been appointed to care for the wants of the afflicted lepers. Miss Boyes is the secretary of this committee, and she asks Mr. McCormick to secure assistance in its work from friends in England. The visiting members of the committee will attend personally to the distribution of needed relief to the lepers, and will sing and converse with them.

A list of articles especially needed is given by Miss Boyes. Among them are magic lantern slides (various), sweetmeats and sweet biscuits, tea, coffee and sugar, pictures, books, and large illuminated texts, Cardigan waistcoats (if possible, bright colours), ribbons and coloured scraps for patchwork, games and toys, dolls, hammocks, and old pianos. The patients love anything that will make a noise, from a penny whistle upwards.

Friends disposed to help in any way should communicate with Rev. W. T. McCormick, St. Matthew's Vicarage, Brighton.

MR. SHULDHAM HENRY has returned from Norway somewhat improved in health. He proposes going to Switzerland next week for two or three months' change and rest, and asks the prayers of the Lord's people, that sleep and health may be soon perfectly restored.

Mr. Moody's Summer School.—2.

BY A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.

AT the opening of one of the sessions of this "College of Colleges," where so many young men gather inspiration for future work, Mr. Sankey was asked to sing, "Throw out the life line." Preceding this he gave a brief account of the origin of these meetings, now world-wide in their scope. "Some years ago," he said, "Mr. Moody and Mr. Wishard were working together down South, when, as they were stopping for a short time in one city, Mr. Wishard asked Mr. Moody if he would not let him bring two or three students to Northfield in the summer, and help them in the study of the Bible. Mr. Moody instantly replied, 'Why not bring fifty?' The result was that Mr. Wishard gave up the remainder of his through ticket, and began to make preparations for the first Convention at Mount Hermon."

This year is evidently to be known as a red-letter year for missions at Northfield, for the very atmosphere seems permeated with enthusiasm for mission work. More than 100 have already pledged themselves to join the growing army of missionary volunteers, and the list is growing daily. This influence, too, is going to tell through the whole college community in years to come. There is nothing so infectious as the power of example, and the fever is spreading rapidly. Nor is this to be wondered at with such missionary giants on the platform, and moving about among the boys. Here is Dr. George F. Pentecost, who in nine weeks goes to India to labour for three years; Bishop J. M. Thoburn to tell of the work in that country; and Dr. A. T. Pierson, who has been such a power in kindling missionary fires all over the land. Then Mr. Moody is ever ready to lend a hand in this direction. This was well illustrated in one of the meetings, when Bishop Thoburn was speaking of the greatness of the work and the scarcity of labourers. He said it would cost 30 dollars a year to support a native preacher, and he wondered if anyone in Northfield would like to aid in that direction. Mr. Moody promptly spoke up: "Put me down to support one." Then he stood up, and in a few minutes enough money was subscribed, in response to his earnest appeal, to keep one hundred native missionaries at work in India for a year. That is practical Christianity.

THE BIBLE.

Rev. Dr. R. S. MACARTHUR, of New York, gave a rousing address, leading up to the work of missions. He said, in opening, that the best way to preach down error is to preach up truth. The best way to keep tares out of the soil of the heart is to fill every spot with the good seed of the kingdom. The Word of God was never loved, studied, or understood as it is to-day. The temple of God's truth will stand in its symmetry, and beauty, and glory. The grass of infidel oratory withereth, the flower of Christian interpretation often fadeth, but the Word of God shall stand for ever. He went on to show in what way the Word of God has exerted its great influence. This is seen first in the whole sphere of literature. The whole system of jurisprudence, of medicine, of history, of poetry, and of literature generally, is so connected with the Word of God, that no man can master these, if he be ignorant of that. Then the influence of the Bible on art, painting, and music was amplified, each point being illuminated with telling illustration. In closing, he said: This Old Bible is in the fires of criticism, and the furnace is being heated seven times hotter than it was wont to be. Let the fires be heated twenty-seven times hotter than they were wont to be heated: it is to come out of the trial without the smell of fire upon its pages. Love it. Live it. Pray it. Take Jesus Christ, who is the Word of God, in the largest and fullest sense!

TALKS ON MISSIONS.

Dr. Pierson has been giving some excellent talks on missions, at one of which he said: The whole history of missionary endeavour is an exhibition of the Divine element rather than of the human element. In 1858 the Gospel was virtually brought into contact with 850,000,000 people, and the special cases of Japan, China, India, Mexico, and portions of Africa, were brought up. God also used all the modern improvements, and seized strategic positions in the entire field of missions. Two examples were given of God's protection of his people in the crisis of missionary history. The first was that of the Sultan Mahmoud, who banished the missionaries by edict, and died on the very night that the missionaries prayed to be delivered out of that trouble. In 1851, when the King of Siam forbade his people to sell to the missionaries, or to let them put up buildings, and the missionaries prayed for deliverance, the king also died, and the choice for the succession, which lay with the nobles, fell on the only man in the kingdom who had been trained by a missionary, and who established the most progressive policy of any king in Europe or Asia. In closing, Dr. Pierson said to the students: "If you can go into engineering, law, medicine, mercantile life, editorial work, and serve God best, and save souls best, then go by all means, but don't let the choice of a calling be the supreme question with you. There is only one vocation that is divine, and that is the vocation of serving God and saving souls. Let no other choice be superior to that, and it makes no difference where you go, you are bound to be missionaries. You make a life mistake if you choose a calling for the sake of the calling, and not as an avenue to that higher vocation of serving your generation by the will of God, and bringing souls to the knowledge of Christ Jesus."

REV. W. R. MOWLL, OF LONDON,

is one of the living and working speakers of the great gathering, which now numbers 500 students from nearly all over the world. He took Joshua as the subject of his first discourse. Joshua, he said, was a man whose chief characteristic was courage; he was not afraid of his own shadow. When I see some ministers, it makes me sick at heart to think that they should be carried away by the great tide of popular opinion, as to be afraid to preach certain truths of Christianity, because they fear the people would not like them. Let us remember that we are in the triumphant minority; or, to use a worldly phrase, we hold the winning card. I want you to look to the word "Success." We all desire it. Most men admit that Joshua was successful. Joseph was another successful man. Peter was a noble, plucky fellow, and his was a successful life.

In order to impress the points more easily, he took up the word "Success" acrostically. Our success is dependent upon our Salvation. Then it depends upon our Union with Christ. A friend who is a missionary in Uganda wrote that again and again the natives who have been converted, when turned upon by their vacillating king, rather than deny their Lord, have perished at the stake. So, if I want success in home or foreign mission work, it must depend upon my relation, my union with Christ. The next letter reminds of Courage. Never be cast down, never let a doubt or a shadow of a doubt cross your mind. Another letter in success reminds of Consistency. I asked a man in a shop if he would throw away the change of a sovereign if nineteen shillings turned out counterfeit, but one was good; but he said: "I should stick to the stock that was good." Don't you know that the fact that there is a current coin of the realm is proved by the fact of the counterfeit coin that is present. The letter E reminds us of expectation, apart from which there is no success. Joshua had to go forward expecting that God would fulfil that promise, and He did. The next letter tells us of Strength. For several years I have prayed, Lord, weaken me every day, that my strength may come out of my weakness. The last letter speaks of Separation; there can be no success without separation. Don't turn to fancy and fashion; be true to the Word of God. I always thank God for opposition. If I weren't opposed every day in my life in London I should be a miserable man. Take the word Success, pray over it, ask God the Holy Ghost to hold it over you.

INDEPENDENCE DAY.

On July 4, the boys indulged in a little national holiday, but more attention was paid to the meetings. A special feature was a gathering in the interest of the Y.M.C.A., when foreign students were invited to tell of the work in their own countries. Richard Foelner, of the University of Berlin, told of what was being done with the 7000 students in that city; Adolphe Monod, of the Université de France, spoke of the hopeful signs in that country; Nathan Noderblom, of Upsala, Sweden, said there was a growing interest in his country; Joseph R. Fraser, of the University of Aberdeen, said that one-tenth of the 1000 students in the University were Association men; John Lennox, of New College, in Edinburgh, spoke of the influence of Professor Henry Drummond's lectures to young men throughout the city; Frank H. Webb-Peploe, of Pembroke College, Cambridge, said there were 3000 men in the twenty-one colleges in Cambridge, and that each college had its own chapel; Mr. Fremantle, of Oxford, followed with a description of the Sunday-school work in the colleges. Among the recent arrivals is Tasuku Harads, of Kobe, Japan, who is now studying theology at Yale, but has been for four years a native preacher over one of the largest Japanese churches in Kobe. Much attention is being paid to athletic games after noon, Mr. Moody urging the boys to attend to the duty of recreation as well as to the religious gatherings.

MISSIONS TO ROMANISTS.

Our pages have recently afforded evidence of the extent to which faithful words concerning Romish errors are misunderstood by some Protestants. Another mistaken attitude of our times is one which would strike at the root of all missions to Roman Catholics. It is thus defined and answered by Rev. Dr. Prochet, in A Voice from Italy for May last, published at the London office of the Waldensian Church Missions, 118, Pall Mall, S.W. :—

I should like once more to answer an objection, which often is only a lame excuse for not helping us, but which sometimes has a foundation in the incorrect idea many Protestants have formed of our mission to Roman Catholics? A worthy D.D. said to me one day: "To tell you the truth, I have little sympathy for a mission whose work consists in making bad Protestants out of good Catholics!" Why, who could have any sympathy with such a mission? That was the spirit of the Scribes and Pharisees, who compassed sea and land to make one proselyte, and when he was made, they made him twofold more the child of hell than themselves (Matt. xxiii. 15).

That there are insincere conversions no one can deny; and who could be astonished thereat, seeing there was a Judas among the Twelve? But to argue from this that a mission among Roman Catholics is useless, and even bad, is to give proof of ignorance or faithlessness. The Church of Rome goes further and further every day from the truth as it is in Jesus, and the effects of its Pagan-Christianity are, alas! only too clearly seen by those who do not wilfully shut their eyes to them. The words of one of our converts, a member of the Evangelical Church in Rome, characterise our work, and say more for it than would pages of argument on the subject: "When I believed in a wooden or metal Christ, I was a blasphemer and a wicked man; now that, by the grace of God, I believe in the living and life-giving Christ, I feel I am a new man." Yes, this is the aim of all earnest evangelistic work—to lead to the Saviour sinners who knew Him not; to set them face to face with Him; and to let Divine grace accomplish its work in their hearts. This is what, with God's help, we wish to do; this is what we have been aiming at in Italy for thirty years. Our friends know it well, but we wish to repeat it to them, and to assure them that we have not changed.

It is only those who do not know what Romanism is who make such silly remarks as the above.

Protestant Notes.

There is a great deal of mystery and secrecy in connection with the Guild movement in the Church of England. Even the bishops are often ignorant of the mischievous and Popish work undertaken by many of the Guilds in their own dioceses. For instance, we cannot for one moment suppose that the evangelical Bishop of Rochester is aware of the Romanising teaching imparted to his congregation, through his parochial Guilds, by the Rev. A. B. Goulden, vicar of St. Alphege, Southwark. One of these is known as "The Guild of the Sacred Heart of Jesus," and is intended for boys under twenty years of age. The worship of the material heart of the Saviour, first established by the Jesuits, is inculcated in a most objectionable manner, in the official manual of the Guild, now lying before us. The "Rule of Life" includes the following directions:—"To receive the Holy Sacrament (fasting) every Sunday, and to go to Confession once a month" (p. 5). Amongst the "Things to be Remembered" by the members, at Holy Communion, is the following:—"At the Consecration, immediately the Sanctus bell rings, everybody should bow down and worship Jesus, Who is then present on the Altar, under the Form of Bread and Wine" (p. 9).

"The Guild of the Blessed Virgin Mary" also is connected with the parish of St. Alphege. According to its "Constitution," "The Guild shall consist of unmarried women and girls"; and these also are required "to go to Confession once a month" (p. 5). We wonder whether the fathers and mothers of these girls are aware that their daughters must frequent the Confessional, which Englishmen detest with such good reason. These Guild girls are taught that "in passing an Altar a curtsey should be made" (p. 9). At the "Office for Guild meetings" the girls are required to say the following prayer to the Virgin Mary:—"Hail, Mary, full of grace, the Lord is with thee. Blessed art thou among women. Blessed is the fruit of thy womb, Jesus. Holy Mary, Mother of God, pray for us sinners, now and at the hour of our death." Is it not, indeed, a grave scandal that such unscriptural and Romish doctrines as these should be taught in a Protestant Church? We trust that the Bishop of Rochester, assisted by the evangelical Archdeacon of Southwark, will take this matter in hand at once, and order the vicar to withdraw these Guild books from circulation, and publicly censure him for his conduct.

There is also a "Church Confraternity" in Mr. Goulden's parish, and the first of its "Rules" declares that its affairs "rest absolutely in the hands of the vicar of St. Alphege, because as curate, he is (under the Bishop of the diocese) the one representative in the Parish of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Chief Shepherd and Bishop of our souls." Mr. Goulden thus presumes indirectly to claim the sanction of his bishop for his Romanising performances, which his lordship, there can be no doubt, dislikes as much as anyone; while the further claim of being the "one representative" of Jesus Christ in the parish savours of true priestly arrogance and pride. Every member of this Confraternity must, before his or her admission, "make an open profession of belief in the Catholic and Apostolic (?) religion" (p. 5). The vicar himself must ask each candidate certain questions. Here is one:—

Do you believe that there are truly and properly Seven Sacraments, instituted by Christ Himself as necessary to the salvation of mankind (though not necessary for everyone), namely, Baptism, Confirmation, Eucharist, Penance, Order, and Matrimony, and that of these Sacraments Baptism, Confirmation, and Order cannot be repeated without sacrilege? Answer: I do (p. 6).

We may well ask, remembering Mr. Goulden's ordination vows, how can he reconcile it to his conscience to make solemn promises, and then ignore them?

The opposition to Ritualism in the Church of England is not merely a contest against pretty dresses, decorated chancels, and musical services; it is, rather, a protest against the unscriptural doctrines which these things teach through the eye. The importance of ritual cannot, therefore, be overestimated. This is acknowledged by the Romanisers themselves. At the last annual meeting of the Cambridge branch of the English Church Union, that well-known Ritualist, the Rev. J. Bell-Cox, of Liverpool, said, "If they were fighting simply for ritual, then the sooner it was done away with the better, for it would prove to be a curse instead of a blessing. But it involved the greater question of doctrine." By means of ritual the people are educated in the Popish doctrines of the "Real Presence, and the Sacrifice of the Mass." The true Christian cannot but wage war against these doctrines, whether taught to the eye by ritual, or to the ear by preaching. Our Reformers protested with their blood against both the doctrine and the ritual of the Mass.

A curious and important case has lately been decided by the Canadian Supreme Court. Mr. Taché, private secretary of the Canadian Secretary of State at Ottawa, made a contract with a firm of booksellers at Montreal, to supply him with Victor Hugo's works. Subsequently the booksellers refused to fulfil the contract on the ground that the books required "were immoral and prohibited by the Roman Catholic Church." The moral consideration we can understand, but why the prohibition of the Papal Church should be considered as binding law in any part of Her Majesty's dominions is hard indeed to understand; and we are, therefore, much gratified to learn that Mr. Taché gained the day in his law suit, though, of course, this must not be taken as an implied approval of Victor Hugo's writings. Had the booksellers gained the day in this case, they might have gone even further, and refused to carry out a contract for the supply of Protestant Bibles, on the ground that they also are absolutely "prohibited by the Roman Catholic Church."

Several of the theological colleges of the Church of England need careful watching. Cuddesdon College, near Oxford, has for many years been notorious as a recruiting-ground for Rome. But Ely Theological College is likely ere long to yield abundant fruit of the Papal kind, if we may judge by the most recently adopted book of devotion, advertised as in use in that training institution for the clergy. This work is entitled "The Lesser Hours of the Sarum Breviary." It goes so far towards Rome as to have within its cover "The Hour Services for the Feast of Relics"! The whole work is tainted with idolatrous homage to the saints.

HARLESDEN.—We have been holding services for haymakers in this district. From 70 to 100 have gathered each Sunday. The plain tea provided and the kindness shown have been much appreciated by them, and we doubt not the simple Gospel preached has found a place in the hearts of many. Owing to the heavy rains, a good deal of distress has prevailed among them, which we have tried to alleviate, so that by our sympathy we might commend the Gospel of Christ.

"HEAR THE OTHER SIDE."—This pamphlet, by Rev. Thomas Connellan, in which he gives his reasons for leaving the Church of Rome, has had a very large circulation, fifteen thousand copies having been sold within fifteen months. With the view to its re-issue at a reduced rate the remaining copies of the present edition will be sold by the publishers, Messrs. Macredy & Kyle, of Dublin, at half price. The smaller pamphlet by Mr. Connellan, "An Appeal to his Brethren," has also had a very large circulation.

The Salvation Army.

DEMONSTRATION AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

The Army has so many anniversaries in the course of a year that it is a little difficult to keep step with it. The close of twenty-five years' work is, however, a well-defined landmark, and there would seem to be in it ample justification for our Army friends making it the occasion of a great "review" at the Crystal Palace. So the summonses went forth east and west, and north and south, from Dan even to Beersheba, with the result that on Tuesday of last week the big glass house on Sydenham-hill had under its roof a larger number of the members and adherents of this Church militant than has ever been collected in one place before. They took complete possession of the place for the day. The elements seemed to smile on the event with a day of brilliant and unwonted sunshine, and all went as merry as a silver wedding ought to do.

The only way to enjoy these Army gala days is to throw away, out of reach, one's critical cap, and to get into the swim as soon and as deeply as possible. In this spirit we find our way to the place of meeting shortly after 9 a.m., encountering on the way a long train load of Salvationists from Bristol who had left that city at four in the morning. The many who came from still more distant parts of the country had, of course, been astir at an even earlier hour. We heard some Yorkshire friends speak of having been in the train since midnight. What with this preliminary journey, a long, bustling, and somewhat bewildering day, and the trip by rail home again, it cannot be said that these Army people are not willing to make some sacrifice on behalf of their communion.

The day began with a consecration meeting at 7 a.m., and it contained altogether some twenty-five events, in some cases three or four going on simultaneously. The "reception of the General" at 9.30 in the Central Transept was a well-arranged and imposing display, but it need only be referred to here to introduce the touching message from Mrs. Booth that was unrolled and exhibited to the gaze of the sympathetic multitude. It ran thus:—

Clacton-on-Sea, July 15, 1890.

My Dear Children and Friends,—My place is empty, but my heart is with you. You are my joy and my crown. Your battles, sufferings, and victories have been the chief interest in my life these past twenty-five years. They are so to-day. Go forward. Live holy lives. Be true to the Army. God is your strength. Love and seek the lost, and bring them to the Blood. Make the people good. Inspire them with the spirit of Jesus Christ. Love one another. Help your comrades in dark hours.

I am dying under the Army flag; it is yours to live and fight under it. God is my salvation and refuge in the storm. I send you my love and blessing.

Catherine Booth.

Shortly after, "a foreign demonstration" was held in the Skating Rink, when the platform was crowded with warriors from France, Germany, the United States, Canada, Scandinavia, India, &c. There was only time for a few to speak, and these had to be brief, but they were certainly to the point. Their messages were full of fire and exultation. The best and most rousing speeches were those of Mr. Railton about Germany, and Mrs. Ballington Booth from the United States. Interspersed were songs from Canada, Sweden and Norway, and India. The General was in command, and kept things very lively, so that we were carried from land to land with a rapidity worthy of this fast age. Mrs. Ballington Booth greatly amused everybody by telling of a town in Michigan, where the Mayor, having illegally nailed up the doors of the Army barracks, was promptly arrested by the local captain, and had to beat an undignified retreat. The watchword of all the speakers was "advance," and the closing prayer of Maréchale Booth-Clibborn was full of faith for greater things in the days to come.

A passing look at the spectacle provided by the Junior Soldiers' Musical Demonstration on the great Orchestra, and then we find our way past the barriers into the "Representative Meeting" at noon in the Concert Hall. Here the General addressed a kind of manifesto to his Army comrades all over the world. After sketching briefly the wonderful progress made in recent years, Mr. Booth gave his brethren and sisters in arms to understand, and wanted them to pass on the news, that the doctrinal position of the Army was the same as it had always been; that there had been no sort of departure from the faith; that the chief officers at headquarters (including himself as General) were good men and true, deserving of every mark of confidence; and they were prepared to lead the Army on to still greater conquests. The note struck by the General in this address was almost defiant in its courageous confidence, and it was calculated to inspire his followers with some of the remarkable enthusiasm he always manifests.

At the close of this meeting, Commissioner Howard read a telegram that the officers proposed to send to Mrs. Booth in reply to her message:—

The representatives of the British corps of soldiers and officers from many nations, gathered in a representative meeting at the Crystal Palace on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Army's birth, send greeting to our Army mother, God's prisoner in affliction. We assure her, as we have assured the General, that neither prosperity nor adversity shall turn us from the main business which has engaged our utmost efforts in years past, namely, the promotion of God's glory in the salvation of the people of all races. We grieve over your absence, and we respond to your affectionate and solemn message delivered this morning. We pray God to relieve your suffering and to give you baptisms of joy and consolation, and an abundant entrance into his everlasting kingdom.

Certainly the most impressive event of the entire day was in the Central Transept. Every part of the reserved space was crowded; so was the lower half of the orchestra. It was not possible for the General's voice to reach such a vast concourse, and the plan was adopted of having the order of the services printed, so that all could follow intelligently, even if they could not hear. Song, prayer, selected Scriptures, and a searching self-examination, followed each other; everything leading up to the final scene when the General "opened the pool" and invited penitents to come forward for pardon, purity, or re-consecration. The responses to his calls were very numerous, and those who came seemed pretty equally divided between those in Army uniform and those without. The upper part of the orchestra was reserved for these seekers, and the test they had to pass through in order to reach the appointed place was such as to demand great strength of conviction and purpose. The function of the hour was carried out with much solemnity and impressiveness, and, so far as our observation went, was likely to be the most fruitful of the day's engagements.

Space would fail us in attempting any adequate description of the numerous minor events of the day—all of them, however, of an intensely practical character. The rescue work, the slum work, the prison brigade work, and the new "social wing," with its varied developments, were represented on the grounds. Some hundreds of "dossers" were fed. The new "Red Maria" van was suggestive of the prison gate, while the reproduction of the treadmill was realistic enough for the most ardent Salvationist. The "social wing" of the Army, which is to give attention to the unemployed and destitute masses, is, perhaps, the biggest thing they have yet attempted, and it is difficult to say whereunto it may grow.

The "Review and March Past" was splendidly arranged so far as spectacular effect went, and the on-looker had brought home to him in an overwhelming way the stupendous scope of the Army operations. For close on to two hours the General and his friends stood at the "saluting point," and heard the acclamations from the ten battalions of soldiers that passed by in seemingly endless array. A great musical festival inside the Palace followed. Altogether the day was one that will long stand out in the minds and memories of those present as an unparalleled display of religious enthusiasm.

SEA CHARMS FOR WEARY FORMS.

At present over seventy souls of all ages, from the baby of a few weeks, with its pale-faced, convalescent East-end mother, to the grey-haired and stooping "granny" of three score years and ten, are now enjoying the breezes of the ocean, and the delights of the sea-side, through the accommodation afforded by the desirable and well-placed "Home" of the North-east London Gospel Mission, at Lancing, Sussex. To these should be added about thirty more at the Home in Kent, making a total of 100, changing once a fortnight, thus giving a holiday to two hundred per month.

Fitful as the sunshine has been of late, yet the best use is made of every bright period, and each party returns with features browned, health renewed, and hearts filled with joy and happy memories of rolling tides, and shady woodland, and the brighter associations of a happy Christian Home. Rainy hours have been utilised, among other ways, for gathering the visitors into the Gospel room, attached to the Home, where, with sweet music and song, cloudy days go happily and cheerily by.

Could we but peep into the top back in Snook's rents, and take a glance down into the dingy back yards and foul court, the few comforts within, and the horrors without, these just vacated for a few days through the helping hand of "the Mission," how many would be stirred up to render a hearty assistance. As it is, we regret to say the good work has dragged heavily along this summer, and but for the indefatigable management, sustained by a faith that allows no disappointment to be sufficient to cast down, there would have been no "Lancing Home of Rest," for this year at least.

Mr. Chorley, the hon. director of the Home, writes:—"When Mr. Wenman gave us so kindly the noble block of premises on the sea-shore at Lancing early in the year, for the ailing London poor, we thought in our simplicity that all who heard of the delightful opening would gladly help us to furnish, but our hopes have been well nigh crushed over the disappointment endured.

Truly, we have furnished many of the airy rooms and executed sundry structural repairs and alterations, and not a few poor ones are already enjoying the sea breezes, gaining thereby health and strength for the remaining hours of life's brief day. But beyond a little help given by a few older friends of the Mission we have received scarcely anything, while the balance of existing liabilities comes to nearly £300. Still we perseveringly hope that others will come to our help when they hear exactly how we are placed.

Mr. Chorley's address is 2, Marquess-grove, Canonbury, London, N.

RESCUE WORK IN LIMEHOUSE.—Miss Forsaith, Mitre House, 8, Three Colt-street, Limehouse, E., says, in her last report, I am glad to tell of increased prosperity in the work. The girls have given practical proof of real improvement. It would touch you greatly if you could join one of our little gatherings for prayer, and hear the simple petitions that rise to God from the lips of these girls, that they may be faithful in their own lives and may be made a means of helping others less favoured than themselves. A new girl is at once surrounded by an atmosphere of prayer and of loving helpfulness. So that the spiritual part of the work is now largely shared by those who were once numbered among the most degraded. The Home is always full and cases waiting for admission. Many girls have been put out in situations during the year, and a fair proportion are doing well.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

ONCE again, in the providence of God, a great company of Christians, from different parts of the land, has made pilgrimage to this lovely Cumberland vale for the annual gathering. It is, of course, impossible to say whether the Convention here would have met with the same success if the surroundings were less perfect and attractive. Every time we come to Keswick we feel afresh that in the choice of a location for these assemblies we must recognise the distinct leading and purpose of God. To the many Christian workers who are engaged all the year amid the busy bustling life of our large cities, the quiet solitude of this place is to the spirit restful in the extreme. The mountains all around, towering grandly and majestically towards the skies, not only speak of the Divine handiwork, but help to lure the meditative soul Godward and heavenward. The voices of nature accord with the teachings of revelation in proclaiming the rich provision that our bountiful Father has made for the comfort and the wellbeing of his human children.

Even two days before the opening of the Convention we found every indication that the attendance this year would be more numerous than ever. On Saturday there was a large influx of friends who came to gain some inspiration from the quiet communion with nature's choice handiwork, and have their spirits attuned before the pressure of the Convention meetings. Since last year the veteran Mr. Bowker has gone from us, and Mr. Robert Wilson is now alone as convener. All the set speakers of last year are purposing to be here, except that Mr. Webb-Peploe takes the place of Pastor Monod, and in addition there will be Rev. E. W. Moore, Rev. B. F. Buxton, Rev. Colin Campbell, and Dr. White, of Winchester.

A fresh feature is the tented camp for young men, established in a field to the rear of the Great Convention Tent. This project was started and has been largely carried out by Mr. Budd, of Cork, though circumstances have prevented his personal attendance. His place in the oversight of the camp is taken by Mr. T. A. Bailey, secretary of the Cork Y.M.C.A., who has brought some of his fellow association members with him. There are twelve neat sleeping tents and one larger tent for a dining-room, the whole giving accommodation for some three dozen young men from different parts of the country. It is an interesting experiment, and one that will, we trust, find development from year to year. The elemental conditions are always deemed uncertain at Keswick, as the mountains are apt to draw the clouds earthwards, and these dwellers in tents will of course be specially affected by rain if it falls copiously. The weather last Saturday and Sabbath was most delightful, and there are many prayers and hopes that this favouring state of the physical atmosphere will continue throughout the week.

PRELIMINARY MEETINGS.

The opening prayer meeting in the tent on Saturday evening was very largely attended. Mr. Wilson presided, and the short address was by Rev. W. HASLAM. He directed his exhortations to his fellow-believers, urging them with all his accustomed vehemence to practical holiness of life, and to the performance of those good works that God has ordained for all his children. A hallowed influence pervaded the meeting, and it was felt to be a foretaste to the seasons of gracious Divine working that are anticipated during the week.

was a full day, reckoning the four meetings and the various services in the town. There was a very good gathering at the early prayer-meeting, and most fervent were the petitions for blessings on the Convention, as well as for blessing on the many missionaries working in heathen lands in circumstances of loneliness and special difficulty. Rev. Barclay F. Buxton preached in the forenoon in St. John's Church. In addition to the usual chapel services there was a meeting in connection with the Society of Friends, which was felt to be a very profitable time by those present.

A great concourse assembled in the tent for the afternoon evangelistic service, conducted by Rev. W. Haslam. He based his address on the murmuring words of the Scribes and Pharisees as recorded in Luke xv.: "This Man receiveth sinners, and eateth with them." The latter clause he reserved for the evening. His exposition of the first clause was characteristic of the man—quaint, blunt, direct, intense, and clear. He said the word "Man" in the text is not found in the original, and the expression used by these murmurers is one that carries with it a feeling of contempt and scorn. The preacher dwelt on the glorious fact that Christ, the Son of God, does receive sinners. Our Lord's reply in a parable was that if only one out of a hundred men were lost He would go after him and save him. That was to emphasise his solicitude for the souls of men. If He thus went after one, how much more would he go after the whole hundred! The first parable in this chapter Mr. Haslam expounded as illustrating the completeness of Christ's salvation. He goes after the lost sheep, finds it, takes it up in his arms, and Himself carries it all the way home. In regard to salvation, Christ does it all, and He does it perfectly. The second parable illustrates the work of the Holy Spirit in the conviction and salvation of the lost. He illumines the soul to see its natural condition. Some men simply preach the love of God to their congregations, and worldly people will take as much of that kind of preaching as you like to give them. Mr. Haslam spoke of a friend of his who had done so for twenty years, and never had a soul for his hire. He asked his friend what he preached. "The pardoning love of God," was the reply. "Oh, well, your people will think you a very dear man, and will probably give you a teapot." "Yes, they have done it already." The advice was given to him to alter his way of preaching, and tell the people they were lost, and in danger of going to hell; then they would change their opinion of him. He wrote a fresh sermon, and showed it to Mr. Haslam, who said it was very good, only it was upside down, and would have to be re-arranged. This was done, and when the sermon was preached in Mr. Haslam's church, three people at the close came into the vestry weeping for their sins, and asking what they must do to be saved. The preacher cried too, for it was something he was not accustomed to. The third parable of the prodigal son was designed to show the love of God the Father to the lost. This was amplified and applied in the preacher's striking way. The three parables he regarded also as setting forth different types of unbelievers. Many are like the piece of silver, without any feeling about spiritual things. Others, like the sheep, follow the fashions of society around them, and think that is enough; while yet others are rebellious and self-willed, like the prodigal. God can reach and save all kinds of men if they will but come and acknowledge their sinnership, and accept the salvation He has provided.

A children's service was held immediately after, when there was a very interesting congregation of young people, some of them very young. All listened, however, with the utmost attention to the simple, telling and practical words spoken by Mr. Hutchinson and Mr. Arrowsmith, of the Children's Special Service Mission. The address of the latter was largely in the catechetical form, and was well fitted to lodge in heart and memory the truth that they had been purchased by Jesus, with his blood, and ought to regard themselves as his to speak and work and walk for Him.

A FULL SALVATION.

Rev. W. HASLAM preached in the evening, after the ordinary church services, to a congregation that completely filled the Great Tent, while Rev. BARCLAY BUXTON preached to an overflow meeting. Mr. Haslam's sermon was a continuation of that in the afternoon, which dealt only with the foundation fact that Christ receives all kinds of sinners. The preacher now went on to unfold the last clause of the text, "And eateth with them." As a picture lesson he took up the action of the father towards the returned and repentant prodigal. When he had resolved to arise and go back to his father, he composed a long speech he intended to make. But the father did not allow him to finish it. God does not want any speechifying from the sinner; He wants him to come back. The father met his returning son with a kiss of forgiveness and reconciliation; what a new sensation it must have been for the prodigal. His fine speech was cut short by the father's command to the servants: "Bring forth the best robe and the ring and the shoes, and kill the fatted calf."

Why do preachers stop short at offering forgiveness of sins to the sinners? That is only a part of salvation. Why should sinners be content with that and nothing more? Suppose some one had left you a legacy of £12,345, would you say: "I am so humble, I really don't feel worthy to take so much as that; I will be content with £5"? You would not talk such nonsense. Then, if God has provided so many blessings for you, why not have them all? Many people come to these conventions in order to get a blessing, but what that blessing is they have no more idea than the man in the moon. What you need is a full reconciliation to your Heavenly Father.

The life of faith is one of reception, and means much more than forgiveness. When the father had received his son, and given him the kiss of forgiveness, what does he say next? "Bring forth the best robe, and put it on him." Here is justification for the believer—the robe of God's righteousness. He counts us as righteous in his sight. Now we are to walk in that uniform, and we must not be ashamed of it. How many young converts regards this justifying righteousness as an abstruse theological doctrine, and so they are full of doubts and fears. They look happy now and then, but sometimes they look so very dismal. If you have this robe of righteousness, why not wear it, and let the world know the change that has taken place?

Then there was the ring, which speaks of marriage union. It is a type of our oneness with Christ. We are as distinctly one with Him as formerly we were one with old Adam. Do you stand consciously in this your oneness with Christ?

"Put shoes on his feet," this is the protecting grace of Christ. As we walk through this sandy and thorny wilderness our feet need protection. When the children of Israel passed through the wilderness on their way to Canaan, their shoes never wore out; so it is with God's unceasing and effectual protection. He does not forgive us and leave us to shift for ourselves. Though surrounded by enemies of all kinds, His grace is sufficient for us.

Then there was the banquet and the feasting. Oh, let us rejoice in the possession of all this blessing, and we shall not walk in fear and doubt. We shall rather be thanking and praising God. Again I ask why believers should be content with mere forgiveness. The Romish Church has gone down because it does not teach justification by faith. If Satan can stop us at the point of forgiveness, he will have fine games with us; he will worry us night and day, and we shall have no lasting joy.

This rich provision of God's grace we receive by faith; let us have it all. Miss Havergal tried for a long time to be content with giving her lips for the Master; but for the last six years of her life she learned what it was to give her whole life, pouring it out in service for Him, so that she wrote—

Take my life, and let it be Consecrated, Lord, to Thee.

Mr. Haslam told of a young lady who had been converted, and who was invited to a "little dance." A friend whom she consulted said there was no harm in it. When people begin to reason in that way, there is something suspicious about it. We never argue that "there is no harm" in anything that we know to be good, such as reading the Bible. This young lady was told that she must not be too squeamish, and so she decided to go. But she had no proper shoes for a dance, and she went to the shoemaker to get a pair. He had none that would fit such beautiful feet, as he termed them; but he said he would make her a pair, if he had to sit up all night to do it. As she went away, she thought of what he had said about her beautiful feet, and the lines of Miss Havergal came to her mind—

Take my feet, and let them be
Swift and beautiful for Thee.

This thought came home to her with such power that she resolved she could not go even to this little carpet dance; so she went back and countermanded the shoes, and wrote declining the invitation. In closing his very earnest and practical address, Mr. Haslam asked his hearers, if they did not fully understand his exposition, to underscore this verse (Luke xv. 22), and ask the Lord in prayerful study to show them what it means. Then, when they had received all the blessing that God would bestow, they would be able to give out freely to others.

PRAYER FOR IRELAND.

At seven o'clock on Monday morning there was a great gathering for prayer on behalf of Ireland and Christian workers there. Mr. R. Wilson presided, and read some of the closing verses of Eph. vi., where the apostle urges the Church to be "strong in the Lord and in the power of his might," notwithstanding that they had to contend with the unseen forces of wickedness. Those who are spreading the pure Gospel in Ireland have a similar fight with Satan and his emissaries, and they need this boldness and courage of which Paul speaks to the Ephesians. Rev. Mr. Bradshaw offered earnest prayer on behalf of workers in Ireland, and was followed by General Hatt Noble, who presented a number of requests relating to work in the sister isle, which had been sent in. In his prayer he made special mention of those earnest evangelical clergymen and others who are now seeking to revive open-air Gospel preaching in different parts of Ireland, and who are meeting with so much bitter and undisguised opposition from Roman Catholics who are instigated by the priests. General Noble also made intercessory prayer for Rev. Thomas Connellan and all other converted priests; for the work of the Irish Church Mission, the Scripture Readers' Society, the Evangelisation and other Societies, that are testifying for the truth of the Gospel throughout the island.

CONSECRATION THROUGH SUFFERING.

One of the fresh voices heard at the Convention this year is that of Rev. BARCLAY F. BUXTON. He has had a somewhat prominent place in these preliminary gatherings, and is evidently a young man of abounding zeal and of great promise. He is the son of Mr. Sydney Buxton, and is, we are informed, going out as a foreign missionary, having been accepted by the C.M.S. He gave this morning, at the close of the season of prayer, a short address which might perhaps be regarded in some sense as a key-note or manifesto for the attenders at the Convention meetings. He founded his exhortations on the words of our Lord to the two sons of Zebedee, who desired places of high honour in his expected kingdom: "Ye know not what ye ask. Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with?" (Matt. xx. 22). These men, he said, desired a share in Christ's glory and kingship, and in this they were right; but they had no true conception of the way in which such a position could be attained—through humiliation, self-sacrifice, and even death itself. There are many who come to these conventions seeking to know, experimentally, the power and glory and kingly rule of Christ in heart and life, but they have not understood the way in which this great blessing is to be had. It can be obtained only by following the pathway trod by our Lord Himself, who had to endure persecution, misunderstanding, the contradiction of sinners, the agony of Gethsemane, and the cross of Calvary. An old preacher, who knew experimentally as well as most men what was meant by the baptism of the Holy Ghost, once told him that he almost shrank from inviting his fellow believers to a reception of this baptism, as he knew what it would cost them if it was to be a real thing. If those who come to this Convention are to receive such a baptism before its close, they must begin with a heartfelt consecration which recognises all that such a baptism involves.

Mr. Buxton quoted and applied 1 John ii. 6 as a parallel passage: "He that saith he abideth in Him, ought himself also so to walk even as He walked." This walk, he said, would mean continuous communion with God, and the doing of his holy will; the witnessing at home, in the social circle, and in the world. He most earnestly entreated his hearers to test themselves as to whether they were ready and able to undertake this. Let them count the cost, and if they could say, as before God, that they were able, they would be in a position to get and to receive the enduement with power which they desired. The message Mr. Buxton delivered was well adapted to the occasion, and gave indications, as we have said, of a career of devoted and fruitful service in the ministry of the Gospel.

Several heavily laden trains on Monday evening brought a large accession to the numbers already in Keswick. How they are all to be accommodated in the tent, capacious though it is, is difficult to see. The opening meeting of the Convention proper was densely crowded, and furnished a very inspiring spectacle. It is seldom that such an array of young and ardent life is collected under one roof. After a song of praise, Mr. WILSON, who presided, led in earnest thanksgiving to God, and read a portion of the conversation between Christ and the woman of Samaria. Then Rev. Evan Hopkins prayed that far greater results might follow from this than from any previous Convention. The opening address was by from the story of Jacob raising an altar at Bethel, recorded in Gen. xxxv. His words were weighty and full of suggestion. As Jacob went to Bethel in response to God's call, so the attenders at the Convention ought to be assured that their coming was of his ordering. The great truth revealed by God to Jacob here was, that henceforth he was to live at the open gate of heaven. God has already set us in heavenly places in Christ, and our home may be our Bethel. What a wondrous change it would make in the lives of most Christians, if they dwelt beneath the open heaven, and in constant communication with God!

But one condition is, that an altar be built for sacrifice. Our altar of sacrifice is Christ's sufficient atonement. We begin and end at the Cross. Christ's sacrifice for us demands a sacrifice from us. We must offer up ourselves; we must be ready to relinquish what we hold most dear, that God may either consume it, or return it as his own gift. Jacob commanded his household to destroy every strange god. The Christian must banish all that savours of idolatry. Idolatrous garments or ornaments exist in wondrous profusion among Christian people. For the second time Jacob got the new name of Israel. Again, God is offering us a new life—his own wondrous life. Jacob erected a pillar of memorial, and poured oil thereon, emblematic of the Holy Ghost, whose fulness God is waiting to bestow.

REV. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE

followed with a powerful message. These gatherings, he said, are remarkable, but they are also times of peculiar peril to those who have attended often, and have become habituated to the teaching without corresponding results in the life. This is a great stumbling-block to young believers, but the cause of failure is not in God. Taking up the conflict between Elijah and the priests of Baal, Mr. Peploe applied its lessons. Would to God that evangelical Christians were as zealous and devoted as those priests were in their false worship, and as many are in modern times whom we regard as holding false doctrines of ritual! It is very noteworthy that Elijah does not build a new altar. He only repairs the one that had fallen down. We come to Keswick with no novelty of teaching, but to revive some forgotten truths. One of these is the truth that Christ is our Sanctification; that He is not only the Pardoner, but the Keeper and the Energiser for service. God forbid that we should at Keswick teach the perfection of the creature. We know no perfection, either in the creature, or through the creature, or even for the creature, down here on earth. We know only of Christ as Saviour representing us in heaven; but we believe He will take possession here of so much of the creature as we can by faith surrender to Him.

What do we know experimentally of such things are indicated by the Saviour's answers to Satan's temptation: "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God"? Or again: "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God," touching on the soul's attitude towards God?

Mr. Webb-Peploe said we need not shout and cry, like Baal's priests, as though God were unwilling to bless. He is more ready to give than we are to ask. Let us deal with Him reverently, humbly, discreetly, and piously, without any chicanery, as Elijah did in calling on his God, when the fire came suddenly but lastingly, and burnt up the sacrifice. As Elijah was commanded to slay all the priests of Baal, so we must bring to the death what is false in us, and leading us away from God. Then, like the prophet, we can say, "Get thee down quickly, for there is the sound of abundance of rain." God's blessing will come and refresh us, so that we shall be ready to go to the ends of the world as his missionaries.

A meeting was held in the Drill Hall, for the Young Women's Christian Association, in the afternoon.

On Tuesday morning, a very large early meeting was held in the tent, when a searching address was delivered by Dr. WHITE on tests of discipleship in Luke xiv. The three "cannots" in the chapter were spoken of, showing how the true disciple must be willing to part with all that is dear, if it leads astray from a close following in the Master's footsteps.

INFIDELITY IN THE ARMY AND NAVY.—Sir,—Last year, Mr. W. Punter, Naval Scripture Reader, Portsmouth, appealed in your columns for 20,000 Gospel booklets for distribution on board H.M. ships taking part in the Royal Naval Review. I responded to this appeal by making him a free grant of 4300 anti-infidel publications. In acknowledging the same, he said: "I have now worked among our soldiers and sailors upwards of twenty-seven years, and I am convinced there is an increasing need for such literature, as infidelity is alarmingly on the increase." Since then I have laboured in Plymouth, Devonport, and Stonehouse and for the past month have been conducting meetings in the various Homes. Specimen tracts and particulars will be sent on application.

A GREETING FROM CHINA.

Dear Friend,—I have received the subjoined letter from Christian Chinese women, with a request to forward it to the Christian press in Great Britain. Surely the subject of the calamitous opium habit is one upon which Chinese women have a right to speak, for none can feel more deeply than they its ruinous consequences upon home life.

Yours in His service to Whom all things are possible,
Alfred S. Dyer.

"The Bombay Guardian" Office, Bombay, June 27.

THE CHRISTIAN WOMEN OF TUNG CHOW, NORTH CHINA, SEND GREETINGS TO THE CHRISTIAN WOMEN OF ENGLAND.

We hear that the loving hearts of the Christians of England are moved with pity for China, because of the misery caused by opium, and that you are uniting heart and strength to remove this curse. For this reason we rejoice, and pray that the God of all power may speed the accomplishment of this thing.

We would now briefly place before you some of the evils of opium in China.

Since the introduction of opium into China by avaricious traders several decades ago, its use has spread into every region. Formerly the harmful use of tobacco existed in China; now from without is added opium, and it has caused untold injuries to the bodies, the homes, the country, and the State. And these injuries, like a pestilence, spread widely, and increase from day to day. We will speak of three great evils resulting from opium.

(1) Indulgence in the opium habit gradually weakens the body. The energies are lessened, the face appears withered and sallow, yellow like clay, and dry like reeds. The cold of winter and the heat of summer cannot be endured. Burdens cannot be borne, and walking is difficult. Although such men can move about, they are like the paralytic and the lame—although still among the living, they are like the dead.

(2) Indulgence in opium leads to habits of idleness and daintiness of appetite. Night is turned into day, and day into night; and they know not the value of time, or the importance of attention to duty. Although weighty matters may be at hand, they are wilfully neglected for a few whiffs of opium. They do not distinguish between what is suitable for the poor and the rich. They loathe coarse food, and crave dainties; and when at last their property is wasted away, then do they realise that this is the bitter fruitage of the use of opium.

(3) Those who indulge in opium, as a class are vicious in heart, wicked in deed, evil in thought, impure in word, false and crafty in intercourse with others. What is still more to be deplored, the will to do right is lost, and although they deeply know the harmful effects of their opium habit, and may wish to leave it, they are unable to do so. Hence it is very difficult to lead this class to repent and turn to God. Although some may enter the Church, many do so from false motives, and the true-hearted ones are weak and easily turn aside and fall.

From all this you can see that foreign opium in China is a greater scourge than war or pestilence.

Now that our Heavenly Father has opened the ears of our sisters in England, and led you to listen to these evils of opium, therefore we earnestly beseech you to use the utmost efforts of your hearts to arrest this trade.

In this way the humanity of England will be manifested, the great evil of China will be removed, and the holy name of God will be glorified.

Respectfully submitted by the Christian women of Tung Chow. (Translated from the Chinese by Mrs. D. Z. Sheffield, of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, Tung Chow.)

THE McALL MISSION.—Correcting a typographical error in a recent issue, we are glad to announce that Mrs. Robert McAll will continue to act as corresponding secretary of this Mission, in place of her late husband. Her address is 17, Tressillian-crescent, St. John's, S.E.

MR. VARLEY IN NEW ZEALAND.

Dear Sir,—I have sent you two copies of newspapers, one of which contains an account of a mission held by our friend Mr. Henry Varley, in Auckland, N.Z. His visit lasted seven weeks and was eminently successful. He delivered a series of Bible-readings in the afternoons, before 500 to 600 hearers, extremely instructive and profitable, and in the evenings he gave addresses in our largest public hall, containing 1500 to 1600 persons, on special subjects. On the Sundays he preached in the mornings in one church or other, and in the afternoons and evenings, in the City Hall, to crowded audiences. He delivered three lectures to "men only" which were also crowded to the utmost. Some 400 to 500 "testified" at the various meetings. At the conclusion of the mission about 500 met for the Lord's Supper. He has now gone on to Wellington, and will probably visit the other Southern cities before he returns to Melbourne, where he has his home for the present.

I feel confident that his orthodox expressions upon "perfectionism" have done much good and strengthened many. Another topic on which he was very outspoken was "Conditional Immortality," on which there had been a good deal of discussion for some years here, and several preachers of that sect (for such it is) both in the city and elsewhere. One of the papers I have sent contains the substance of one of his addresses on this subject, the Rich Man and Lazarus. I am glad to say that the gentleman who leads this school of thought, notwithstanding the severity with which Mr. Varley criticised his creed, maintained the most friendly relations with him, and gave him very valuable assistance in other directions. On the whole it is certain that no religious mission has ever been held in this city, or, I might say, in the colony, which has done so much to stir up the stagnation and apathy of the people, or to correct the errors into which professing Christians had fallen.

My wife and self have been readers of The Christian for fully 20 years, I think; we owe much to it in many ways, and I am glad to have the excuse for writing a few lines.

In conclusion, we had the happiness of having Mr. Varley for our guest for six out of the seven weeks that he was here, and a more agreeable guest we never had in our fifty years of housekeeping.

I may add that he seems in excellent health, and, humanly speaking, likely to be available for the service of his Lord for many years to come.—Yours faithfully, William Fox.

Auckland, N.Z., June 24.

The following appeared in the Auckland Leader of May 23:—

Mr. Henry Varley's mission is closed, and he has now left our city, perhaps for ever, and it is opportune to say a few last words about Mr. Varley and his work. No one who came into personal contact with the remarkable evangelist could fail to be struck with his frank and warm-hearted manner. His physical endurance was great, and if he had not possessed an excellent physique he could not have gone through one tithe of the work he performed in Auckland. Whatever he attempted he did enthusiastically, and no evangelist has ever visited our shores who was more able, earnest, sincere, and self-devoted.

It becomes as impossible to indicate the great and varied work which Mr. Varley did, as to estimate his influence. Every day during the seven weeks he remained here he was, like his Lord and Master, about his heavenly Father's business, and his heart was all aglow with love and sympathy for others. His contributions to the vexed question of sinlessness in man were marked by an incisiveness, breadth of view, grasp of Scripture, and knowledge of human nature, such as is rarely evidenced in Auckland. As for his address and article on "Conditional Immortality," it is admitted that they were crushing and unanswerable blows to that theory.

The amount of work which the evangelist got through was surprising. His Bible-readings attracted vast numbers of persons day after day, and his elucidations of some parts of Scripture were acknowledged by many to have been helpful to them in the conflicts and general experiences of the Christian life. It is an undoubted fact that few clergymen of any church here, and of course no laymen, were a match for Mr. Varley in his thorough knowledge of the Bible, and his happy facility of imparting to others what he knew. Not the least of his services were his sermons preached in various pulpits in the city and suburbs, and his catholicity was seen in his readiness to preach the Gospel everywhere.

At his last meeting he tried to strengthen the hands of the ministers by counselling those who might want to be baptised not to leave their respective churches; and by urging converts to join some church, if they were not already associated with one.

A striking feature of Mr. Varley's mission was his lectures to men, which were characterised by a knowledge of human nature, boldness, common sense, tact, and impressiveness, seldom combined in evangelists who visit Auckland.

Although the mission was not so free from faults that perfect men and jealous rivals could not pick holes in it, there can be no doubt that he did much good in Auckland. He stimulated thought, gave an impulse to social purity, threw new and bright side-lights on Scripture, energised Christian workers, removed obstacles from doubters, induced a greater love of Bible study, fired veteran local preachers, stimulated thought, and made men feel that they were in the presence of one like the old Hebrew prophets, who were amongst God's best earthly workers. Taking the mission as a whole, it was the most important one ever held in Auckland, and we hope that the good seed sown will spring up and bear good fruit for many years to come.

FARMING ABROAD.—Mr. W. H. Newett, of the Y.M.C.A., 56, Peter-street, Manchester, writes:—"It will interest some of your readers to learn that the 115th party of young men, going with the consent of their friends to learn farming abroad, will sail from Liverpool on the 21st August for the North-west of Canada, in connection with our Young Men's Emigration Advice Society. These parties are open to young men from all parts of the country, whether members of the Y.M.C.A. or not. They go under appointed leaders; they buy their own tickets and outfits, and take with them letters of introduction; and those of them who have no previous knowledge of farming receive, usually, for the first year, board and lodging and not less than £1 per month. I can supply particulars of outfit, &c."

REV. G. G. FROGGATT, of Monte Video, writes on June 18:—Rev. A. M. Milne (agent of the American Bible Society) and Rev. C. W. Drees, D.D., superintendent of the American Methodist Episcopal Church Mission in this and in the Argentine Republic, have just returned from a lengthy tour along the West Coast of South America. Their tongues have not been silent, nor have their minds been inactive during this visit. Many a heart has been gladdened and encouraged to persevere after the kingdom of heaven through the manly words and cheerful sunshiny countenances of these two faithful and experienced servants of God. Rev. F. Penzotti has established a faithful little company of native believers some 160 strong in the city of Callao, the second town in importance in the Republic of Peru. Not being at present in the regular pastorate, and busy in the employment of the American Bible Society, brother Penzotti has had to leave his little congregation in order to visit Antofogasta and Bolivia. Unfortunately, none has been left behind capable of supplying his place, and the little flock is surrounded by many enemies. Will your readers pray that God may send to them some consecrated and courageous leader?

REV. EDWARD W. MOORE,

Emmanuel Church, Wimbledon.

IN days when the tides of Ritualism and Rationalism seem to be setting in within the pale of the Established Church of England, it is refreshing to be reminded that there are many of its clergy who hold fast to the simple truths of the Gospel, and who hail as living members of the one Church of Christ all who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. No one who knows Rev. E. W. MOORE will accuse him of a want of catholicity of spirit. His favourite motto is "Love one another," and he certainly acts out his conviction, that we need all the saints in order to comprehend the love of Christ which passeth knowledge (Eph. iii. 17-19).

Mr. Moore was born at Coleshill, in Berkshire, in 1844. His father, a man of remarkable ability and force of character, was well known, not only as a distinguished agriculturist, but as a champion of evangelical truth. In concert with his friend and neighbour, the late Rev. H. Barne, vicar of Faringdon, he did much to maintain the cause of Christ in his own neighbourhood. In later years he had the privilege not only of working but of suffering for Christ, losing at a stroke a pleasant home and the most valuable of his local appointments, through his unflinching adherence to the principles of the Reformation. The circumstances of this severe trial were much commented upon at the time both in the secular and religious press, and Mr. Moore, Sen., received expressions of hearty sympathy from many well-known friends of evangelical truth. He and his wife have since passed away in the faith and hope of the Gospel, and to their prayers and example their only son, the subject of this sketch, feels that he owes much of the blessing which has followed his labours.

Mr. Moore was educated at Blackheath Proprietary School, when Rev. E. J. Selwyn, now rector of Pluckley, was head-master. From school he went to Oxford, matriculating at Wadham College in 1862. Here he was a friend and contemporary of Dr. Jayne, the present Bishop of Chester, Rev. W. Hay Aitken, and others, now well known. Mr. Aitken's spiritual influence was distinctly felt even at that period, and during a time of religious awakening in college, mainly brought about by his instrumentality, Mr. Moore was much impressed; but the time of his final decision for Christ was not yet. He graduated in honours at the close of 1866, having previously been elected a Hebrew exhibitioner of his College.

In the course of the next year he was ordained to the curacy of Stansted Mountfichet, Essex, under the late Canon Luard, where he laboured for nearly two years. It was here that the spiritual crisis of his history was really reached. He worked acceptably and well in the parish, and employed his spare time in reading for a University Theological Scholarship at Oxford (the Denyer and Johnson), to which he was elected in the spring of 1869. But, though thus successful, he was not at rest. Referring to the mental and spiritual conflicts through which he passed at this time, he has often said he has "no need to be told there is a hell, for he has felt it."

At length his health suffered under the continued strain. He resigned his curacy, and for some months gave up all ministerial work. The thought that he had taken holy orders while himself unconverted was such a burden to him that he shrank from ever venturing to preach again. Gradually, however, God, who was leading his servant by a way that he knew not, spoke peace to his soul; and in the beginning of the next year we find him settled as curate of Lowestoft with Rev. W. Hay Chapman, then rector of Lowestoft, now of All Souls', Langham-place, with whom a friendship was soon established which has never since been interrupted. Here Mr. Moore, who had previously married the daughter of the late Mr. H. Monck Mason, of The Dargle, Bray, co. Wicklow (a lady almost as well known as himself, for her interest in the work of the Y.W.C.A.), spent a short year of happy service.

At the close of 1870 he accepted the incumbency of Brunswick Chapel, Upper Berkeley-street, W., offered him by the late Viscount Portman, and came to take up his residence in London. The church had been closed for two years during rebuilding, and Mr. Moore had to begin from the beginning in circumstances of unusual difficulty. He steadily held on his way, and gradually gathered round him a devoted band of worshippers and workers. An extensive prayer union was formed, which met every Saturday afternoon in different friends' drawing-rooms, and on Sunday evenings in the church. Many have been the testimonies to blessings received at these useful and happy gatherings. A constant aggressive evangelistic work was carried on in connection with the Sunday evening services and after-meetings, and in the open air. As many as six special missions, attended by marked spiritual blessing, were held during his incumbency by well-known missioners.

The Marylebone Home for Incurables (236, Marylebone-road), a most useful institution, which still flourishes under the care of a local committee and the hon. superintendent, to whose energy and management its success is mainly due, was also started in connection with Brunswick Chapel, and a Convalescent Home at Worthing, which is now closed.

In addition to the work carried on at Brunswick Chapel, Mr. Moore, throughout nearly the whole period of his ministry in London, was actively connected with the movement for the deepening of spiritual life, which was affecting the Church at large. He himself received a great and abiding blessing at the very commencement of this movement, in May, 1873, although it was not until the month of May, 1881, at a great Salvation Army meeting in Exeter Hall, that he fully experienced the blessing of heart-rest (Matt. xi. 29.) He was present at the never-to-be-forgotten Conventions at Oxford in 1874, and at Brighton in 1875, and in the autumn of the latter year was largely instrumental, in conjunction with Rev. E. H. Hopkins, and the late Mr. H. F. Bowker, in setting on foot the London meetings for the deepening of spiritual life, which have been continued ever since. They were held in the first instance in rooms formerly occupied by Y.M.C.A. in Great Marlborough-street, but subsequently, at Mr. Moore's suggestion, they were removed to Stafford Rooms, as being more accessible. He closed a fortnightly public Bible-reading he had for some time conducted there with much acceptance, in order to throw himself, with his people, the more heartily into the new effort.

Mr. Moore's congregation was mainly composed of earnest Christians, many of them actively engaged in their Master's service, who came Sunday by Sunday for help and refreshment. It was the remark of Rev. G. C. Grubb at the last mission held in the church, that "there were too many Christians at Brunswick Chapel; they needed scattering." Looking back, his words seem almost prophetic, for since that time many have gone to the ends of the earth carrying the good seed of the Kingdom with them. Missionaries from Brunswick Chapel are now labouring in India, China, North-West America, and Africa, besides the far greater number of earnest toilers at home. It is satisfactory to know that the Gospel is still faithfully preached in Brunswick Chapel by its present incumbent, Rev. W. Mitchell Carruthers.

To return to Mr. Moore's share in "the Keswick movement," as it has been sometimes called, it may be said that what he feels to be of special importance in connection with the teaching is the work of the Holy Spirit in the sanctification of the believer. This is indeed no new doctrine, but as old as the Acts of the Apostles. He utterly disclaims the idea of sinlessness as attainable here, believing that the most advanced Christian to the last moment of his life needs the merit of Christ's death and the virtue of his intercession. At the same time he is convinced that the outpouring of the Spirit upon all flesh mentioned in Joel ii. 28-32, and quoted by Peter in Acts ii. 17-21, for purification of heart and enduement with power, is not to be limited to the first day of the dispensation, but is the privilege still of all believers who are prepared to receive it. The day on which he himself, in circumstances of the deepest trial and suffering in which his faith and obedience were tested to the very uttermost, received this unspeakable blessing, Thursday, October 30, 1884, he will ever regard as the most solemn in his life's history.

It may be added that Mr. Moore's great fear in connection with the movement at the present time is lest it should lose in depth what it gains in breadth. It is one thing to be seeking the best blessings Christ has to bestow; it is quite another to fulfil the conditions on which alone they can be given. "Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of, and to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with" (Matt. xx. 22)? is surely a question which Christ still puts to every seeker after a place of nearness to Himself.

During the last year of Mr. Moore's incumbency at Brunswick Chapel, he organised Church Army work, under the supervision of Rev. F. S. Webster, now rector of St. Thomas's, Birmingham, who was then his curate, and also Principal of the Church Army Training Home. A corps of over a hundred warriors of this Church militant was raised from his congregation. Among his former valued helpers at Brunswick Chapel should also be mentioned Rev. H. Lindsay Young, now vicar of St. John's, Portsea; and Rev. A. C. Dudley Ryder, now vicar of High Cliffe, Hants.

In the autumn of 1886, Mr. Moore, whose health had been tried by sixteen years' incessant work in London, accepted the incumbency of Emmanuel Church, Wimbledon, where he succeeded the late lamented Rev. Clarmont Skrine. Here he found a solid foundation for future work laid by the untiring labours of his beloved predecessor. It has been his happiness since following in that good man's steps to endeavour to develop and extend the work which he found so well begun. Since Mr. Moore has been at Wimbledon, the church, which was formerly an iron structure, has been solidly rebuilt in brick, and enlarged by the addition of a transept and chancel, and the congregation has been nearly doubled in the same time.

Around Emmanuel Church is grouped every variety of Christian agency. The work of Sunday-schools, Bible-classes, home and foreign missions, temperance work, and open-air services have all a place. Mr. Moore is surrounded by as devoted a body of Christian laymen and church workers as any minister of the Gospel could desire. His health is wonderfully restored, and his strength renewed. He has established a Missionary Union, which issues a quarterly paper, containing letters from missionaries personally known to himself or his congregation. Monthly meetings are held, and accounts given by members of the congregation as to different parts of the mission field. Two ladies have recently gone out from Wimbledon as missionaries—one to Palestine, the other to China.

We may say, again, that Mr. Moore's great principle in Christian work in public has been to recognise as one in Christ all those who are vitally united to the same Lord. His attitude, indeed, in this respect is identical with that of the Evangelical Alliance, of which he is a member. It is on this principle that, while yielding to none in attachment to his own communion, he constantly takes part in Union meetings, whether at Mildmay Conference, where he has frequently spoken; the Evangelical Alliance meetings in the Week of Prayer; or at Keswick, or elsewhere, not asking whether those with whom he is for the time associated are Episcopalians, or Baptists, or Salvationists, or whether he agrees with them in every particular of their doctrine or church government, but whether they belong to Christ, and, if so, rejoicing to know that they are his brethren and his fellow-servants.

Mr. Moore is the author of many New Year booklets, which have had an extensive circulation. His shilling volumes on the Christian Life, entitled, "The Overcoming Life," "The Royal Progress," and "Daybreak in the Soul," have also been widely read, and much appreciated, both in this country and the colonies.

Universal Peace Congress.

God's sure word of prophecy that, when He comes to reign whose world-wide right it is, "nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more," is an encouragement to those who "seek peace and pursue it" from Christian motives. It is also well that philosophers and moralists who unhappily do not acknowledge the Prince of Peace should nevertheless recognise the evils and folly of war. In deference to the prejudices of the last-named persons, the Procedure Committee decided that the daily sessions of the Congress convened by the Peace Society, and held throughout last week in Westminster Town Hall, should not be opened with prayer, but suggested that those who so desired might assemble for silent devotion a few minutes before each sitting opened. Delegates from Germany, France, Italy, Austria, America, and other countries, took part in the meetings, which, we are glad to say, were largely attended, and appeared to secure more than usual notice by the secular press.

On Sunday afternoon, 13th inst., and in connection with the Congress, Canon Holland preached a special sermon in St. Paul's Cathedral. On Monday there was a business meeting, followed by an inaugural address from the President, Hon. David Dudley Field. Tuesday meeting's sitting was devoted to the and was presided over by Sir Wilfrid Lawson, who said, though men of different tongues were present, God has made of one blood all the nations of the earth, to dwell in unity. Religious men must be political, if political men are to be religious. The Times had falsely prophesied that the House of Commons would not be influenced by the great religious associations; but, as Mill had well said, one man with a belief is equal to a hundred with only an interest. All great reforms have arisen from consciences awakened to righteousness. If it be good to teach a Sunday-school boy to love his enemy, it is inconsistent to put him in the army when he becomes a man. Though not many mighty, not many noble, espouse the cause of peace, the democracies of Europe are beginning to do so. Everybody is laughed at who tries to do good, but peace advocates work with an eye to the future.

A rather desultory discussion took place upon the exact terms of two resolutions, the first to the effect that the principle of man's brotherhood should be extended to nations; the second recognising the important influence of Christianity upon moral and political progress, and urging upon all teachers of religion and morality a more prominent advocacy of the peace and goodwill taught by Jesus Christ, philosophers, and moralists. The italicised words represent the substance of an amendment, and an addition was also carried recommending that the third Sunday in December be specially set apart for the purpose indicated.

A paper by Mr. Edward Burtt, of Leeds, was read: "The Brotherhood of Man: how to promote it." We can bid men listen to words from above, which shall sway the spirit of the crowd. The tendency of the times to less dogma and more life, favours us. We have reached the transition state of happy inconsistency in following up our armies with a "Red Cross" contingent. While we cannot give up pulpit and platform, we need the raw material of the word-loom: deeds of love on the basis of our common relation to God, deeds which shall flood men's thoughts about war with a blaze of moral illumination.

Papers were read in précis: "Our Brotherhood a Power," by Miss Cooke; "The Teaching of Prophecy," by Mr. George Gillett, showing that Isaiah and Micah foretell a peace maintained by faith in God alone; another paper by the same writer, illustrative of the words of Josephus, "We can produce no example wherein our fathers got any success by war, or failed of success when, without war, they committed themselves to God"; "Christ's teaching" (a victory of love), by Rev. F. M. Cameron; "Inviolability of Human Life," by M. Sarrazin, of the Familistère, of Guise. Mrs. Wigham's paper showed that each age worships its own thought of God in power in the past, wisdom in the present, but love in the future; Signor Moneta's paper calls upon all churches to help in universal pacification; Mr. George W. Minier (U.S.A.) would have all ministers of religion actively engaged for peace; Mr. H. S. Newman showed that war is based on distrust of God and man, and warmly commended the arbitration treaty of the Pan-American Congress, the new Magna Charta of America; and Mr. J. B. Braithwaite proved that among the early Christians, a large body of influential opinion (which had confessors and martyrs) was altogether opposed to the idea that war is lawful for the Christian.

M. Frédéric Passy presided over the afternoon discussion upon and quoted the saying of Frederick of Prussia that if soldiers were philosophers they would not fight. A report was adopted appointing several gentlemen to address a peace letter to the crowned heads of Europe. Mr. GRAHAM moved that teachers of history should instruct the young as to the grave evils accruing to man in all ages from war, which has been waged, as a rule, for the most inadequate reasons. His paper showed that recent science teachings, such as in Herbert Spencer's works, favour the cause of peace. Frau FISCHER-LETTE said women should take strong measures to prevent husbands, sons, and brothers being dragged away to the torments of war. All have to pay the cost, if not to bear the wounds. M. SARRAZIN moved a protest against military exercises in schools. History should be rewritten in a higher sense, and give prominence to self-sacrificing characters. Mr. W. W. EVANS DARBY, secretary of the Peace Society, condemned military drill in schools, because it could not be separated from its debasing associations, is morally injurious, and is unnecessary when gymnastic exercises are available. Mr. HODGSON PRATT moved a resolution urging teachers to honour deeds of peace and condemn the loss and misery caused by war; and imploring parents to exercise care for the right education of their children in this respect. Influential young men of one country would do well to pass their holidays in another. The modern extension of the old system of travelling scholarships might evolve mutual respect for foreign neighbours, and destroy ignorant prejudice.

EDUCATION AND ARBITRATION,

On Wednesday morning the subject was

NATIONAL CONTROL OVER DECLARATIONS OF WAR.

The PRESIDENT believed that control was not in the hands of the executive anywhere upon the two American Continents. At any rate, in his own Continent, Congress alone could declare war. Mr. W. MARTIN WOOD's paper advocated the adaptation of the juridical principles of the Fecial College of ancient Rome to modern conditions, upon materials found in the Privy Council of the United Kingdom. He moved the establishment for each nation of a Juridical Court, for examining and judging the causes of war; and that the executive shall not declare or begin hostilities until judgment has been delivered against, and reparation demanded in vain from an offending nation. L'Abbé DE FOURNEY's paper, seconding the resolution, stated that the aim should be prevention of all but defensive wars. No member of the Fecial College was permitted to be a soldier. M. ARNAUD moved an amendment denying the right of war declarations (which are unnecessary for legitimate defence), and deciding that the code of war shall not be discussed. A resolution reconciling the two views, was adopted at a subsequent session of the Congress.

CIVILISED AND SAVAGE RACES.

Sir JOSEPH PEASE, M.P., as President of the English Peace Society, took the chair in the afternoon. He believed the Congress to be representative of growing opinion among civilised nations. If we agree that war is wrong morally, politically, economically, and from a Christian standpoint, we must at least endeavour to influence men for peace. The harvest is daily getting riper. As Christian knowledge and political information spread, there is evidently a great feeling among the peoples to check the "mad race" of governments. The working classes are more and more indisposed to furnish the sinews of war, and more ready to hold out to other peoples the right hand of fellowship.

Mr. BRAITHWAITE moved that the universal rights of man require the territories, liberties, and property of weak races to be protected by concerted action of nations; that such peoples be shielded from the vices of so-called advanced races; and that the Congress heartily approves the conclusions of the late Anti-Slavery Conference in Brussels. Civilisation had too often marked its course by destruction; but, on the other hand, there were the famous examples of William Penn, of the Hudson's Bay Company, and of the Dominion government of Indians in the North-west of Canada. The slave trade of Africa would soon be a thing of the past. Nations should control their subjects travelling to distant parts, and colonial administrators should act in good faith. Especially must protection be afforded from poisonous spirits, from the sale of arms, and from slavery.

Mr. H. R. FOX-BOURNE said large accessions of territory, especially in South Africa, were to be deprecated. We must require from the natives no more subjection than is involved in observance of contracts freely made and not extorted. Mr. HODGSON PRATT moved a protest against prejudices and misrepresentations, as indirect causes of war, and a recommendation to the Inter-Parliamentary Committee to consider the establishment of an international newspaper, and to support the commercial, industrial, and scientific union of peoples. The grave responsibility of women to exercise their influence in the maintenance of peace was also brought forward.

ARBITRATION AND DISARMAMENT.

The President took the chair at Thursday morning's sitting. Mr. ROWLAND B. HOWARD'S paper dealt with conditions of disarmament. Armament is no guarantee of peace, but provokes emulation. The judicial substituted for the military method of obtaining rights, and disarmament follows as a matter of course. It should be gradual, so as not to augment idlers, strikers, and mobs, and must be mutual. Mr. Howard moved a series of resolutions: affirming that Europe impatiently waits the removal of mutual distrust, so as to settle the problems of labour and poverty; recommending an early Disarmament Congress representative of European States; expressing the conviction that public opinion would support the first nation to dismiss a considerable number of soldiers; and suggesting active peace propaganda, especially at times of Parliamentary election.

The paper by Mrs. BELVA A. LOCKWOOD showed disarmament not only practical, but feasible. Switzerland had virtually neither army nor navy; Belgium had had no war since the "Treaty of London"; President Carnot said it should be his mission to preserve peace. The Emperor William declared it is the mission of Germany to preserve peace, but thinks this can only be done by keeping up an army. The Congress must teach him another way. Mr. C. DEPRAZ presented an appeal to the German Emperor to take the initiative. Mr. DARBY'S paper showed that if half the intellect lavished upon armament and new sources of taxation were spent in earnest endeavour to establish peace, we should succeed. Where there is a will there is a way. Mr. R. A. MOULVI, of Bombay, said no people desire peace more than his countrymen. There had been too many wars in Asia. Europe should set a better example. The Shah of Persia is for peace.

In the afternoon the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress received members of the Congress at the Mansion House. At a meeting in the Egyptian Hall, the Lord Mayor said he had never presided at any other meeting with greater pleasure.

At Friday morning's sitting, under the direction of the President, a resolution was presented congratulating the friends of peace on the result of the International American Conference last April, and recommending it to the attention, of European statesmen; also expressing satisfaction at the action of the Spanish Senate, on June 10, at like action by the Norwegian Storthing, by the Italian Chamber, and by the Congress of the United States.

Dr. PANKHURST read a paper, showing that out of the treaty system and the concert of nations might be evolved an Internationa Tribunal, with coercive agencies to secure obedience. A resolution was approved for the preparation of an address from the Congress to the principal religious, commercial, labour, and peace organisations in civilised countries, urging them to petition Government authorities for the formation of peace tribunals. After a paper by Mr. Pratt, a resolution was carried expressing regret at the failure of the Berlin Conference to codify international law affecting belligerents, and hoping that the question may soon be re-opened.

In the afternoon Dr. RICHET moved a resolution in favour of preserving and extending neutralisation of Minor Powers. Mr. PRATT said peace societies must not only deal with abstract principles, but must study political and international questions, and ascertain all the causes of and pretexts for war. A federation of peace societies was discussed, and in some closing words, God was thanked for the unanimity and work of the Congress, and a firm belief expressed in the ultimate success of the cause of peace.

MUNIFICENT GIFT.—It is stated that Mr. John Hope, Writer to the Signet, of Edinburgh, has conveyed the sum of £84,000 to trustees "for advancing the cause of total abstinence at home and abroad from liquor, tobacco, and opium, and for disseminating a knowledge of the anti-Scriptural character of the Church of Rome."

WORKHOUSE CHILDREN IN IRELAND.—A movement is growing rapidly in Ireland which is likely to affect considerably the future of workhouse children. The indoor system, under which the unfortunate children have hitherto in many Workhouses been morally ruined through the contamination of association with depraved paupers, has been found to be eminently unsatisfactory in its results, and the boarding-out system has not been altogether successful. A third system has, therefore, been introduced—that of district industrial schools, under which children from various unions will be grouped and taught skilled labour. The result will be looked for anxiously by all those who have been unwilling witnesses to the injurious effect of the present demoralising method.

Obituary.

A LOSS TO AUSTRALIA.

WE regret deeply to record the death of Dr. George Serjeant, of Balranald, N.S.W., on May 16, at the age of 34. By his decease Australia loses an active worker in the cause of Christ. At an early age he was led to the Saviour, but on going to London as a medical student he became tinged with the doubts of those around him. But a sharp illness necessitated his removal from hospital work, after which he was invited for change to the house of a medical man where there was an earnest godly servant, who in preparing his bed-room placed a Bible for his use. He was led to read it, and returned to his home once more, rejoicing in a sense of God's favour and forgiveness.

Soon after he returned to his studies, and began to speak to fellow students, and patients in the wards. He also greatly enjoyed the students' prayer-meetings, and visits to the Medical Mission in Endell-street.

In due time he took two medical degrees, and in 1881 married the young lady who first helped him to reconsecrate himself to God, and with his wife became a member of the Wesleyan Church. In the Sunday-school, at the prayer-meeting, as chairman on the platform, and in temperance work he was always busily occupied. But his peculiar work seemed individual dealing with souls. Being appointed surgeon to the workhouse, and medical officer to several parishes, he was brought into contact with much poverty and suffering; but his steady aim was to lead souls to Jesus, and he never started on his round of visiting without his pocket Testament. Faithfully he warned or exhorted the sinful, or cheered trembling believers, until in 1887 another serious illness laid him aside for several months.

In 1888 he left with his wife and four young children for Australia, hoping the more genial climate of that favoured land would be of benefit. He commenced practice in Ballarat, but the climate proving too cold, he removed to Echuca, a favourite winter resort for those suffering from chest complaints. Seeing that drink was the curse of the town, and the temperance party very weak, Dr. Serjeant invited Mr. G. Blaiklock, the temperance lecturer, to his house, organised prayer-meetings, and undertook to call personally on people of the town and invite them to co-operate. The opposition from the publicans was very bitter, and Dr. and Mrs. Serjeant had much to endure; but not only were a good number recruited to the temperance cause, but souls were saved, and a good work begun.

Dr. Serjeant also turned his attention to the needs of the Aboriginal population in the neighbourhood, and became medical missionary to the mission station founded by Mr. D. Matthews, of Maloga. It was his joy to preach to these poor blacks, and for eight months to care for their sick bodies, and lead them to Jesus.

Another good cause also attracted his attention; he was moved to pity poor consumptive sufferers who came to Echuca, and were lodging in the common lodging-houses, often lacking daily necessaries. In conjunction with Mr. Henry Varley a house was opened as a Christian Home into which to receive the needy, sick, and dying, where every comfort, medical and otherwise, was provided, and penniless patients were received free. During last year, twenty were treated and pointed to Jesus.

In August, Dr. Serjeant was appointed medical officer to the Balranald Hospital; and at this place he took up Sunday-school and church work, and organised a Sunday afternoon Bible-class for men. While staying at the hotel two agnostics daily attacked his faith at the dinner table. Out came the pocket Testament, and a suitable portion of God's Word was read aloud, to silence them. One of these men, on leaving Balranald, accepted a volume of Rev. M. G. Pearse's books, and promised to read it. The other sat up nights during the doctor's illness, again and again acknowledging "he is a Christ-like man." May these two souls find the "peace that passeth understanding."

On Thursday, April 24, Dr. Serjeant was suddenly seized with hemorrhage of the lungs, and lingered a most patient sufferer three weeks, during which time many were privileged to hold communion with him. On the morning of May 16, he passed into the presence of his Master, soothed and cheered to the last by his wife's reading his favourite hymns from his old Methodist hymn-book.

For him, all is well. The trial is sore to those left behind, a wife and three young children—the eldest eight, the youngest four—but the God who so perfected and then removed the breadwinner is the stay and support of this widow and her children in her hour of need.

JAMES MACANDREW, M.A.,
Presbyterian Minister.

Balranald, May 29.

A SCOTTISH WORTHY.

We have just come from laying in the beautiful cemetery of Nairn all that is mortal of our dear friend, Mr. Hector Macpherson, late drum-major in the 93rd Highlanders. He has been in failing health for the last two years almost, and quite looked forward to death, making all necessary preparations for it. After much suffering, he quietly fell asleep on Sabbath evening last, at the age of seventy-six years. He leaves a widow and a married daughter.

Hector Macpherson was indeed a worthy character. His biography would be most interesting, and a fitting companion volume to that of his dear comrade, the Scottish evangelist, Duncan Matheson. With his regiment he was quartered in Montreal the year of the rebellion in Canada. Mr. Macpherson was very closely associated with the late Rev. W. C. Burns, missionary to China, when Mr. Burns laboured amongst the Presbyterians there. Mr. Macpherson told me that impressions made on him at that time, by and through Mr. Burns, never left him. The next eventful period in his life was the Crimean campaign in 1854-5, where he mingled not a little with Captain Hedley Vicars and Mr. Duncan Matheson in Christian work amongst the soldiers there. After this he retired from the Army, and gave himself to Christian work, chiefly in the district of Huntly and Aberdeen, but extending westward from Huntly to Inverness during the revival period of 1859-60. For a few years he took mission work at Perth, but since about 1875 he has lived in his native town of Nairn amid the scenes of his boyhood. As he had strength and opportunity he occupied himself with all his old fervour in the Lord's work.

Hector was a great Bible student, apt to teach, and given to exhortation, as well as ready for every good work, and much given to prayer. The community here feel that a good man has passed from them, and their testimony will be: "Having served God in his day and generation, he has now, by the Lord's will, fallen asleep in Jesus."

The perusal of THE CHRISTIAN weekly was of great interest to him until the end. It would be no small profit to the Church if the biographer of Duncan Matheson and Isabella Macpherson gave us now that of Hector Macpherson. J. T. MELVEN.

Hay Lodge, Nairn, July 16.

Another correspondent writes:—Our departed brother passed through a life of varied experiences. He served his country in several campaigns, and was engaged at the Battle of the Alma, &c. For most honourable service he might have enjoyed a commission, but declined the advancement. It is as a Christian, however, that we principally remember him. One of the most predominant features in his character was an unswerving loyalty to truth, and an unbending rectitude. He was not much known to the younger generation of evangelists, but there are to-day not a few occupying wide spheres of usefulness as pastors, &c., who, under God, owe their conversion to him.

REV. H. J. BIGSBY.

With regret we record the death on the 14th inst. of the vicar of St. Thomas's Church, Southborough. Through the grace of Christ few clergymen could have more exemplified the characteristics of blamelessness and harmlessness than Mr. Bigsby. In every way he was unselfish and genuinely good; and his success as a Christian pastor was owing to no artificial methods, but to his dependence upon the Saviour, and upon the effects of a Christian life and Scriptural teaching among his parishioners. It was his intention to have been at Keswick this week. But the Lord has called him to a higher Convention, and the grief of high and low in Southborough has been universally and unmistakably expressed. A week or two ago, as one of the secretaries, he read the report of the British and Foreign Bible Society at the annual meeting of the Tunbridge Wells Auxiliary.

"A DOUGHTY CHAMPION."

Liverpool has lost a notable citizen by the death of Mr. John Patterson, J.P., on July 12, aged sixty-eight. Born in the north of Ireland, Mr. Patterson for nearly forty years was a prominent figure in the commercial, political, and social life of Liverpool. He threw all his strong individuality and energy into Christian work and temperance reform, and was respected for his soundness of judgment as well as his personal character and liberality in the support of good movements. During the American Civil War he crossed the Atlantic and did much to convince the friends of emancipation that the bulk of the English people were with them. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church in Canning-street, Liverpool, and for a long time superintendent of the Sunday-school. He was an earnest and practical sympathizer with Messrs. Moody and Sankey during their visits to this country. All evangelical denominations mourn his loss, for he was, to use the words of Rev. S. R. McPhail in a pulpit reference to his departure, "a doughty champion of truth, purity, and righteousness; full of love to God and man; and sincerely and ardently attached to the Church and people of God in every land."

MR. DAVID HUMPHREYS.

This servant of Christ for more than fifty years passed away to his eternal rest on Wednesday, the 16th inst., in his seventieth year, at Woodbury Town, Stamford Hill, N.

A native of Wales, he preached both in English and Welsh. Having his heart stirred by the spiritual needs of the lapsed masses in that sorrowful locality, behind St. Ann's-road, Stamford Hill, he took up his residence in a small cottage there some years since, and devoted both time and means, cheerfully assisted by his Christian wife, in bringing the sinful and heavy laden to the feet of Jesus, and God greatly blessed his single-minded endeavours. He devoted the cottage adjoining his own to meetings of various kinds, all tending to the salvation of souls and the glory of God. This he did at his sole expense, though always desiring it to be know as a branch of the North-East London Gospel Mission, in connection with which he has laboured for many years as a voluntary worker, taking entire charge of Park Hall, Old Ford, for some years.

The rare sight of big, rough men shedding tears and laying a wreath purchased by their hard-earned pence upon his coffin, and whole streets in mourning as for one beloved by all, has testified this past week to the manner of his life at all seasons. Mr. Chorley loses such a helper as he will not easily replace, and asks prayer for the future of the prosperous centre of work thus deprived of so good and gracious a guide.

MR. G. HATTON'S YEAR'S WORK.

NOTWITHSTANDING the long-continued illness of Mr. Hatton, the work in St. Giles, and also that among fallen women and discharged prisoners has not been allowed to flag. Mr. William Wheatley, the general secretary, who specially looks after the reclamation of criminals, seems to have special qualifications for that arduous service; and the same may be said of those who have charge of other departments. The fact that fifty-seven prisons have been closed in England and Wales, during the last thirteen years, looks as though the Christian effort among habitual criminals and others, commenced by Mr. Hatton, and since extensively imitated in England and elsewhere, was beginning to yield the looked-for harvest.

As regards the general work in St. Giles itself, Miss Ling, who as a Bible-woman does much of the visiting, reports the year to have been a trying one in many ways, although she is able to add that "it will be no little joy to all our friends to know that we have seen many men brought to the Lord on the Dials." The various Sunday-schools belonging to the branches of the Mission have 1900 scholars, and good accounts come in from the general mission stations. The greatest difficulty as regards the people appears to be that of rent, for single rooms range from half-a-crown to seven shillings a week. "How some families exist is a mystery," it is remarked. "More model dwellings of an improved character are wanted to accommodate working people." Much poverty is actually encountered, and in some measure this has to be relieved in more ways than one. Deserving people are helped in their poor rooms, and thousands of halfpenny dinners are served out to eager hungry children. The common lodging-houses are also systematically visited. The work among the young is the most promising. There is a good lending library in connection with the Sunday-school, and the Band of Hope numbers between five and six hundred members.

Then the Discharged Prisoners' branch, under Mr. Wheatley's management, shows no decrease. Before he entered upon this service, Mr. Wheatley had ten years' experience in St. Giles; but, as he says, "What has God wrought since then?" He adds that "every step prepared one for the next. Some thousands of prisoners, hardened in crime, have been sheltered, clothed, fed, and taught a better way, and some for the last ten years are living godly lives, serving their earthly masters to the credit of the Mission which picked them up. Ten years later—1887—remand Boys' Homes were started. Since that day I have gone from cell to cell, and have managed to rescue some seven hundred boys, the greater part of whom have been clothed, fed, and lodged in the Homes, employment found, and, I am happy to say, the third Boys' Home is nigh completion."

During 1889 there were 21,400 discharged from local prisons; and while 8408 of these were relieved with money or tools, 17,160 accepted the invitation to breakfast, of whom 5150 signed the temperance pledge. It should be remembered that the wives and families of men in prison also come in for some attention.

The amounts received on account of the three departments of the Mission were as follow:—For the reclamation of lost women, £1863; for the work among discharged prisoners, £2356; the general expenses fund, £5523. G. H. P.

MADEIRA.—Mr. W. G. Smart, whose work we recently described, writes:—"Mr. M. C. Leite Rozas is interested in my work, and will receive subscriptions for it. My address, up to July 31, will be care of Messrs. Bywater, Tanqueray & Co., 79, Queen Victoria-street, E.C., and after that, Rue de Conselheiro, 9, Funchal, Madeira."

PRINCESS MARY VILLAGE HOMES.

THE annual report of the Princess Mary Village Homes, Addlestone, Surrey, discloses a most satisfactory condition of affairs, both as to the actual work done and as to the financial result. The statement of Mrs. Meredith, at the commemoration ceremony on Thursday, who has done so much valuable work in connection with this excellent undertaking, shows that the average number of children in the Homes is 204, and that the number of children sent there by magistrates' orders since the opening of the establishment has reached the high total of 372. During the past year 21 children have been received in this manner, and, to judge from the results that have followed in the cases of the great numbers of children who have passed through the hands of the school authorities, it is certain that these unfortunate children will be brought up and educated as respectable, well-behaved citizens. Eleven other children have been received into the Homes in the same period. During the year, eighteen have entered domestic service, five have been sent to other suitable Homes, two have been transferred to another school, two have died, and two, for some reason unexplained, were sent to the workhouse. The remainder are at present in the Homes, whence some of them eventually will emigrate.

The school authorities, said Mrs. Meredith, were in correspondence with 161 girls who had left the Homes and were now known to be doing well and leading respectable lives. There were but thirteen cases of girls who had slipped from their hands on leaving the Homes, and of whom they had lost all knowledge. The laundry, continued Mrs. Meredith, in the course of her gratifying report, last year yielded a net profit of £111, and this sum was added to the funds of the school.

During the afternoon a thanksgiving ceremony was held in the chapel, at which Dr. Bullinger, assisted by the Rev. Canon Hussey, of Brixton, officiated. After this, in the pouring rain, the party proceeded to the new memorial garden and fountain presented to the Homes by a brother of the late George Scott. There were here present Lady Waterpark, Mrs. Meredith, Lord Radstock, Lady Meath, Lady Vernon, General Sir Arthur Lawrence, Dean Bagot, Mrs. Palmer Davis (Berlin), and Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston.

As H.R.H. the Duchess of Teck was unavoidably absent the opening ceremony was performed by the Dowager Lady Waterpark, who afterwards gave away the prizes to the girls connected with the institution. A short address from Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston followed, founded upon the words of the Psalmist: "All my fountains are in Thee." This included a general discourse upon fountains in Scripture, and was evidently suggested by the ceremony of opening the memorial fountain which had just been performed by Lady Waterpark.

A programme of songs, recitations, and musical drill was then very creditably gone through, the part taken by the infants being especially pleasing, and showing evidence of very careful training. The inspection of cottages, laundry, &c., was attended with considerable difficulty on account of the weather, and for the same reason the attendance of friends and visitors was much smaller than usual.

WORK AMONG MINERS IN FRANCE.—Miss Bullock, 133, Queen's-road, Bayswater, London, S.W., writes:—"In July, 1888, you inserted an appeal from me for help towards the erection of a mission church at Hersin-Coupigny, in the Pas-de-Calais (mission work among miners). I am thankful to say the needed money was in various ways all sent in, and the church was opened on Easter Monday last. I have since printed a statement of accounts and sent it to all donors whose addresses I had. But as some readers of THE CHRISTIAN and other papers sent to me anonymously, I will gladly send a copy to anyone applying to me."

SOLDIERS AT GIBRALTAR.

MANY of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN, who have prayed for us and in other ways helped our work among the soldiers at the south end of the Rock of Gibraltar, will be glad to hear through your columns that the Lord continues to bless us. Every evening at 6 o'clock a good number of soldiers gather together for the Bible-class which Captain Armstrong leads, and the Gospel meeting at 8 o'clock is well attended. Almost every night some soldier or sailor professes to come out on the Lord's side. While those who are his "give Him no rest" about their unsaved comrades.

The work among the little ones is also very encouraging. British, Maltese, and Spanish children learn to sing of Jesus, and so carry the Gospel to their parents, who love to hear the children sing.

Among the sick in the hospital, there has been blessing, though Satan has hindered; but the sick men put in special passes for our workers. One sailor, who had been very seriously injured, asked a comrade to put in a pass for one of our workers, and when she went to visit him told her he would only read the Bible until he got saved. One day while she was praying the light came. He has been sent home, and his letters tell that he is rejoicing in the Lord.

On board a trooper, I one day found some old friends who had been converted in Maryhill. They had been for years in India, but had been "kept by the power of God, through faith," and we rejoiced together.

Captain Armstrong finds much encouragement among the sailors in the Bay. Gospel tracts and books are much needed. Perhaps some of your readers would like to help our friend, his address is, Soldiers' Home, Europa-road, Gibraltar.

We have altered and re-painted our "Home." At the cost of £200, the class-room has been greatly enlarged, a water tank been built, and other most necessary improvements have been made.

Once more the owner of the public-house next door to us has offered to sell us this place, this time for £600. For six years our Christian soldiers have been praying God to shut up this house. I would be very glad to have it as a refreshment-room for the soldiers and sailors. Much of the crime and drunkenness would be spared if it were closed, and a great stumbling-block would be removed. About £20 has been sent in to help to purchase it, and a friend has promised £50 if we will buy it this year. The landlord has written to say he wants my answer. Owing to increased responsibility through our Spanish Mission in Algeciras, where we have now five workers, I am unable to do anything but wait upon God and tell his people about it.—Very faithfully yours, (MRS.) ALICE TODD OSBORNE.

THE ADEN MISSION.—We are removing our slave family to one of our Missions at Lovedale, Cape Colony. Sheikh Othmân has proved very unhealthy for us and them, and we have therefore thought it advisable to take them to a healthier climate. Dr. Paterson and I accompany them, and we would ask prayer for God's blessing on the new movement, and for guidance in our arduous journey. May it please God that many of them may return to tell the story of Jesus to their down-trodden countrymen. Most of the slave boys and girls taken to the Arabian ports to be sold as slaves to Moslems are kidnapped in Gallaland. The expense of the journey will be very great, and may I solicit kindly interest in our work. Gratefully acknowledging the help from your readers in the past.—I am, yours sincerely,

MATTHEW LOCHHEAD.

OPPOSITION IN JAPAN.

IN a letter dated Tokushima, Awa, Japan, April 24, Rev. W. P. Buncombe, of the C.M.S., writes:—If opposition is any criterion of success and progress, we must rejoice heartily here; for in this town and neighbourhood the Buddhists oppose the Lord's work at every turn. With our Presbyterian brethren we had a united eight days' special mission here, in February; and, although we had audiences of from 500 to 1500 people, yet every address was made almost inaudible by a small but united band of about 150 men. There are three daily newspapers in the town, and nearly every day there are calumnies and hard things inserted against the Christians and even against those in high position who are known to favour Christianity. Within the last three months there have been three special Buddhist preachings extending over a period of from three days to a week, having only one object, prejudicing men against Christianity, by misrepresenting Christian teaching.

So I can in some small degree enter into St. Paul's feelings when he said he rejoiced in persecutions—not that this opposition to Christianity affects us personally at all, i.e., subjects us to personal inconvenience, but it affects the Christians, in that it strengthens and unites them. It also affects those who are seekers, keeping back effectually any who are half-hearted. But it all turns out to the praise of the Gospel, and spreads the sound far and wide in a way we, the little band of Christ's people, could not possibly do.

Will you kindly remember in prayer our five native catechists, that they may each one be filled with the Holy Ghost. Such helpers are the thing a missionary most needs, and they are only given in answer to prayer. God has given us a direct answer to prayer, three native helpers to act as catechists in three county districts in this neighbourhood, and I am now praying for one more. Pray too that I and my wife may ever have His fulness of power resting upon us.

MEDICAL WORK IN INDIA.

FRIENDS in England will be glad to hear that we have at last been able to make a start in medical work at Krishnagur. At the beginning of April we had the happiness of welcoming into our band a new fellow-labourer, Miss Rose Phailbus, a Hindostani-speaking lady who has had a five years' course of medical training and has now come to devote herself to the medical branch of the work here. Besides the charge of the two dispensaries, our sister pays medical visits in the zenanas. During the first month 305 patients were treated at the first dispensary. At the second, which has now been open a fortnight, 60 patients have been treated; 56 patients in houses have also been visited. This will give friends some idea of the beginning made and the good opening there is for such work. Every patient hears the message of salvation. We have just succeeded in finding a suitable woman as nurse to accompany and help Miss Phailbus in her visits to patients. We shall be most thankful for help towards the support of this medical work. The rent of the rooms, medicines, &c., entails a regular added expense which we have as yet no special funds to meet. In the meantime we commend this new work to the prayers and sympathy of all friends at home.

C. M. COLLISSON, M. M. THORP, } C.E.Z. Missionaries at Krishnagur.

[Communications will be received by Miss H. O. Thorp, Graham-road, Ipswich.]

REV. JOHN K. ROBSON, who for some years back has been ministering at Dewsbury, has offered himself as a missionary in China for seven years, without any cost, to the Wesleyan Missionary Society. He has been appointed to Northern China, and will leave very shortly in company with a medical missionary, Mr. Marshall. The evangelisation of the world would be materially hastened if more of those whom God has blessed with means would thus lay themselves and their money at the Master's feet.

REV. G. C. GRUBB IN NEW ZEALAND.

EVER since intelligence of the announcement at Keswick, last year, that Mr. Grubb had undertaken a missionary tour, and purposed visiting New Zealand, there have been hearts in this the most distant of Her Majesty's possessions looking up to God for a blessing on his visit to the Colony. Mr. Grubb opened his mission at Nelson, where his ministry was much blessed of God in bringing salvation to lost ones, and in deepening the spiritual life of believers. Similar results followed a brief mission held at Westport, an increasingly important town on the west coast of the South Island.

Mr. Grubb opened his eight days' mission in Blenheim on Sunday, May 25, in the Church of England. From the first the meetings were well attended, but the interest increased daily, and the closing meetings, when many happy hearts met to give thanks to God for blessings received during the mission, was attended by fully 1000 people. From the outset, our dear brother made it clear that he was determined to preach nothing among us save "Jesus Christ, and Him crucified," and throughout the mission the preciousness of The Christ was so brought before us that souls have been fed, not indeed on man's words, but on Him who is the Bread of Life. Mr. Grubb's message to Christians was one that will never be forgotten. In common with our fellow-believers in other lands, many of God's children here have been earnestly seeking "the higher life," but have been seeking through our own strength of will to repress evil and in our own powers to work works of righteousness for Christ's sake. Christ was indeed the "Omega" of our hopes and aspirations, but not the "Alpha" to guide and fashion and work Himself in the creature He has taken for his possession. In short, we have been endeavouring to effect our sanctification by our own righteous life and walk instead of trusting Him as our sanctification (1 Cor. i. 30). The result of our brother's earnest unfolding of the great salvation in Jesus from sin and the power of it will be found in consecrated hearts and lives fully yielded up to the service of the Lord who has done so great things for us, "whereof we are glad."

The morning prayer meetings from 8.45 to 9.30 were times of peculiar blessing to all present. In the felt presence of the Holy Spirit all denominational and class barriers were broken down, and with one accord all Christians poured out their hearts together in prayer and thanksgiving to the Lord for mercies received. The afternoon Bible-readings were largely attended, and one result is now apparent in an increasing desire among Christians to search out for themselves the precious things revealed in God's Word. The topics opened were: The Feast of Weeks (Deut. xvi. 10-12), the Feast of Tabernacles (Deut. xvi. 13), the Judgment Seat of Christ (Rom. xiv. 12; 2 Cor. v. 9, 10), and the Open Heaven (John i. 51). Of the evening addresses to nightly increasing numbers, it could only be felt that God's voice was speaking through the preacher. Solemnly and faithfully, sinners were pointed to Jesus as the "Lamb of God," and very many were led to see Him as their Saviour and accept Him as their Lord.

The thanksgiving testimonies (written ones) were evidence that the word had gone home to very many hearts. There have been many out-and-out conversions, while many others, who could only hope before, now "know" that they have passed "from death unto life." The missionary meeting on the closing day of the mission was addressed by Mr. Grubb and his fellow-workers, Messrs. Campbell and Millard, and will be memorable to many of us. In very earnest words, our brethren placed before us the claims of the heathen, and I am sure that many of us will not forget the question Mr. Grubb pressed upon us to ask for guidance upon, not why should I go and tell the heathen about Jesus, but why should I not go? The children's services were conducted daily by Mr. E. Millard, who soon won the affections of his hearers, and not a few of them were, we believe, led to trust in the Saviour.

The missioners proceeded from here to Napier to hold a week's mission there, and leave New Zealand on the 16th June—Messrs. Grubb and Campbell going viâ Melbourne and Mauritius to Cape Colony, and Messrs. Millard and Richardson returning to England. Very many of us follow them with our prayers. F. B.

Blenheim, N.Z., June 12.

[Since the foregoing was written, we understand that Mr. Grubb intended returning for the Keswick Convention.—ED.]

HANLEY SALVATION MISSION.

THIS Mission has been much blessed during a period of years. There is sad need of aggressive Christian work in the central town of the Staffordshire Potteries, and we rejoice to learn that a number of good and influential men have banded themselves together to do their utmost to see the Mission through a time of difficulty. The Imperial Hall, Glass-street, is, perhaps, the largest mission building in the provinces, being capable of seating 3500 persons. It was for a long period used as a music-hall and circus, when it was certainly carried on without such financial anxiety as is now experienced in exertions to develop it as a centre of all-round Christian endeavour.

Recently a mortgage loan has been recalled by the bank, and an effort is being made to raise £3500 to place the Mission on a thorough working basis. Under the care of Messrs. Middleton and Hogben the various organisations have been reanimated after a period of languishing, and it is sincerely hoped that friends of the cause of God in the midst of the toiling thousands of the Potteries, will come to the help of the devoted workers, who cannot expect to raise on the spot the whole of the sum needed. The treasurer is Mr. Ambrose Wood, architect, Hanley.

A HOSPITAL FOR MARSOVAN.

DEAR SIR,—At the beginning of the year, you inserted a brief letter from Mr. James E. Mathieson on the above subject. May I now add that Madame Thoumaian (the wife of Pastor Thoumaian, of Marsovan, in the ancient Pontus) has been busily pursuing her courageous endeavour to accomplish the collection of funds for the erection and partial endowment of a Medical Mission Hospital in Marsovan. She has succeeded in obtaining a large and influential Council of Reference, and in various quarters has won the sympathy and help of those who have listened to the story of her adopted country's need of medical missionary help.

But it is a large undertaking for Madame Thoumaian to deal single-handed with this business, and her Council would be very glad to interest many more friends in her noble effort. All communications to Madame Thoumaian, at 35, Pyrland-road, N., will receive immediate attention.—Yours faithfully, JAMES L. MAXWELL.

49, Highbury Park, N.

Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, of St. Paul's, Onslow-square, in a letter to Madame Thoumaian, says:—

Let me thank you for coming to us, and speaking upon the great and pressing needs in Asia Minor, &c., for a hospital, where the poor people may be cared for in the body, and where they may also hear the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The large meeting which gathered to hear you seemed to be greatly interested, and I think we all felt very deeply moved by the sad needs of your adopted country. I have great pleasure in recommending you as a faithful speaker, and your cause as an interesting and very important one, to the attention of my brother clergy and of Christian philanthropists throughout our country. I wish you God's blessing, and an abundant success in your earnest and self-denying efforts for Armenians and others.

PROFESSOR H. E. SAWYER, of the Mount Hermon School, Massachusetts, hopes to arrive in England about August 20, on a visit to extend over some months. He will be glad to supply pulpits or take part in public meetings. He will, doubtless, be able to speak many encouraging words as to Mr. Moody's work.

HOMES FOR LITTLE BOYS.

THE united Summer Fête of the Homes at Farningham and Swanley took place on Saturday at Farningham. The Little Boys' Village (for a veritable village it is) was thoroughly en fête for the occasion, and everything was dressed in summer glory. A large number of friends went down from London to join in the proceedings. On arrival the boys from the two Homes were marshalled in procession form, and paraded the grounds led by the brass band, discoursing lively music.

Then the friends assembled in the chapel, and a number of the boys were put through an examination in Scripture, geography, and mental arithmetic. They had, of course, had no special preparation in the subjects of the examination, but the questions were promptly answered in an eminently satisfactory manner, scarcely a mistake occurring. The examination afforded considerable gratification to the friends who subscribe to the institutions; it was a worthy testimony to the efficiency and care of the education which the boys receive in the schools.

The luncheon, which was presided over by the Earl Stanhope, Lord Lieutenant of the county of Kent, took place in the spacious drill hall. The meal over, a number of short speeches were delivered. Lord Stanhope drew attention to the principles on which the institutions are carried on. The Homes at Farningham, which were the first established in England on the cottage or separate Home system—are for boys of any age up to ten years, who are orphan, destitute, or, from their surroundings, likely to fall into crime. They are admitted by vote of subscribers, or on payment of 6s. per week—£15 per annum. They are placed in families of about thirty, each Home being presided over by a Christian man and woman, who act as father and mother to the boys. The day school, under Government inspection, has earned the "Excellent Merit" grant for the last six years. The boys get at least two years' training in one or other of the industrial employments carried on. The seinclude printing, tailoring, shoemaking, carpentering, plumbing and painting, laundry work, knitting, baking, store keeping, gardening—both field and greenhouse work. All that is needed in the way of printing, all the clothes, stockings and boots, bread, and vegetables that are required are supplied by the various industrial departments. There are 283 boys at present in the Homes.

The Swanley Homes are for the orphan boys of those whose relatives or friends are able to contribute £20 a year for their maintenance. The day-school education includes agriculture, chemistry, physics, mathematics, in connection with the Science and Art Department. Technical instruction is afforded in the former subjects. Every boy is taught drawing and shorthand, and South Kensington and Pitman certificates are awarded on examination. The industrial employments include lithography (plain and coloured), tailoring, carpentry, shoemaking, knitting, plumbing and painting, gardening, and photography. The wants of the Homes in any of these branches are thus supplied. There are at present 194 boys in the Homes. Lord Stanhope heartily expressed his sympathy with the work, and his satisfaction at the way in which the Homes are managed. He specially commended them because of the attention that was devoted to technical instruction, which is a necessary factor in education to-day. In closing, his lordship earnestly appealed for the £2000 additional income that is needed.

Later in the day, the visitors had an opportunity of witnessing the boys plying their trades in the various workshops. The proceedings concluded with an exhibition of musical drill and gymnastics.

If a cloud, figuratively speaking, could be said to have been cast over the satisfaction which was so generally felt, it lay in the fact that some of the Homes are actually closed forlack of funds. We hope our readers will try and remedy this.

PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

THIS Society showed abundant signs of life and vigour on the occasion of its sixty-sixth annual meeting, held at 105, Jermyn-street, on the afternoon of Friday last week, Lord Aberdare presiding. Mr. J. Colam read the report, which indicated progress. The educational work of the ladies' committee has been carried on most successfully; bands of mercy have been extensively instituted; and the prize and certificate inducements have brought in for competition from the public schools the large number of 50,759 essays on the duty of kindness to the lower animals. During the year 5886 convictions were obtained; most of the cruelty was inflicted on the larger and more useful of the domestic animals.

At last it seems that measures insuring the proper shoeing of horses, so long advocated by the Society, have been undertaken by a joint committee of the Farriers' Company, the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons, and the Royal Agricultural Society. Although dishorning of cattle has been pronounced illegal in England, it has not as yet been decided to be illegal in Scotland or Ireland. Grave dissatisfaction was expressed regarding the working of the statute regulating vivisection. Experiments had steadily increased during the past twelve years from 200 to 1417 per annum, while the licences have increased from twenty to eighty-seven.

Mr. G. S. MEASOM stated the steps which had been taken to put an end to the demoralising bull-fights in Paris, and to promote a more humane treatment of the lower animals in Italy.

Dr. FLEMING spoke of the extreme difficulty of securing the conviction of offenders against the law prohibiting cruelty to animals in the face of what might seem to be incontrovertible evidence. Mr. HEYWOOD, a representative of the Manchester branch, was in favour of obtaining legislation to prevent the coursing of rabbits in confined spaces—a species of "sport" which prevailed in his locality. Mr. MOCATTA commented on the public sentiment regarding cruelty to the lower animals in countries inhabited by Latin races, and said that, through the beneficence of the Baroness Burdett-Coutts, literature tending to dispel the ignorence which lay at the bottom of that perverted sentiment, was being printed and disseminated in Southern Europe.

THE GOND TRIBES.—Rev. H. D. Williamson, of the C.M.S., Mandla, C.P., India, says, in a recent letter:—"The Lord has privileged me to work here amongst the Gonds of Central India since 1878, and we have much to cheer us. In my last tour we travelled some 300 miles or more, visited and preached in over 200 villages to 4500 people, and sold many Gospel portions and tracts. Three-fourths certainly of the 300,000 people in this district have heard the blessed Gospel, and in hundreds of villages the people are gradually giving up their idolatry and superstition and many have accepted Christ."

A NATIONAL DOMESTIC COLLEGE.—At a meeting of ladies, held a few days ago at the residence of the Earl of Meath, 83, Lancaster-gate, details were given of a proposal for the further development of the College founded by Miss Headdon at Newnham-on-Severn for the study of housewifery or domestic economy. The work having grown beyond Miss Headdon's personal management, it was resolved to form a company for the perpetuation of her system of instruction, which was highly spoken of by the Hon. Emily Kinnaird and Mrs. Jerome Mercier, both of whom recognised the advantages offered by the Institution to young women of various grades. Mrs. Poulden expressed the conviction, that, if introduced into elementary schools, the system will do much to counteract the distaste for domestic service which so frequently arises from want of knowledge. Lady Knightley presided over the proceedings.

HACKNEY ROAD MISSION.

THE Hackney-road Mission Hall has been reseated and generally renovated; and it was filled to the doors on Wednesday last week with an audience that had met to celebrate the twenty-first anniversary of the Mission. The chair was occupied by Mr. E. H. PICKERSGILL, M.P. The report gave the general impression that a great amount of work had been accomplished on the very slender resources available. There can be little doubt that the small debt on the Mission will be soon met by outside assistance. The influence of the Mission has been by no means exclusively local.

Mr. PARKER, who was the first to address the meeting, said that it was through the instrumentality of Mr. Girling, the pastor and superintendent, that he was brought eighteen years ago to a living faith in Christ. It was under this Mission also that he shortly afterwards began to speak for Christ in public. Subsequently for fifteen years he laboured as a missionary in China. What he now sought especially to impress upon those present, as one of the results of his missionary-life observation, was the inestimable privilege of having such a place as that hall wherein, with the help of God's Spirit, they could be made wise unto salvation.

Lord MONKSWELL heartily agreed with the methods of aiding the distressed adopted by this Mission. No one suffering from acute want can listen with profit to words addressed to the head or the heart. True sympathy comes close to the sufferer, and, having discovered the cause of the distress, applies the needed remedy. He attributed the great success of the Mission to the employment of zealous Christian workers that were thoroughly in touch with the people to be benefited.

Rev. F. BROWN having spoken a few kindly words, Mr. GIRLING gave an account of how he first began work for the Lord, and how it had pleased God to bless the talents which he had brought to his service so as to make the Hackney-road Mission a nursery for souls. An eloquent address was delivered by the Chairman, who maintained that the need of our lives is vital Christianity. He had a suspicion of the Christianity of a man who was devoid of sympathy, who did not care for his fellow-men. Rev. DAVID RUSSELL warned the workers against conforming to the world in their methods.

BY GAWIN KIRKHAM.

III.—THE DEW OF HERMON.

WE camped one night at the head of the waters of Merom, within a few hours' ride of snowy Hermon. Our tents were pitched among some tender grass, which, after sunset, soon became moistened with dew. Next morning the dew was particularly heavy, and we were forcibly reminded of the expression, "The Dew of Hermon," in Ps. cxxxiii. 3. In these Eastern lands, where, at certain seasons, no rain falls, the dew plays an important part, and hence the allusions to dew in the Bible are more appreciated by Eastern than by Western people. It is a direct gift from God (Job. xxxviii. 28), and is a token of his favour (Prov. xix. 12); and its withholding is a proof of his displeasure (Hag. i. 10). May the gracious promise, "I will be as the dew unto Israel," soon be fulfilled, so that he may "grow as the lily and cast forth his roots as Lebanon" (Hos. xiv. 5).

IV.—THE PITCHER BROKEN AT THE FOUNTAIN.

While lunching in a fig orchard at Sileh, I noticed the women and girls of a neighbouring village come to a fountain close by to wash their clothes and fill their pitchers. It is needless to say that carrying a pitcher Eastern fashion is one of the fine arts. These women poised their pitchers on their heads, and walked with naked feet over the rough, uneven, stony path without hesitation and without steadying the pitchers with their hands. But the broken earthenware around the fountain proved that, however steady and careful they are, accidents will happen. My thoughts instinctively reverted to the passage in Solomon's description of old age, where he says: "Or the pitcher be broken at the fountain" (Eccles. xii. 6). So, however carefully life may be lived, it often comes to an end suddenly. But a Syrian afterwards told me that the Eastern women sometimes break their pitchers while quarrelling! Even so violent men often hasten their own end and the end of others by their violence. Such men "shall not live out half their days" (Psa. lv. 23).

V.—EASTERN PLOUGHING.

Passing through a valley beyond Dothan, I counted twelve men ploughing with as many yoke of oxen. So in the days of old, Elisha "was plowing with twelve yoke of oxen before him, and he with the twelfth" (1 Kings xix. 19). Eastern ploughing is of the most primitive kind. The plough consists of two pieces of wood fixed together, to one of which the oxen are fastened, and to the other a small handle is added. Sometimes there is an iron ploughshare, but in other cases a piece of wood serves the purpose. One hand only is necessary to hold the plough, illustrating the accuracy of our Lord's statement about a man putting his hand to the plough (Luke ix. 62). In the other hand the man holds a long stick or pole, at one end of which is an iron spud, with which he cleans the ploughshare, and at the other end a pointed piece of iron, with which he goads on the oxen. Hence the allusion of the risen Lord to Saul of Tarsus: "It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks," i.e., the goad (Acts ix. 5). For if the ox kicks he only hurts himself. So it is with the sinner who rebels against God.

TRACT WORK AMONG MOSLEMS.—It has been found that the experiment of systematically distributing tracts for Mohammedan readers in Arabia and the neighbouring countries met with much success, and the Committee of the Religious Tract Society have, therefore, issued a series of tracts in Arabic upon the main doctrines of the Gospel. Remarkable as it may seem, the Mohammedans have "not only received, but even welcomed," the tracts recently distributed.

MARYLAND TOLERATION ACT.

SIR,—If any of your readers, moved by the enthusiasm of your Carlisle correspondent, should be inclined to think that the famous Act of 1649 was the act of Romanists in power, there are some notable facts which should be well considered before coming to that conclusion.

In 1875, Cardinal Manning, replying to Mr. Gladstone's attacks on Vaticanism, pointed to the liberties of Maryland as evidence of Rome's toleration. Mr. Gladstone in his reply (Note, at the end of "Vaticanism") said that "the measure was really defensive; and its main and very legitimate purpose was to secure the free exercise of the Roman Catholic religion."

I see much in history to confirm Mr. Gladstone's view that the Acts were mainly defensive of Roman interests. The Roman Church had gone through some serious dangers in Maryland before the passing of that Act, and its position at that time was one of alarming insecurity. The original charter was granted by a High Anglican king, Charles I., to a Roman Catholic nobleman who sought a refuge in the New World. After his death the privileges were confirmed to his son, and in 1634, the party of colonists, consisting of Roman Catholics and Protestants, reached Maryland. Though the leaders were Romanist and under the spiritual guidance of Jesuit fathers, yet the colony was chiefly Protestant from the beginning.

The colony was doubtless founded, the charter granted, on an understanding between the King and Lord Baltimore that Roman Catholic interests were to be protected in Maryland. But the difficulties of the situation were immense. The action of the spiritual leaders was watched by the Puritan colonists.

In 1642 an attack was made upon the Jesuits in Maryland, and in consequence a report was made to the Vice-Provincial of the Order, Father Henry More, who then wrote to the Cardinal Prefect a letter, in which I find the following admission: "In leading the colony to Maryland by far the greater part were heretics; the country itself is esteemed likewise to be a new England, that is, two provinces full of English colonists and Puritans; so that not less, nay, perhaps greater, dangers threaten our fathers in a foreign than in their native land of England" ("Records of the English Jesuits," vol. iii. p. 364).

The weakness of the Roman cause in Maryland is still further displayed in these records.

I quote from a letter, the date of which I cannot give; but, as it is supposed to be written by Father White, who was seized by Claiborne's men in 1644, we must place it before that time. The Jesuit father says: "In a country like this, newly planted, and depending wholly upon England for its subs stence, where there is not (nor can be, until England is re-united to the Church) any ecclesiastical discipline established by laws of the province, or granted by the prince, nor provincial synod held, nor spiritual courts created, nor the canon laws accepted, nor ordinary or other ecclesiastical persons admitted (as such), nor the Catholic religion publicly allowed. And whereas three parts of the people, are heretics, I desire to beresolved . . . ."

The "heretics" of course are Protestants. The dangers of any bold setting forth of Roman claims are then described as follows: "And since it is sufficiently clear that Maryland depends upon England . . . and since it is not the less evident that, as affairs now are, those privileges, &c., usually granted to ecclesiastics of the Roman Catholic Church, by Catholic princes in their own countries, could not possibly be granted here without grave offence to the king and State of England (which offence may be called a hazard both to the Baron and especially to the whole colony). Therefore," &c. The argument goes on to bind the members of the Society of Jesuits in Maryland not to demand privileges excepting those relating to corporal punishment. (Foley: "Records of the English Jesuits," iii. p. 362.)

These extracts are sufficient to show the extreme insecurity of the Roman Church in Maryland prior to 1649.

Then as to the Act itself, it is most important to notice that it was not passed until the Roman Catholic Governor was superseded, and a Protestant put in his place, not until an influential Puritan accession to the colony had come in. Moreover, it was the Act of the Maryland people, Roman Catholic and Protestant combined, and "was not engrossed and approved by Lord Baltimore until August, 1650" (Contemporary Review, September, 1876).

After all, though presenting a favourable contrast with the New England laws, the Act contained some terrible threatenings. Blasphemy against the Trinity might be punished with death and confiscation of all property. For speaking reproachful words against the blessed Virgin Mary—the fine of £5; in default, public whipping and imprisonment. For calling a man "idolater" or "Puritan," &c., fine of 10s.; in default, public whipping and imprisonment. For profanation of "the Sabbath" (the use of this term implies that Puritan habits, both of speech and conduct, were recognised), after repeated offences, fine of 10s.; in default, public whipping, and imprisonment. It cannot be said that the Maryland laws were drawn up in the interests of the poorer colonists.

These particulars of the Act are taken from Bozman's History of Maryland, where the whole of the Act concerning religion may be seen in the Appendix.

Yours truly, J. C. ROBINSON.

QUESTIONS RE CONVENTIONS.

DEAR SIR,—May I add to the observations already made on Conventions the further suggestion that the way to get up to the higher "life of God in the soul" is to get down honestly into the lower life of self in the heart; yes, to the very (oft undisturbed) bottom and dregs, and "look well if there be any wicked way" there, any "way of man," e.g., "that is in himself" (where the Scripture tells us it should not be). "Before honour is humility." The "hand of God" is ever "mighty;" "humble yourselves," under it, and the same mighty hand, not your own, will "exalt you in due time." The higher life, like the preparation of the heart, is from Him, and, if we do our part in humbling, He "in due time" (not hurriedly, or in the time we impatiently may set) will do his part, most graciously in exalting. But whatever is searched out must be presented to Christ for pardon through his precious blood, and for purification by his Holy Spirit.

The higher life is willingness thus to search out these subtle roots of bitterness (so ready to spring up and bear visible fruit), and getting rid of them in God's appointed way. We have it plainly before us. "Father, I have sinned," is our act. The reception and the robe are the Father's free act and gift; the feast in due course follows. To those who get voluntarily so near the Father, nothing less can be expected. "This is all the fruit, to take away their sin," and the growth of such fruit conventions may undoubtedly further. Much heart-searching may be provoked by Christian conferences. But much ephemeral spiritual brightness so acquired may be sufficiently shallow in nature to lose its polish by subsequent contact with the world. The real benefit, it seems to me, is that which sometimes may be acquired also by those who have no opportunity of sharing these conferential and conventional privileges, viz., to be sent home from them to the privacy of their own seclusion, and into the secrets of their own sinful hearts, and there bring to light and being, under the light and power of the Holy Spirit, through Him who knoweth the mind of the Spirit, all the discoveries there made, with the oft-to-be-repeated prayer, which few learn accurately, "Search me, O God," &c.—Yours truly, VICAR OF USK.

NEW GUINEA.—The Wesleyan Conference of New South Wales has decided to accept the invitation of Sir William Macgregor to establish a mission in New Guinea. The proposal has been taken up with great enthusiasm in the colony. A district has been mapped out so as not to conflict with existing agencies; it is proposed that the mission be established on the Louisiades and D'Entrecasteaux Groups at the east of New Guinea. The S.P.G. will select a district at the east end of the island on which to begin a mission. The missionaries of the London Missionary Society, who have occupied portions of the island since 1871, are in perfect accord and sympathy with them.

Deacon Abraham's Work at Oroomiah.—A sale of work on behalf of Deacon Abraham's Oroomiah Orphanages is to be held at the Waterloo Workman's Hall, Andover, Hants, on Bank Holiday, Monday, August 4.

The Highgate Tract Society (Wesleyan Chapel, Archway-road, Upper Holloway) appeals for tracts, old or worn books, or spare magazines for judicious distribution.—CHARLES MEDLICOTT, hon. sec.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, JULY 27.—Psalm LXXIX.

THIS Psalm, like lxxiv., evidently dates from the Chaldean invasion. There the destruction of the Temple was the prominent thought; here its defilement with the bodies of the slain. There are three stanzas; narrative (1-4); prayer, especially because God's name and glory are at stake (5-12); promises of perpetual praise (13).

1. In other passages God Himself is described as the chief agent. Here we learn the names of the tools whom he employed (Ezek. v. 11; xxiii. 38).

2, 3. Fulfilled (2 Chron. xxxvi. 17; Zech. xiv.; Rev. xi. 7). These words are said to have been constantly on the lips of our countrymen in the days of the Indian Mutiny.

5. Jealousy is the reverse side of love. God was a husband to his people, hence his severity (Amos iii. 2). We should be very particular as to our walk, lest we provoke God to jealousy (Jas. iv. 5).

6. "Pour out" is the same word as is used in ver. 3. This verse is quoted by Jeremiah (x. 25).

8. "The iniquities of our forefathers" (R.V.) (Lev. xxv. 45). Let us ask God to remember, in his dealings with us, not the sins of the past, but the covenant which He made with our fathers.

9. We have an irresistible argument when we speak of God's glory (John xiv. 13).

10. "Let the revenging of the blood of thy servants be known" (R.V.) Joel quotes the former clause (ii. 17).

11. The answer is anticipated in Psa. cii. 19, 20.

13. In pastures of never-failing bliss, we shall give Him perpetual praise (Rev. vii. 17).

MONDAY, JULY 28.—Psalm LXXX.

Under the figure of a vine, injured by a wild beast, the Psalmist laments the captivity of the ten tribes. The house of Joseph always represents the ten tribes (Obad. 18; Amos vi. 6). The mention of Benjamin (2) does not militate against this view, for though the southern part of the tribe clung to the fortunes of Judah, it is probable that the bulk of the northern portion followed those of the ten tribes to which they were bound by many ties (Gen. xliii. 29). These three tribes marched together (Num. x. 21—24). The title of the Psalm reminds of us xlv. and lxix. "Lilies" are an emblem of what is lovely, and here of the lovely salvation of God.

The division is clearly marked by the recurrence of the refrain, 3 and 7, 14 and 19. The name of God being on an ascending scale; God; God of Hosts; Jehovah, God of Hosts.

1. In Jacob's blessing of Joseph, this title is specially given to God (Gen. xlviii. 15, xlix. 24). To sit enthroned upon the cherubim (see R.V.) is an emblem of omnipotence, for they represent all creatures. Thus the gentleness of a shepherd and the almighty power of God blend in this verse.

2. "Before them," i.e., at their head, as the pillar of cloud and fire led the wilderness march.

3. What a prayer for a backslider! (Jer. xxxi. 18). When God restores us He puts us back into the very place which we occupied before we fell.

4. Angry, smoke. Not the fire of God consuming the sacrifice of God, but burning against the backslider.

5. Bread soaked in tears (Ps. xlii. 3).

8. Another reference to Jacob's prediction (Gen. xlix. 22). The point of the Psalmist's reference to the past consists in this, that God cannot desert, or destroy, any work which He has once begun.

10, 11. The hills of the southern boundary of Canaan; the cedars of Lebanon represent the extreme north; the sea is the Mediterranean; the river, Euphrates.

12. Pul, Tiglath-pileser, Sennacherib.

15. "The Son" is another term for the spiritual vine; and in the allusion to the right hand (17), there is surely a reference to the name which Jacob gave to Benjamin (Gen. xxxv. 18). The name was given by the father under Divine inspiration, and was a pledge of Divine love, not only to him, but to the whole nation whom he represented.

17. Surely our Lord alone perfectly fulfils this description. He is that Son of Man, whom God has made strong for Himself. And God's hand is pledged to maintain Him until the ravages of Satan are made good, and the vine of his church covers the land.

18. We are redeemed, that we should not go back to our old sins, but show forth the praise of our deliverer.

TUESDAY, JULY 29.—Psalm LXXXI.

Probably written by Asaph himself, in the days of David, this Psalm is a call to the people to keep the Passover, the annual feast commemorating the deliverance from Egypt.

Division—A call to celebrate the Passover (1-3); the basis on which it rests (4-7); an appeal to Israel to come back from false gods to its allegiance (8-12); with a promise of the blessings which shall yet accrue to it (13-16).

1. We can sing aloud to God when we realise the great blessings which He is prepared to confer on us, as the remaining verses of this Psalm disclose. Think much of God's resources, all of which are yours in Christ, and then praise Him.

3. The month is the first and chief month of the year, the Passover month, the month of Abib. (Ex. xii. 1, 2; Deut. xvi. 1). "The time of the full moon" defines the days occupied by the sacred feasts.

5. Joseph is mentioned here as representing Israel, because his position in Egypt made him the leader amongst his people. We should never forget our deliverance from a more intolerable servitude, but commemorate it specially in the Lord's Supper. The change to the first pronoun indicates how closely the Divine spirit was behind the Psalmist, so that most naturally, and with no break in the continuity of thought, He passes from one mode of address to another.

6. "His hands were set free from the burden-baskets." Such baskets were found in the sepulchral vaults of Thebes, and were doubtless used in carrying from one place to another the clay and manufactured bricks. Our Saviour has done more than this, relieving us from care and burden-bearing, admitting us into a glorious liberty.

7. God was supposed specially to reside in the storm-cloud. Thence He looked on the hosts of Pharaoh, and spoke from the brow of Sinai. We are reminded of that couplet of Lowell's:—

> Behind the dim unknown
> Standeth God within the shadow,
> Keeping watch above his own.

8, 9. What a peculiar claim God has on the whole-hearted allegiance and devotion of his own! and let us recall the cost at which He has redeemed us, each time we are tempted to desert Him.

10. God wants our emptiness, like the gaping beak of the young fledgling. There is nothing which we really need that He is unable or unwilling to meet. Let us ask Him to fill us with the Holy Ghost, and reckon that He does keep his word (Eph. iv. 18).

12. "With the froward He shows Himself froward" (Rom. i. 24; 2 Thess. ii. 10, 11).

13. Obedience is the condition of full deliverance.

14, 15. Our enemies and God's haters are identical. What encouragement is here! Notice also the permanence of our standing.

16. Strength and sweetness; necessaries and luxuries; complete satisfaction!

WEDNESDAY, JULY 30.—Psalm LXXXII.

The Psalm of the magistrate; perhaps composed on the appointment of judges by Jehoshaphat (2 Chron. xix. 5-7). There is an admonishment for past misconduct (2-4); followed by a lamentation over their obduracy, and a declaration of their doom (5-7). Luther says, "Every prince should get the whole Psalm painted upon the walls of his room, for here such will find what high, princely, noble virtue their situation demands, so that assuredly worldly supremacy, next to the office of the ministry, is the highest service of God, and the most profitable duty upon earth." A very interesting and close parallel to this Psalm occurs in Isa. iii. 13-15.

1. "God judges the gods." Some think that "gods" refers to angels, but this will not suit the tenour of the Psalm. The word unquestionably stands for magistrates and judges. In Exod. xxii. 27, the people were taught to recognise in governors the reflection of the authority of God. Their judgment was said to be God's (Deut. i. 17); and whoever came before them, came before God (Exod. xxi. 6). There could be no doubt, then, that the Heavenly Judge would call them to his bar, if they grossly misrepresented Him.

2. Compare Lev. xix. 15.

5. In spite of Divine protests, men will take their own way. With their back to the true light, they go on towards a darkness which grows denser at every step.

6. It seems at first strange that men so wicked should be dignified by so high a title. But that appellation rather records God's ideal of their sacred office, and calls them to fulfil it. Our Lord quotes this verse in arguing with the Jews (John x. 34) His point being that, if Scripture calls unjust judges "gods," because they filled the place and represented the majesty of God, surely his opponents had no right to accuse Him of blasphemy, because, as "the Sent of God," and engaged in doing his Father's will, He also spoke of Himself as God.

7. If man is lifted to high office, he is but man still. His office, but not his nature, is God-like. And if he do wickedly, he must fall as other princes have fallen before him.

8. This call to God to undertake the judgment of the world is like the cry of the Church to her absent Lord, that He would make haste to right the wrongs of time, and to bring in His glorious kingdom.

THURSDAY, JULY 31.—Psalm LXXXIII.

This Psalm was composed on the occasion described in 2 Chron. xx. In that chapter we are told distinctly that the Spirit of the Lord came on Jahaziel, of the sons of Asaph (14). Perhaps he was the author of this Psalm. This was a song of praise sung before the battle, in sure anticipation of victory.

A short prayer for help (1), is followed by a description of the agony of the people which drove them to take refuge in their Divine Deliverer; the doings (2-4) and the numbers (5-8) of their foes. And then reminding God of what He had done in the days that were past, the singer entreats Him to do the same again, establishing his glory in an incontestable manner (9-18).

2. It is a great source of courage, when we can feel that those who attack us are also in conflict against God; and that God takes our side against our foes and sins.

3. "Hidden" (Ps. xxxi. 20; Matt. xxiii. 37; Col. iii. 3). If only we keep under the covert of God's wings, how safe we are!

4. It is a daring attempt indeed, when men deliberately set themselves to annul God's eternal purpose. "The stars in their courses" fight against all such. There was great wisdom in Gamaliel's counsel (Acts. v. 39).

6, 7, 8. A great confederacy, with one fell purpose. Men who are naturally enemies to each other are allies when they can injure God's people.

9-12. Two deliverances of the past are quoted as specimens of the help which the land required (Jud. iv. v. vii. viii.).

13. "The wheel" is rather "the whirl." And the whole is equivalent to "like the stubble, which is whirled round and carried away."

14. The bracken or furze on the mountains is a ready fuel for the lightning spark which sets it ablaze.

16-18. The disasters which are imprecated on the allied forces are intended to lead them to recognise the supremacy of God. But there is no need to attempt to show the consistency of these petitions with the spirit of Christ; they are evidently inspired by the spirit of that older dispensation, which our Lord so distinctly set aside, as the husk from which the grain has passed into new and more perfect development (Matt. v. 38).

FRIDAY, AUGUST 1.—Psalm LXXXIV.

One of the sweetest of the Psalms. The Gittith is said to have been a musical instrument on which some of the Psalms were played. The speaker is evidently the anointed king (9), a title which clearly designates David, who constantly uses it of himself. The conception of this sacred poem must have been his during the exile caused by Absalom's rebellion, even though its elaboration and ultimate form may have been due to the sons of Korah. The forty-second and forty-third Psalms are inseparably connected with this in their plan and structure, in the colouring of their language, and in their rare and beautiful figures.

The first seven verses, divided into four and three (as is so often the case in the Psalms), contain a meditation; the remaining five are a prayer. Note the three blesseds.

1. "Amiable" in the sense of beloved (Ps. xxvii. 4).

2. The longing and fainting are closely joined with rejoicing (for so might "crieth out" be rendered), and therefore they do not indicate the pain of unsatisfied desire, but of desire which is immediately satisfied, though it still craves for more. The soul which has enjoyed most of God's grace longs most earnestly for it, and in proportion to its longing is its joy.

3. This does not mean simply that he envies the birds which build in Zion, but that he himself is a sparrow or swallow, which, after long wandering has found a home and nest in God's house. "My poor little soul, the terrified little bird, has now found its right house and nest, even thine altars. If I had not found this, I must have been as a lone bird on the house-top, or an owl in the desert." Notice that it is in the altar that rest is found, i.e., in the life of consecration and obedience. If you can say, "My King," you have found your nest.

4. Though not literally, yet spiritually, we may dwell in the Lord's house all our days (Ps. xxiii. 6). As long as you are able to praise, you are there.

5. Two conditions of blessedness: to have God as your strength, and to have in your heart ways. Too many hearts are full of cliffs and precipices, but they need levelling, so that there should be a highway for God (Isa. xl. 3, 4).

6. The valley of Baca is the valley of tears. Some speak of it as the valley of tear-shrubs. But there the righteous will find wells of salvation. If you are now in the valley of tears, be sure you are on the way to the city, and look out for the wells.

10. Better be Lazarus at the threshold of God's house, than Dives in his palace.

11. A Sun in dark hours, and a Shade in scorching ones. Grace is the bud of glory, glory the flower of grace. If God has given the first, He will give the second. If He withholds aught on which you have set your heart, believe it is not really good, and still trust Him.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 2.—Psalm LXXXV.

There is no clue to the historical associations of this Psalm. The description of the distress through which the nation had been passing is quite general. It will, therefore, befit all times of anxiety and depression.

We have first a description in seven verses of the long-protracted misery of the people, and in the six remaining verses a promise of deliverance.

1-3. The Psalmist recounts what God did once, and in this he sets us an example which we may well follow. Our captivity may continue long, but it will be brought back. Iniquity may be aggravated, but it can be forgiven. And the forgiveness of God will cover sin, as the deluge the highest mountains. There is an allusion here to Exod. xxxii. 12.

5. God's anger is short-lived where there is contrition (Ps. xxx. 5).

6. The return of God is the indispensable condition of quickening and rejoicing.

8. God ever speaks peace to his saints, though the world is in revolt (John xx. 19-21). Note the recurring references to peace and righteousness.

10. Mercy and peace are on one side; truth and righteousness on the other. They seem going on different errands and in different directions. But they meet at the cross of Jesus. There we have "the bridal of the earth and sky" (Is. xlv. 8).

12. God gives nought but good, and all good is from God (Jas. i. 17).

13. Righteousness not only looked down from heaven, but, in the person of Jesus, it has trod our earth, leaving footprints for us to follow (1 Pet. ii. 21).

ALCOHOL AND LEPROSY.—Our contemporary The Hospital is responsible for the statement that since steps have been taken to cut off the supply of alcohol to the aborigines, the leprosy plague in Noumea has abated.

CONGO INSTITUTE.—An interesting meeting was recently held at Colwyn Bay, Mr. R. Cory, of Cardiff, in the chair, in connection with the Congo Institute, to bid farewell and God-speed to one of the African boys, Daniel Harvey. He has been there three years, and, having acquired a thorough knowledge of carpentering, is returning to the Congo. There it is hoped he will not only help on civilisation among his own people, but also tell them of Jesus. At present there are only three boys in the Institute; others are expected soon, and if sufficient funds come in it its proposed to increase the number of students. These are selected from the Christian converts on the Congo, sent to Colwyn Bay, North Wales, and there given a sound education, as well as being taught some handicraft. The head of the Institute is its secretary, Mr. Hughes, a returned missionary of the Baptist Missionary Society, whose heart is lit with love to God and to our less fortunate brothers in Africa.

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, August 3.

THE PRODIGAL SON.—LUKE XV. 11-24.

GOLDEN TEXT: Verse 18.

THOUGH this lesson deals only with the younger son, a correct exposition of the parable is impossible without reference to the elder brother. Our Lord's aim is not only to encourage the Publican, but to reprove the Pharisee. The parable most effectually does both. "Strictly speaking, both sons here sketched are lost, the one through the unrighteousness that degrades him, the other through the self-righteousness which blinds him."—Lange. The latter is the more dangerous condition.

Note (1) His sin (12, 13).—It appears in his demand (12), his departure (13), and his dissipation (13). He had got a false conception of what true happiness was. Home restraints had become irksome to him. He wanted freedom and means to enjoy himself. Is not that the picture of happiness which many a young man draws for himself, until, like a will-o'-the-wisp, it lures him on to ruin? Self-pleasing is self-destruction in the end. "He gathered all together," and set a high value upon it as a means to his own enjoyment. But all that was truly good he left behind. He will never find anywhere a satisfactory substitute for home, for a father's love, and for even a father's authority. To be without God is to be poor in the worst sense possible. The far country fitly describes a life of sin. It is where grace finds us all (Eph. ii. 13). Wasted means dissipated, as the chaff is scattered by the winnowing fan. This was a terrible revelation of the sin that was in his heart when he made the demand. There are more prodigals than those whose lives openly declare it. Why did the father allow it? Possibly faithful remonstrance was tried in vain. Argument cannot convince him when his heart is astray; and to retain him by force would only make into a bondage what he ought to delight in as liberty. The only way to bring him to his right mind is to let him eat of the fruit of his own way (Jer. ii. 19).

(2) His misery (14-16).—We never read of sin without reading of misery as the result. They are as inseparable as an object and its shadow. His misery had two stages. The first consisted in the famine (14), and consequent hunger (14). This was bad enough, but his attempt to remedy it brought on a worse stage still, consisting of slavery (15), degrading toil (15), a keen hunger that made him almost envy the swine (16), and the absence of all true friends (16). This is the speedy ruin to which money, and the opportunity to enjoy it often bring young men. I was sent for to visit one such who was dying. Not many months before he had been in humble circumstances, but he came into a fortune (?), which gave him opportunity to work his own ruin by the gratification of every selfish lust. Even for such there is pardon if they return to the Lord; but nothing can ever give them back their wasted years, nor remove the regret with which they look back on such a life. Early decision for Christ is valuable, because it saves from those bitter and unavailing regrets. To the prodigal, everything on which he depended failed him. His goods were all gone; the far-off country was a place of famine; the citizen, so far from helping him only aggravated his degradation and misery: the friends with whom he had squandered all were not to be found now. He found misery where he hoped for pleasure; slavery where he expected liberty; disgrace where he looked for honour; keenest hunger where he anticipated feasting; loneliness and neglect in place of lively companionship.

(3) His repentance (17-20).—He has gone to the greatest possible length, has reached the lowest depth of misery, now his salvation is nigh. His repentance begins with reflection (17). "He came to himself," for he had been beside himself for so long. Sin is insanity. While he sinned he dared not reflect; he does so now, contrasting his condition with that of "hired servants" in his father's house. He loathed the condition to which his sin had reduced him, and longed for any position in the house he had forsaken. He has got a change of mind, which is the first part of Gospel repentance. Then follows humility, in his readiness to be a servant where he had been a son. Before he had demanded, now he claims nothing, but pronounces his own unworthiness. Next came confession (18). His sin "before" his father is "against heaven." True repentance never makes light of sin, and never fails to see it as against God (Ps. li. 4). Then resolution: "I will" (18). There is no hope of improvement where he is; and if a thought occurs to him as to the humiliation of returning in such a plight, he is prepared even for that. A man is not far from true repentance when he makes such a resolution involving such a humiliating confession. But to stop there is to stop short of actual repentance. The last step was return (20). All the rest would be unavailing without this. To think, and mourn, and resolve are nothing unless action follows (Ps. cxix. 59, 60).

(4) His welcome (20-24).—No picture could be more touching. Note how eager it is. The father does not wait. Matthew Henry speaks of "eyes of mercy" (he saw), "bowels of mercy" (had compassion); "feet of mercy" (he ran); "arms of mercy" (fell on his neck)); and "lips of mercy" (kissed him) (20). Note how full it was. He restored him at once to the position of a son, so that the prayer remained unfinished (21). How joyous it was. The robe, the ring, the shoes, the feasting were expressions of the merrymaking with which the prodigal was welcomed. What a different merrymaking from those which the young man had known in the far-off country! How reasonable it was (24). If joy over the finding of a lost sheep or a lost coin is right, how much more may there be joy over the recovery of a lost son?

Such joy the Saviour felt at the time these parables were spoken, for were not the publicans coming to Him?

Such joy God has in the return of every sinner, and He shares it with the returning sinner himself.

Learn the misery of sin; the way of true repentance; the joy of pardon. If you have known the first, come by means of the second to the enjoyment of the third.

Gathered Gold.

EVERY Christian is born great, because he is born for heaven.—Messillon.

Faint not; the miles to heaven are but few and short.—Samuel Rutherford.

I have read in Plato and Cicero sayings that are very wise and very beautiful; but I never read in either of them, "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden."—Augustine.

In affliction, see the necessity of it, and be humble; see the use of it, and improve it; see the love there is in it, and be thankful. I know of no greater blessing than health, except pain and sickness.—Thomas Adam.

He that hath many things to trust to is in suspense which he should take hold of; but where there is but one left, with what greediness will he grasp hold of that. God cuts down worldly props that we may make Him our stay.—Charnock.

Happiness is a sunbeam which may pass through a thousand bosoms without losing a particle of its original ray; nay, when it strikes on a kindred heart, like the converged light on a mirror, it reflects itself with double brightness. Happiness is not perfected till it is shared.—Porter.

The good man will give his best things to God. No starveling goat upon the hills will he present at the altar, but the well-fed bullocks of the luxuriant pastures shall ascend in smoke from the sacred fire. He who is miserly with God is a wretch indeed. Few devise liberal things, but those few find a rich reward in so doing.—C. H. Spurgeon.

RELIGIOUS LITERATURE IN INDIA.—Rev. J.S. Stone, late of Bombay, writes:—"Mr. A. W. Prautch is raising funds to print large editions, in three languages, of Bishop Thoburn's sermonettes, for distribution in Western India. Between January and March 31 he sold 46,736 tracts, in five languages, and 857 vernacular Scripture portions, besides Bibles and Testaments in English and other languages. I look upon this as a very remarkable work."

SECULAR & CHRISTIAN MORALITY.

FROM A SERMON BY REV. D. P. M'PHERSON, LIVERPOOL.

It is possible for a man to possess any amount of self-respect combined with little or no Divine respect. He may resent, with the hot blood mounting in his cheek and the proud fire burning in his eye, the least reflection cast upon his moral character or his "standing in society," and yet may listen in cold blood or yawning carelessness to a thousand imputations or compromising reflections heaped upon God's holy name. "He that hath ears to hear let him hear" this.

A man may "live squarely," and owe no man a penny, and yet never think of God, or his own soul, or pray.

A "square and honest man" without piety of spirit and active love nourishing the heart is like a carved and polished stone without a heart-beat, or a sky without a sun, or earth without a summer.

Piety is the soul and breath of all the virtues. The Christian moralist whether he eats or drinks does all to the glory of God. He does nothing apart from Him. That is, he keeps his eye and thought on God's Word, and will, and Son; and works from, by, and unto God. He treats God as a living, rational, and observant Being with whom he has to do, and takes Him as his Father, Teacher, and Pattern.

O young men, in the sacred name of your God and your soul, join yourselves outwardly and inwardly to the Lord Jesus Christ, who is your highest, lost and found Self, revealed and brought near to you. And never be ashamed to be called Christians, or disciples, or saints, or pious young men.

"Go in" for a religious life. Don't be half-and-half—cold, thin, pale, and watered Christians. Pursue religion, as it is in Christ and the Bible, as you ply your profession or trade. Handle, and thumb, and brood, and pray over your open Bibles, in your quietest, freest, and soberest hours. Thus dig down into the understanding of truth and grace. Make a personal God your friend and counsellor. Train your spirit to converse with his Spirit. Own and honour Him on all high and testing occasions. And supremely reverence God's day, God's house, and God's people. And may grace be given to the "older folk" to set the fair example, in the face of the "fashionable" half-day morning worship!

SUMMER BENEFITS AND THEIR BESTOWAL.

DEAR SIR,—A few summers ago you kindly inserted a note from me on behalf of needy Christian families in our great city, for whom a change into the country was an impossibility. Some abiding fruit followed, as the enclosed letter will show. Perhaps its insertion just now would stir many others to follow the example of the kind and thoughtful writer. How gladly would I or any other London pastor supply names and addresses!

Yours very truly,

FRANK H. WHITE.

Talbot Tabernacle, Bayswater.

DEAR MR. WHITE,—I am going to trouble you again to send me, if you will, the names and addresses of two or three families who perhaps will have no chance of seeing the country or enjoying any of its beauties this summer. I can at least send them some flowers, eggs, &c., though I am sorry to say the fruit is very scarce this year, but the roses are so fine this season, and I feel I should like someone to have the benefit of their sweetness besides myself. If Mrs. E. (whose address you gave me last year) is still at C——road I might send a few things there, and perhaps you would kindly tell me if there are any children, when you send me the names, and then I could enclose something especially for them. Pardon me for giving you so much trouble, but ever since you wrote that little letter in THE CHRISTIAN I have felt so desirous of sharing some of my summer "benefits" with those who, unfortunately, are compelled to remain in London at this season of the year.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The memorial to the Archbishop of York advocating deprivation in place of imprisonment of persistently contumacious clergy has already received the signatures of 72 peers, 55 M.P.'s, 67 bishops and other Church dignitaries, and some hundreds of baronets, justices of the peace, and other gentlemen of position. The numbers are being added to daily.

The Bishop of Durham, addressing a large meeting in Sunderland a few days ago, said that interest in foreign missions was really and truly the gauge of the power of Church life at home, and he hardly thought that we had as yet realised the extent and urgency of our duty in regard to that overwhelming work. The experience of the last few years had taught us well enough that increased energy abroad meant at the same time increased energy at home. It was no longer necessary to meet the old cry, "There are no results." He confessed, for his own part, that what surprised him was, not the scantiness of the results, but their overwhelming grandeur compared with the scantiness of the efforts which had been made.

The Bishop of Liverpool, preaching at Lowton St. Mary's Church, near Leigh, took his text from the words "Looking unto Jesus." He said that the text contained the very points on which all true Christians of every age, of every name, of every nation, and of every tongue thoroughly agreed. True Christians always agree in "looking unto Jesus"; but, unhappily, upon many points they did not agree; and as long as human nature was fallen it would be vain to expect them to agree. In these days people lost sight of the fact that Christ is alive; that they had a Friend at court, One able to receive their confessions and give them absolution, without their going to kneel at the feet of priests. They need not go to the Virgin Mary or any saint, or kneel before a mortal priest, who could not tell whether they were speaking the truth or telling anything that was not correct.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The Hon. and Rev. R. Moreton was inducted last month to the pastorate of St. John's Presbyterian Church, Hamilton, Ontario, of which he has been in charge for some months.

CONGREGATIONAL.

At Buxton open-air services have been recommenced on the Slopes after Sunday evening worship. These services have now entered upon their fifth year. The pastor and those who assist him have been greatly encouraged by the results.

Mr. L. Beaumont, of Nottingham Institute, who has charge of the church at Flockton, near Huddersfield, for a few weeks, has held a very successful ten days' mission, assisted by mission bands from the Moldgreen Church. A number of persons have made an open confession of Christ.

BAPTIST.

Mr. W. Poole Balfern, of Regent's-park College, son of the late Rev. W. Poole Balfern, of Brighton, has been accepted by the Baptist Missionary Society for service on the Congo.

In an appeal just issued, Rev. C. H. Spurgeon calls upon the members of his congregation to bring in some article of clothing at a meeting to be held at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Monday next, for the use of the families of poor ministers. He reminds them that the ladies stocked some forty-nine needy households last year, and says they hope to do more during the next twelve months.

At the committee meeting of the Baptist Missionary Society last week the question was considered of the desirability of sending a deputation to China. During the last few years the work of the Society in that land has been greatly extended, and it has been felt for some time that a delegation might render most important and useful service. A request has been made to Rev. Richard Glover, of Bristol, and Rev. T. M. Morris, of Ipswich, to undertake this work.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Two more missionaries have been accepted for China, and are preparing to go out next year.

One of the orphans of the Hoshimgabad Orphanage, India, has fallen a victim to a cholera epidemic, to the great sorrow of Samuel Baker and helpers.

Commander Carey Brenton, of H.M.S. Fearless, has been visiting the Friends' Mission on Mount Lebanon, and helping them in their work. He was about to leave the Navy and devote himself to Gospel work. His visit made a great impression on the Syrian boys.

In the Monthly Record, of the 15th inst., William D. Priestman gives a cheering account of the spread of adult school work in Australia, and accompanying it is the growth and extension of Friends' meetings. The same periodical reports much and successful school work at home.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Societies of Friends in America have held their second General Conference, at Glen's Falls, New York, and a time of marvellous unity and power they have had. For nine years, since the work began in Western Yearly Meeting, women Friends have been praying and working for corporate union and action in the promotion of all foreign work, and The Friends' Missionary Advocate for this month, with allowable enthusiasm, reports the result—missionary enterprise in Japan, Mexico, Alaska, China, Brumana, and among the Indians and Negroes, must feel the impulse, and countless numbers of heathen the blessing of the intercourse and organisation experienced at Glen's Falls.

METHODIST.

It is expected that at the Wesleyan Conference, which was opened on Tuesday at Bristol, proposals will be brought forward embodying proposals for celebrating the centenary of the death of John Wesley, which took place in London in 1791.

SALVATION ARMY.

There are 62 Salvation Army corps in New Zealand, being a proportion of about one corp to every 10,000 of population. In New South Wales there are 91 corps, or a proportion of one for every 11,000. In Victoria there are 82 corps, or a proportion of one for every 12,000. The Governors of Victoria and Queensland have each sent a donation of £10 to the Army, with an expression of goodwill.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Irish Presbyterian General Assembly has sanctioned the formation of a Young Men's Guild, with the object of uniting all societies or Bible-classes connected with the Church, promoting the intellectual and spiritual life of young men, and encouraging them to undertake Christian work.

A successful series of mission services has just been held in Killybegs, co. Donegal, by Rev. G. Peters, of Liverpool, who conducted two meetings every day except Saturday, while the mission lasted. An encouraging series of Gospel services, extending over a period of four or five weeks, has just been held by Messrs. Dixon and Smith in a tent in the Grosvenor-road, Belfast.

A vigorous effort to reach the masses was made this year on the anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne by Rev. R. C. Johnson and his band of helpers, who conducted a series of services during the day in Donegal Park, where the Orangemen had assembled. A similar effort was made by Revs. A. Armstrong, R. Cole, and others, at Scarva, where between twenty and thirty thousand persons had assembled. In each case good is believed to have been done.

During the past year the Zenana Mission of the Presbyterian Church has taken several steps in advance. It has commenced work in China, where Miss Nicholson has already had much encouragement; it has reopened Borsad, in India, and established at Surat a training class for young Christian women, while at home it has resolved to give bursaries to suitable young women to enable them to qualify as lady doctors for India and China. It has now ten agents, and the income last year was nearly £1000 in advance of that of the previous twelve months.

THE LORD'S DAY.

SIR,—It is surely now quite time that Christians bestirred themselves to make a strong protest against the rapidly growing disregard by those in "high places" of the sanctity of the Sabbath.

During the last few Sundays the papers state that, by "command of the Queen," military bands were stationed on the terrace at Windsor, where they performed for two hours, Her Majesty looking on from her window of the Castle, and the different members of the Royal Family promenading up and down during the time; also that from 7000 to 10,000 people were drawn together to hear them. Surely this looks like an attempt to bring about something of the distraction and levity of a Continental Sunday, when other noticeable innovations are to be added, such as the continued arrivals and departures of the royal princes, and other visitors on that day, thereby necessarily entailing an immense amount of extra labour, not only on the officials of the railway companies, but also on the "Household" as well as private services.

One cannot but deeply regret that such a state of things should of late be, especially when one thinks of the contrast in the Prince Consort's time, whose endeavour it was that "as little work" as possible should be done on the Sunday, in order that the servants at the Castle should have every opportunity given them of attending places of worship.—Yours., &c. S. G.

MR. AND MRS. ARTHUR DICKINSON, well known to many at Plymouth, Cardiff, Bristol, Croydon, and other places where they have laboured, are leaving England for Toronto, Canada.

MR. J. W. WILSON (for some years town missionary at Redruth, Cornwall), who with his wife sailed for Australia last autumn, has been labouring in the Wesleyan circuit of Rupanyup, Victoria, for five months. Much blessing has followed the work of Mr. and Mrs. Wilson. Several have come forward and sought and found the Lord, and believers have been built up. The congregations have been largely increased, and a good work has been done by their visiting. They have since left for a new sphere of labour in Geelong, Melbourne.

Notices.

THE friend who sends THE CHRISTIAN to Rev. Robert Lennie is asked kindly to note that he has removed from Nevada City, California, to New Westminster, British Columbia.

[As it is found that infidels and others send tracts to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most desirable that all books and papers received should be carefully read before being given away.]

Appeals.

Bath City Mission.—Mr. G. J. SNOOK, 5, Dover-place, Bath, will be glad to receive gifts of small Gospel books or tracts for distribution by missionaries at the forthcoming volunteer encampment. Probably three thousand young men will be under canvas from August 2—9.

"Welcome Home," Simon's Town, West Africa.—Simon's Town is the headquarters of the West African and Cape of Good Hope Naval Station, and is the place at which our bluejackets land after remaining on board their ships for months on the unhealthy West Coast. It is very important that there should be a Home at this place where Christian and temperance work are carried on. To meet the case fully a new and larger Home is urgently required. E. J. WILLIAMS.

Wesleyan Centenary Hall, Bishopsgate.

Grimsby Railway Mission and Christian Association.—There are about 2000 men employed here in connection with the railway companies. In 1888 a mission hall was built, capable of holding 700 persons. It cost £700, of which about £300 has yet to be raised. To clear the building of debt will greatly help the work, which is of an unsectarian character, and has the sympathy of representatives of various evangelical churches. The hon. treasurer of the Mission is Mr. W. MUDD, Sylvan Villa, Dudley-street, Grimsby.

The Shop-girls' Home.—Seven years ago a Cottage Home near Epping Forest was established by two young ladies for the poor workers in London shops. Many of these, from excessive toil and poverty, are sinking, both in health and spirit, without the possibility of the needful change and absolute rest. 1200 in all have been received, and they have learned what true sympathy and Christian love mean; and have gone back to their hard life with, at least, sweet thoughts and memories, as well as renewed health and courage. But so many of them had not one penny to spare towards the little trip that the funds are all but gone, and the Home must shortly be closed for the present, unless further help be forthcoming. Any donation will be gratefully accepted by Miss H. REYNOLDS, Epping New-road, Buckhurst-hill, Essex, or by the writer; and a little detailed report will be sent on application. SOPHIA MAY.

Seascale, Cumberland.

MRS. COLIN L. WRIGHT, an American Presbyterian missionary in Persia, has been murdered by a native school teacher. The crime was the result of the teacher having been dismissed for bad conduct. The murderer has been captured.

MR. BENNETT ANDERSON.—After ten years of steady work at Byrom Hall, Liverpool, of which he is the esteemed pastor, Mr. J. Bennett Anderson finds his health failing. The deacons and members of his church have offered, rather than lose his services altogether, to give him leave of absence for nine months, with three months' stipend, to sail to New Zealand and Australia. Mr. Anderson hopes to be sufficiently restored by the voyage to be able to do the work of an evangelist in the Colonies, and subsequently to return to Byrom Hall. He expects to sail early in September. Mr. Anderson has been preaching the Gospel for thirty years, having been brought to the Lord during the visit of Dr. and Mrs. Palmer, of New York, to this country.

Forthcoming Meetings.

THE EVANGELISATION SOCIETY will send evangelists to any part of England, Scotland, and Wales on due notice. Hon. Sec., 21, Surrey-street, Strand, W.C.

THE IRISH EVANGELISATION SOCIETY will send evangelists to any part of Ireland on due notice. Apply to Mr. J. Barton, Hon. Sec., Dundalk, Ireland.

THE CHURCH ARMY will send evangelists (working-men) to any clergymen on due notice, for short or long missions. Hon. Sec., 128 & 130, Edgware-road, W.

THE METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE EVANGELISTS' ASSOCIATION will send evangelists to any evangelical denomination in London. Hon. Sec., 121, Camberwell New-road, S.E.

THE COUNTRY TOWNS MISSION supplies qualified missionaries for work in the country. Apply to Secretary, 18, New Bridge-street, Ludgate-circus, E.C.

SONGS OF THE GOSPEL.

A Choice Collection of Sacred Songs.

EDITED AND COMPOSED BY

JAMES McGRANAHAN.

IN OLD NOTATION OR TONIC SOL-FA.

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

WORDS ONLY.

Tinted covers, 1d.; Printed covers, 2d.

"The Hymns have abundant 'swing' and 'march' in them, and will be found largely suitable for evangelistic work. It is gratifying to learn from Mr. McGranahan's preface that the 'Songs of the Gospel' have for the most part been written—words and music—by those engaged in evangelistic work. This is as it should be. The labourers in the harvest field best understand what is likely to be of service to them in their work."—The Christian.

(THIRTY-FOURTH SERIES.)

"VERY BAD CHEST DISEASE and AFFECTION OF THE HEART"—CASE at CRADLEY HEATH.

This patient—Mr. ALFRED WILKINS, 11, HIGH-STREET, CRADLEY HEATH—sought my advice in February of this year. His condition was then reported by the local doctor, as above described.

He had been subject to bronchitis more or less for fifteen years. The last attack (this winter), to use his own words, "laid faster hold of him than any other;" the cough was severe, the expectoration varying from light yellow (the primrose shade) to very dark, and difficult to raise. The breathing at times very difficult—"suffocating"—with pains under the shoulder blades.

The patient had taken no solid food for several weeks, and there was a consequent wasting of flesh, and diminution of strength.

It was in little more than two months after commencing my treatment that Mr. Wilkins was fully restored to health.

Writing me, June 14, he says:—"The result was marvellous. I am to-day as well as I have been for years. Should I at any future time have another attack, or threatening of attack, I shall certainly immediately fly to you."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

WITH NUMEROUS ENGRAVINGS.

PRESS NOTICES.

"'THE HERALD OF MERCY' ought to be very widely spread in the homes of the poor, where we are certain it would meet with a hearty welcome. To ministers and visitors we recommend it as one of the best works we know."
Preacher's Analyst.

"This excellent magazine is in every respect worthy of its originator and of its name. It contains a great variety of interesting and instructive articles, both in prose and verse, all illustrative of some important truth; but its principal aim seems to show the fulness and freeness of God's mercy, and the simplicity of the way of salvation. We heartily recommend it."
Wesleyan S. S. Magazine.

PRESS NOTICES.

"This 'HERALD' ought to be specially welcome. The illustrations that abound on every page will make Gospel truth attractive to the eye as well as to the heart, and the simple poetry by different writers ought to help many weary souls. We most heartily wish 'God speed' to 'The Herald of Mercy.'"—Congregational Magazine.

"Few periodicals succeed in preserving their original fervour as 'The Herald of Mercy.' The editor has gathered around him a staff of writers who are animated by the same spirit which shone so brightly in Duncan Matheson. Primarily designed for humble homes, 'The Herald' is sure of a welcome in the mansion as well as the cottage."—Christian Leader.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR

Is a Household Requisite of Constant Utility.

That BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR possesses very valuable qualities as a food for all classes, at all periods of life except earliest infancy, has been attested by eminent dietetic authorities, as well as by universal public experience during over thirty years.

Interested attempts to set aside these facts in favour of other foods can only appeal to ignorance and prejudice, and it remains true that no other kind of food can serve the special purposes of Corn Flour.

WORKS BY REV. DR. JAMES CULROSS.

"THY FIRST LOVE."

CHRIST'S MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH AT EPHESUS.

With Chromo-Lithographic Frontispiece.

TINTED COVERS, 1s. 6d.;
CLOTH, BEVELLED BOARDS, 2s. 6d.

"Full of choice thoughts, beautifully expressed, this work breathes a truly Christ-like spirit, which will render it dear to all spiritually-minded readers."
Word and Work.

"The glow, as from a golden sunset, which the imagination sheds over his style, gives it a great charm."—The British Messenger.

"This work is instructive, suggestive, full of spiritual force, and at the same time strong and manly. These latter adjectives we find it impossible to use concerning many of the devotional books produced in our day. Because we may honestly use them in this case, we heartily commend this book for the refreshment of our busy teachers."—Sunday School Chronicle.

"BEHOLD, I STAND AT THE DOOR AND KNOCK."

CHRIST'S MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH AT LAODICEA.

With Chromo-Lithographic Frontispiece.

TINTED COVERS, 1s.; CLOTH LIMP, 1s. 6d.;
SUPERIOR EDITION:
CLOTH, BEVELLED BOARDS, 2s. 6d.

"Another 'gem of purest ray serene' from the deep waters of our brother's teeming mind. He possesses a ripeness of thought and a beauty of expression which, in our judgment, are scarcely equalled, and in not one instance surpassed, by those of any other living teacher known to us."—The Sword and Trowel.

"This very handsome volume on a subject of perpetual importance will be welcomed, especially by those who are acquainted with Dr. Culross's other excellent works. Dr. Culross has here pre-eminently exhibited his usual excellence as a religious writer. Clear in style and eloquent in argument, striking in illustration. Never wordy or tedious, never flat or cold, but always exhibiting great Christian affection, with the obvious sense of the fidelity his subject so solemnly demands. We are sure this work will be useful wherever it is read."—Baptist Messenger.

JOHN, WHOM JESUS LOVED.

A SKETCH OF THE CHARACTER, WRITINGS, THEOLOGY, AND INFLUENCE OF THE BELOVED DISCIPLE.

With Chromo-Lithographic Views.

Tinted covers, 2s.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d. Cloth bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

REV. C. H. SPURGEON says:—"Preachers abound; but divines are few. The printing press pours forth a mass of matter; but a real book is a phenomenon. We count ourselves happy, for we have met with a divine in Dr. James Culross; and in his work, entitled 'John, Whom Jesus Loved,' we have found a book. Many writers are mere echoes of other men's voices—they imitate the good steward in bringing forth things old, but things new are quite out of their way. One of the excellences of Dr. Culross is the freshness of his thought. The dew is on his branch; he is no withered bough of the autumn frost. His mind allows young flowers to break through its soil after their own fashion, and to blossom in their own sweet way."

"It is altogether without reserve that we commend the work before us. It is not a bottle of milk for babes, but a portion of meat for men. A half-dozen readings will only make it more interesting to those who meditate upon what they read."
The Sword and Trowel.

"We can most heartily commend this most refreshing and helpful book to all our teachers. It is full of carefully selected information, most valuable to those who have to use the writings of John as a text-book. It is the work of one who is evidently in close sympathy with the ardent loving nature of the beloved Apostle. ...It is a most healthy book for quiet, meditative moods. . . . Our teachers will get a great blessing in communing with the apostle John through the help of this truly valuable book of Dr. Culross."—Preacher's Storehouse.

ZENANA MEDICAL COLLEGE, 58, St. George's-road, S.W. — The Committee are prepared to receive applications for admission next term. The daughter of an Armenian pastor asks for "Free Training." Who will help?
Dr. GRIFFITH, Hon. Sec.

REV. CANON SCOTT, Vicar of West Ham, E., makes an earnest appeal for help towards putting up an Iron Room for mission services, temperance meetings, &c., and for fitting up a House for factory girls' classes, &c., in different parts of his large and ever increasing poor parish. £150 is the least amount required. He has just built a new church, and has thus exhausted all the resources on which he can ordinarily rely for assistance. Canon Scott is at present staying at Comrie, Crieff, N.B.

HOME FOR THE FATHERLESS, 64, 66, 70, 72, 74, and 76, Lewisham-road, Greenwich, S.E.—The 21st Anniversary will be celebrated at the Home, on Friday, August 8, 1890. Tea at 5.30.

ROYAL FREE HOSPITAL, GRAY'S INN ROAD.

President.—The Marquis of DUFFERIN and AVA.

BUILDING FUND APPEAL.

An earnest appeal is made for Funds to enable the Committee to rebuild the front portion of the Hospital, which is much dilapidated, and quite inadequate and unfit for the increasing needs of the Charity. It is therefore imperative that the work of rebuilding should be undertaken without delay. The estimated cost of rebuilding the front portion and furnishing it is about £20,000. Admission to the Hospital is entirely Free, no letters of recommendation being required. Contributions for the Building Fund and for the general expenses will be gratefully received by Messrs. BROWN, JANSON & CO., 32, Abchurch-lane; or at the Hospital by CONRAD W. THIES, Secretary.

GUY'S GUIDE TO DIGESTION

IS an interesting account of the time taken to digest nearly every article of food known. Business anxieties and harassing family cares interfere so much with the healthy activity of the stomach that all should pay attention to the digestibility of food. When roast pork takes five hours and twenty minutes to digest, and venison only one hour and thirty minutes, it will be seen of what infinite consequence to happiness is this Guide. It will be sent GRATIS and POST FREE to any reader who will write for it.—T. GUY & CO., 4, Ludgate-circus, London, E.C.

NEW WORK by REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

Tried by Fire:

EXPOSITIONS OF THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PETER.

Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.; Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"Delivered first as Expositions in the course of my stated ministry, and in pursuance of my constant custom, they were afterwards published week by week in the pages of The Christian, and in response to very many requests are here preserved in a permanent form.

"Written amid the multiplied engagements of a busy life, it would be impossible to estimate the benefit to heart and thought by bending over these translucent depths of sacred truth—so calm, so still, so profound, so counteractive of life's feverish haste: and it is my earnest hope that these Expositions may pass on to others some of the blessedness which their preparation has brought to myself."
Extract from Preface.

"These discourses are marked by vigorous language, by spiritual thought, and by a high and holy purpose. They are practical rather than critical; and we have no doubt the book will help to promote the Christian Life."—Methodist Times.

"Many of these expositions have already greatly interested us, and we are glad to see them reprinted. There is in them such evident sincerity of soul, such simplicity, earnestness, and beauty, as to charm the devout and thoughtful reader. Some features of the work especially strike us, such as the ease, accuracy, and freedom with which the word 'elect' is treated (page 13); the many indications of careful, exegetical reading shown in passages of great beauty, as on pages 24, 38, 48, and elsewhere. In fact, we can scarcely turn over a leaf without finding some passages of intense force and of touching tenderness."
Sunday School Chronicle.

"The papers forming this volume having recently appeared in 'THE CHRISTIAN,' have doubtless been read with interest by many of our readers, from some of whom we have received grateful testimony to the consolation and help they have proved to them while passing through seasons of severe suffering and trial. The book is written in the author's well-known thoughtful and forcible style, presenting the truth both in an expository and practical manner. We warmly commend the work."
Footsteps of Truth.

"The popularity of Mr. Meyer's Expositions is a good sign of the times. This, the latest, is one of the best, and is full of tender Christian wisdom. There are many unobtrusive signs of thought ane culture throughout, but the chief charm of the book is its earnest simplicity."—British Weekly, July 11, 1890.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. W. F. Moulton, D.D., of Cambridge, President of the Wesleyan Conference.

Our Day in the Country Fund is overdrawn, and there are yet some applicants we desire to help. We shall, therefore, be glad if those friends who desire to send gifts toward this excellent object will do so as early as possible.

It is necessary that, from year to year, temperance workers should put country labourers and others on their guard against infringements of the Truck Amendment Act, by farmers supplying them with intoxicating drink as part payment for work done. This is the season when unprincipled employers may be expected to act on an old custom, now illegal, of supplying strong drink to their workmen. It is hoped that the law will be rigorously enforced, to the moral as well as the social well-being of the labouring classes.

Referring to a recent note in which it was stated that "the majority of church members are neither more holy in life, nor more intelligent in the truth, than when they were converted, perhaps years before," Mr. E. R. Hutchence, of New Barnet, writes:—"I cannot help thinking that those church members never were converted." He insists upon the importance of the doctrine of regeneration being emphasised by evangelists. "It is absolutely necessary that people should be born again of the Spirit, that they become new creatures in Christ Jesus, if they are to become members of the spiritual kingdom, the Head of which is Christ." These are words of timely caution, to which we all do well to give heed.

A contributor sends us what follows on the subject of the exposure of the errors of Romanism, or the animadverting upon them:—

> After the Apostle (1 Tim. iv.) has referred to the express teaching of the Spirit concerning the falling away in later times with respect to seducing spirits, the hypocrisy of men speaking lies, the forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats, he says to Timothy: "If thou put the brethren in mind of these things, thou shalt be a good minister of Christ Jesus."

This ought to settle the question.

The Liverpool Daily Post seems to have got into hot water in consequence of some criticism upon a Roman Catholic preacher, which appeared in one of a series of pulpit sketches now being published in its columns. The Romanist objectors take exception to an assertion that Rev. Luke Rivington's sermons were "a mere blank demand for the abject prostration of the intellect," and plead that the subjection of the intellect to the voice of authority in religious matters is far from being a sign of abjection. In this view we are inclined to agree, only the question arises: Whose is the voice, and what is the authority? When we find that a human power is presented as dominant over the Divine Word, we may be excused if we coincide with our Liverpool contemporary.

We have received, in reply to Rev. J. Idrysin Jones's protest against fixing prophetic dates, a letter from Rev. M. Baxter in which he defends the position he has taken. We have also received communications in support of Mr. Jones. We have not space to devote to the discussion, and, as there are two periodicals occupied with the subject, there is the less need for us to do more than express our own conviction. We have long come to the conclusion that it is not the purpose of God that we should speculate on the details of unfulfilled prophecy. We are to take heed to the signs of our own time, but if it were needful or desirable that we should be informed as to how or when things foretold are to transpire, it could have been made plain enough to leave no room for the guessing in which no two expositors quite agree, and for which none can claim an unmistakable Thus saith the Lord.

Mr. William Peck Smith, of Brooklyn, writes:—

> As I am about to hold some conventions, and am taking part in meetings in various parts of London, I desire to state plainly that I teach that the Lord is able to, and does, by the power of the redemption accomplished by our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and by the Holy Spirit's power, destroy, eradicate, or exterminate, in the present tense, the old man in the carnal nature.

We can only say that this is the germ and seed of "perfectionism"; that it is in our judgment unscriptural; in flat contradiction to 1 John i. 8; and that it will bear evil fruit as it has done already.

We are glad to find that M. Jules Simon and others, representing the League for promoting Sunday Rest for Working People in France, recently appealed to the Minister of Public Works to assist them in endeavouring to influence the railway companies to suspend goods traffic on Sundays. The Minister has made a communication to the companies, and expressed his hope that they would so regulate their traffic as to give "one day in seven" to their servants. Slowly but surely the movement for securing a rest day in France seems to be spreading.

Unfortunately, there appears to be a tendency in quite the opposite direction in certain sections of English society. A few days ago The Star recorded the founding of a new club, one of whose objects would appear to be the holding of concerts, soirées, and other entertainments on Lord's Day evenings. Our contemporary observed: "Thus the secularisation of Sunday in the West-end goes on." The phrase is full of meaning, for it points not only to a decadence from a nobler and better life on the part of those whose thirst for amusement cannot be gratified within six days, but it points also to a further infringement upon the rights of those who have to toil. It cannot be too strongly impressed upon the working classes that the secularisation of the Sabbath means to them, quite apart from spiritual and moral loss, seven days' labour for six days' wages.

The announcement of an Anti-Semitic Congress, to be held in Germany at the end of this year, illustrates very strikingly our comments of last week in regard to the development of an antagonistic spirit towards the Jews. Strange to say, it is stated that the chief agents in the movement in Germany are Lutherans. If such be the case, they have failed to learn of the spirit of Christ, and would seem to have forgotten that Jesus responded with his miracles of healing when he was appealed to as Son of David.

In the course of a recent practical and instructive address at the Victoria Institute, Rev. Dr. Wace pointed out how comparatively slight was the evidence upon which some of the most confident conclusions in history and science might rest. He maintained that science is misemployed when used against religion, quite as much as religion is misemployed when used against science. These words convey a salutary truth and a timely warning. There is no need for the religious man to be alarmed at every new so-called "scientific" discovery, when he remembers that many of the bold assertions and destructive conjectures made by votaries of science are not to be mistaken for established certainties and proved conclusions. It is when the scientist denies a man's right to believe anything which he does not know scientifically, and when he endeavours to demonstrate or analyse sublime and spiritual truths like a mathematical problem or a chemical combination, that his claims are to be resisted. From such researches of science as are carefully and reverently conducted and accurately reported, religion and the Bible have nothing to fear. Such investigations do but lead to an increased recognition of God's manifold wisdom and marvellous power. On the other hand, science may confer on man as a spiritual being a very real boon when it teaches him the limits of his own intellect, and that something more than his own reason is needed to attain to the highest truths—that he cannot "by searching find out God."

It is very satisfactory to learn from the interesting and suggestive Report of the Government Inspector of Reformatory and Industrial Schools that the number of juvenile offenders is steadily on the decrease. The number of commitments of children under sixteen years of age during last year was a little over four thousand, which is less than half what it was twenty years ago: and this decrease, it is to be noted, has taken place notwithstanding the continuous increase of the general population. A still more gratifying proof of the permanent influence for good of these institutions is that, of the boys and girls discharged from Reformatories during three years, 78 per cent. and 73 per cent. respectively are known to be doing well; the percentage in the case of Industrial Schools is even higher, being 84 per cent. for boys and 83 per cent. for girls. In gauging the full value of these figures it is also to be remembered that, of the fifteen hundred children admitted into Reformatory Schools last year, upwards of one-third had been once previously convicted, upwards of two hundred of them twice, and that the rest of the inmates of these Institutions have been rescued from the streets.

It will be generally conceded that these results reflect great credit upon the labours of those philanthropists who discharge the difficult duty of supervising these undertakings, which owe their existence entirely to voluntary and independent efforts. At the same time, it may be observed that if parents properly discharged their duties towards their children, and if society at large were more alive to its duties and responsibilities in this direction, the need of such establishments would be greatly lessened. It is to be regretted that the funds do not admit of more use being made of emigration as a very efficient and beneficial means of disposing of the boys and girls on their discharge. The cost of sending one to Canada does not exceed £8. Here, then, is an opportunity for a most wholesome exercise of private benevolence. Another point that may be noticed is the want of greater facilities for committing a young offender (whose misdeed may be a very trifling one) to these institutions without a preliminary imprisonment; for this has a hardening influence upon the youthful character, and experience has proved that to be branded with the prison mark is often a very serious hindrance to future advancement in life.

To such as are about to leave home for their annual holiday, but have not yet made their final choice of locality, we trust that it may not be too late to urge the claims of Ireland. Apart from the beauty of the scenery, the many interesting and pathetic relics and monuments, both Pagan and Christian, and the freshness and originality of manner which mark many of the people, tourists may have the agreeable reflection that the money which they expend will be beneficial in alleviating some of the poverty and misery. By a personal observation of the scenes round which fierce political battles have so long been waged, and by noting the characteristics of the people, they may attain to a better understanding of the needs of the sister isle. Those who select Ireland for the scene of their physical and mental recuperation, and make an intelligent use of their opportunities as they travel, may return with the knowledge that their holiday has been productive of more real benefit to others than if their time and money had been spent upon the expensive luxuries and sometimes doubtful pleasures of a Continental tour.

Harper's Weekly lately contained a description of a church belonging to the Episcopal Methodists at Denver, Colorado, of which the following figures express the cost: the four lots on which it stands, 75,000 dollars; the organ, 30,000; and the church in actual valuation more than a quarter of a million dollars. The New York Nation, of the 3rd ult., argues that the political influence once wielded by the intellectual classes in America has passed into the hands of the plutocracy. If the monied class is carrying out in Colorado the principles of John Wesley their missionary and humane contributions should be in consistency with the dollars spent on their luxurious buildings, and therefore enormously large. We hope it is so.

Dr. Moulton, who by a large majority has been called to the Presidency of the Wesleyan Conference, is the writer of the valuable notes on the Epistle to the Hebrews in Dr. Ellicott's "New Testament Commentary for English Readers." The notes, being written in a scholarly rather than a popular style, have not won the attention they deserve. They have been very thoughtfully prepared; are remarkably free from any sectarian bias; are evangelical in a most devout spirit; and again and again give evidence of deep spiritual insight.

Reflections have sometimes been made respecting the transient effect of Mr. Moody's labours in England. A very different account is given in a life just issued, with recollections by Dr. R. W. Dale, of Rev. W. F. Callaway, minister of Soho-hill Chapel, Birmingham (printed for private circulation). In 1874, Messrs. Moody and Sankey first visited Birmingham. A year after Mr. Callaway wrote concerning his own people:

"Twelve months have now passed, and it may be boldly said that the results of Mr. Moody's work are greater and more manifest than ever. There is a sunshine in many which they before had not known, and a love of righteousness and hatred of iniquity which are growing" (p. 125). A year later, he says: "Of all those I have known as blessed by Mr. Moody's ministry, not one has turned back. Many are a comfort and joy who were an anxiety and fear." A year later than this, he records: "The number of admissions [i.e., to the church of which he was pastor] before Mr. Moody's coming, was eighty-six; the number during the three years since has been 191, and I have been more careful during the latter than the former period. Till I die I shall bless God for that time of camping with the hosts of Israel when the pillar of cloud seemed to gleam and glance in the midst of us" (p. 129).

We have observed, with considerable surprise, that the committee of the Young Men's Christian Association at Newcastle-on-Tyne are making overtures for a literary address from their Parliamentary member, Mr. John Morley. On May 29, the Bishop of Sodor and Man spoke thus:—

Of serious import is the position of avowed unbelief taken by some of our leading men in the world of science and politics. A recent number of The Quarterly Review has drawn attention to the fact that Mr. John Morley has within the last ten years not only denied the truth of Christianity, but has denounced "the whole system of objective propositions which make up the popular belief of the day, as false, positively, absolutely, and without reserve."

There is nothing new in this statement. The substance of it in its relation to the ex-Cabinet Minister is generally known, and, so far as we are aware, has never been disavowed. If, however, unbelievers of this school are admitted as lecturers to Young Men's Christian Associations, the purpose of these organisations will not merely be weakened, but undermined; prayer to God before such addresses will be an offence to devout men; and there will come a very dark eclipse over a witness of unspeakable importance in these days. Assuredly 2 John vi. 11 has an authoritative bearing here.

The Signs of This Time.

We are living in stirring times. For is it not a new thing for such great numbers of the children of Abraham in Russia and elsewhere to be reading a translation into Hebrew of the New Testament, and that a single donor, whose name is not given, has paid through the Bank of England £5000 for another much-needed edition? *

Again, is it not a startling thing to have immense tracts of central Africa, by the travels of Stanley, and the action of the German, British, and Belgian Governments, &c., thrown open to civilisation and missionary effort?

But, to draw the attention of believers all over the world to one more matter, has there during the last 300 years been such a demand as has come to our ears from the gathered missionaries of China, lately assembled at Shanghai, to send out for labour in that empire alone over one thousand additional missionaries, besides female helpers and what are called lay missionaries?

Is not this, then, an hour for men and women who know the power of closet prayer, and the power of combined prayer, to remember that we are in a better day than Elijah was, and to fall flat on the Lord's formula:

"The harvest is great, the labourers are few. Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest that He would send forth labourers into his harvest"?

We would ask the Lord Himself to apprehend the labourers, and Himself to thrust out selected men and women—"Whatsoever ye ask the Father in my name, believing, He will give." Again, let us remember the Lord's formula in praying, "That all who believe in Him my be ONE THAT the world may believe that Thou hast sent me." How can the Lord command the forces of heaven to our help if we love not one another?

Again, and very specially, may it be ever present to our minds that ALL his disciples, the women and the men, He says, are to be his witnesses after He should have departed, and the better day (more expedient) should have been ushered in by the descent of the Holy Ghost, which period stretches over the days wherein we now are living.

Then, as we contemplate the hundreds of Christian men, and perhaps to some extent, of women, that the exigencies of civilisation and commerce, railways, telegraphs, roads, and canals, may during the next few years call into Africa, China, South America, and other lands, what a needs-be that these self-supporting ones should be like the thousands of women and men that were scattered abroad after Stephen's murder, when all (except the Apostles who were left at Jerusalem) went everywhere spreading the word, and also like the tens of thousands that were scattered abroad by the subsequent persecutions, and who so mightily spread the Gospel.

Surely, SURELY the hour has come when we must fall back to our good old Bible for advice and instruction and not shun its precedents.

Surely, whilst this is a most important demand of the Shanghai Conference, conjoined to the cry of over two hundred missionary ladies there for many sisters to come out to their help, yet the sooner we get to understand that our glorious New Testament does not ask or expect the evangelisation of the world to be done by ministers, or even by apostles, any more than a general expects the fighting to be accomplished by himself or his officers, but in far greater part by the rank and file—the sooner we get ingrained into our very hearts this A B C truth of the Lord Jesus—the sooner will the day of missionary advance begin. The apostles were so fond of native agency that they did not even send as far as Jerusalem for a foreign pastor, but out of the converts in each town got a few native overseers fixed over the flock.

The Keswick Convention.

This year's gathering is now a thing of the past, so far as the meetings are concerned; but who can say where the effects of it will cease? The wave is only just started which must circle, ever widening, over the world. It is hardly too much to say that all the world, at least all the Christian work of the world, has been represented there in some form or another.

It is a marvellous spectacle to look on this vast crowd of three thousand Christians, gathered from the ends of the earth, and from all parts of the Continent and the United Kingdom; to see their happy faces, and to witness the entire and real oneness of spirit. Here is one answer at least to the Master's great intercessory prayer for the oneness of his Church. The Church of England dignitary and the Dissenting minister meet on absolutely equal terms. And the whole assembly listens with unfaltering interest to the Baptist minister, the Presbyterian divine, or the Episcopal clergyman. And there seems no effort about this union; it is the spontaneous outcome of a common devotion to the one Lord.

The material of the audiences which crowd the spacious tent four or five times each day, is no less remarkable. There is an equal proportion of men and women, and a marvellous number of young men and women, the very flower and pick of English youth, fresh from our colleges, standing full of promise on the threshold of a noble life. The young men's meetings are alike wonderful for the quality, bearing and earnestness of those who crowd into them. The women are of the class to whom the Apostle Paul sent his messages in the last chapter of his Epistle to the Romans. Here are workers from the zenanas of India and Northern Africa; from China and Japan; organisers and leaders in Y.W.C.A.'s, railway, post-office, and police missions; and representatives of all conceivable Christian enterprise, from well-known directors of great institutions to unknown slum workers whose names are no less enrolled in heaven. Missionaries have arrived from all parts, for many of whom accommodation has been provided free of charge, through the thoughtful kindness of some whose names must be kept secret here, though they are known above. Dignitaries of the Church, Presbyterian and Congregational ministers, are present this year in quite unusual numbers, and for them two or three large and special meetings were arranged.

One great feature of the year has been the care with which the sectional meetings were organised. The Lecture Hall and Drill Hall were almost constantly in use, as well as the tent, though they seemed to do but little to relieve the pressure on the accommodation of the tent, the entrances into which were almost always choked with people. The leading speakers of the Convention were told off to speak at these meetings, and in many cases the interest excited and the power realised seemed to equal, if not to surpass, that of the larger gatherings. The fervour, the quiet power, unbroken by ejaculations, the mighty blending of sound in the singing of the well-known hymns, and the character of the addresses, could not but impress the most casual observer; and it was no mean tribute which was paid by Dr. Grattan Guinness, who on the last morning said that it was his first visit, and that he rejoiced in these meetings, and believed them to be a genuine moving of the Holy Ghost.

The subject matter of the teaching is too well known to need remark. There is not much fear of wildfire or unsound doctrine, when such men as Revs. H. W. Webb-Peploe, Handley Moule, and Hubert Brooke are to the front; though in connection with the utterances of the first-named speaker one of the most interesting and notable episodes of the Convention took place.

Things had gone much as usual, until Thursday evening, when the views of some in the Convention as to the desirability of seeking a special baptism of the Holy Spirit found marked expression in the address of one of the speakers in the tent. This elicited on Friday morning a masterly Bible-reading by Mr. Webb-Peploe, the object of which was to show that the Church has already received the gift of the Holy Spirit, and only needs more fully to develop this greatest of all gifts by use; and that each individual Christian is baptized into the one body by the Spirit in regeneration, and only needs to break down the barriers and empty the chambers of the heart to realise all that God has intended. In this most Scriptural, scholarly, and exhaustive exposition, he undoubtedly carried with him the main consensus of opinion of the Convention.

The address excited deep interest, and occasioned much remark afterwards, and on the whole was spoken of as marking an era in the history of the Convention. We shall give this address in full in our next, and commend it to the closest consideration of our readers.

In the evening meeting more than one allusion was made to it, and at night, from ten to eleven o'clock, a most remarkable scene took place in the tent, when 1000 to 1500 persons gathered, under the presidency of Mr. Wilson, and the Convention speakers, in which, for a whole hour, with no address and little leadership from the platform, and whilst nearly everyone was in the attitude of prayer, there was one incessant stream of petition for a mightier work of the Holy Spirit on individuals and the entire Church of Christ throughout the world. Some of those prayers will be remembered as long as memory holds her seat. Nevertheless, there was some tendency to an unhealthy excitement. Indeed, the bearing of some of those who claimed to know the special baptism of the Spirit did not compare favourably with the reverence, courtesy, and self-restraint, that had characterised the utterance of Mr. Webb-Peploe, in which conscientious search of Scripture was as manifest as the sense of responsibility under which it was given forth.

The bulk of those attending the Conference remained over the second Sunday. In consequence, the missionary meeting of Saturday morning was larger than ever, and filled the tent. Mr. Grubb gave an account, reported elsewhere, of his mission to Ceylon, Southern India, and New Zealand. Under the guidance of Mr. Eugene Stock, a number of missionaries from various parts gave short addresses; followed by two closing, powerful appeals by Dr. Grattan Guinness and Mr. Reginald Radcliffe. It was a memorable meeting, and a sufficient vindication of the movement from the charge of being indifferent to the needs of the world. When a show of hands was asked of those who were eager to go out, if the way should open, not fewer than 300 were held up; and, to judge by the amounts handed in at the close, a very substantial sum was contributed to assist in various movements in which the Convention is specially interested. At one small meeting of the railway workers £150 was subscribed on the spot, for the opening, free of debt, of a new hall in Dublin for railway men.

It may be easier to criticise the Convention when we look back on it from a distance and after an interval of time; but, writing as we do under its immediate impression, we cannot find it in our heart to do anything more than express our thankfulness that such a gathering of believers is possible. It must be productive of untold good to all those who share in its benefits. It would doubtless be a misfortune if Christian people should be disqualified by these gatherings for the more prosaic services of their own places of worship, but we do not believe that such will be the case. On the contrary, those who have received most benefit from these meetings will be they who will go home to be the stay and support of their own ministers, the leaders in all good work, and the most consistent in the details of their own daily home life.

ONLY A YEAR.

[Written by Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe on the death of her son by drowning, at the age of eighteen.]

Only a year! a ringing voice,
A clear blue eye,
And clustering curls of sunny hair,
Too fair to die.

Only a year! no voice, no smile,
No glance of eye,
No clustering curls of sunny hair,
Fair, but to die.

Only a year! what loves, what schemes,
Fair unto life;
What joyous hopes, what high resolves,
What generous strife.

The picture on the wall,
The burial stone,
Of all that beauty life and joy
Remain alone.

The grass grows green where the flowers bloom
Above that head,
No sorrowing tint on leaf or spray
Says "he is dead."

No pause, or sorrow, or hush of birds
That sing above,
Tell us how coldly sleeps
The form we love.

One year, one year! one little year,
And so much gone,
And yet the even flow of life
Moves calmly on.

Where hast thou been this year, beloved?
Where hast thou been?
What visions fair? what glorious strife?
What hast thou seen?

The veil, the veil, so thin,
So strong 'twixt us and thee;
The mystic veil, when shall it fall
That we may see?

Not dead, not sleeping, not even gone
But present still,
And waiting for the coming time
Of God's own will.

Lord of the living and the dead,
Our Saviour dear,
We lay our silence at thy feet
This sad, sad year.

MR. HENRY COOK, on board the Herald of Mercy, has arrived at Rouen, after a very interesting voyage up the Seine.

Christ our Righteousness.

"God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son." "He...delivered Him up for us all." "The Son of God...loved me, and gave Himself for me."

All that Jesus the Christ, the Son of God, is and has is given freely, without money and without price, to everyone who believes in Him and receives Him as his Lord and Saviour and as God's Anointed, and who has thereby become a son of God. His eternal life is ours, for "These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God: that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God." His Divine nature is ours, in answer to his dying prayer, "that they all may be one; as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me." His glory is ours: "And the glory which Thou gavest Me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one." His acceptability to the Father is ours, for "He hath made us accepted in the Beloved." His righteousness is ours, for He is "the Lord our Righteousness." His righteousness is ours, as it revealed itself to the Father before the world was; the righteousness of his life as Son of God and Son of Man on earth; his righteousness through the everlasting ages—all is ours, we stand in the value of it all, for we are one with Him for ever—one as the husband and the wife are one; one as the head and the members of the body are one; one as the Father and the Son are one.

Intensely, therefore, must all true Christians sympathise with the jealous guardianship of the truth expressed by the term "imputed righteousness," when the alternative is our own righteousness; for "all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags."

But it may well be questioned whether the term "imputed righteousness," as often understood, is large enough to express the truth concerning our relation to the Lord our Righteousness. For the doctrine of "imputed righteousness" is frequently, if not usually, restricted to mean the righteousness of Jesus, from his incarnation to his death, with the supposition that this is set to our account as though his every act had been performed by us. This conception recognises the truth that Christ is our Substitute, but it fails to recognise the higher and deeper truth of his union with us by his having taken part of flesh and blood, of which we are partakers; and of our union with Him as partakers of the Divine nature.

For union is more than substitution; and his righteousness is ours not because the fulfilment of the law by Another is imputed to us as though we had done it, but it is ours as the name of the husband is the name of the wife—"And this is the name whereby He shall be called, The Lord our Righteousness... and this is the name wherewith She shall be called, The Lord our Righteousness" (Jer. xxiii. 6, xxxiii. 16). His righteousness is ours as the righteousness of the Head is the righteousness of the members—for as "He is the fulness of the Godhead bodily," so is "the Church, which is his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all."

Our relation to Christ and his righteousness will appear as we consider our relation to Adam and his sin. It is conceivable that the sin of Adam, although his one individual and personal act, might have been imputed to us, set down to our account, as though we had perpetrated it. So that we might have looked upon Adam as our sinful substitute, who sinned instead of us, and whose unrighteousness was gratuitously set down to our account. This conception, out of harmony with all we know of righteousness, is not, we think, the truth. On the contrary, our relation to Adam's sin springs out of our relation to Adam himself. As the oak was in the acorn, so were we in Adam; and as Levi was in the loins of Abraham when Melchizedek met him, so were we in the loins of Adam when Satan met him. And as Levi paid tithes in Abraham, so we sinned in Adam. Not from another, our substitute and independent of us, but from our progenitor, of whose life ours is but the continuation, we derive our fallen nature with the unrighteousness and guilt which attach to it.

Our union by faith with Christ is as real as our union by blood with Adam. That union takes place in death and resurrection. We were crucified together with Him; buried together with Him; quickened together with Him; raised up together with Him; we sit together with Him in heavenly places; we suffer with Him; and we shall be glorified together. It is in his death that our vital union with our redeeming Lord begins, "for if one died for all, then all died" in Him; and it is to Him as the First-begotten of the dead that we are married. For "except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die it abideth alone, but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit." "Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ; that ye should be married to another, even to Him who is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God." As the oak was in the acorn, so the waving wheat was in the corn that died; and as the successive generations of men have developed the evil that came to Adam by his one transgression, so the saints do now, though sorely hindered, and will unhindered through the eternal ages, make manifest the righteousness of God in Christ; for He who knew no sin was made to be sin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God In Him, who "of God is made unto us wisdom—even righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption."

"Meditate on these things; give thyself wholly to them; that thy profiting may appear in all things."

These truths were mightily used of God in the years which followed the great revival of 1859. Then, what it is to know Christ and the power of his resurrection began to be understood, and was taught with great clearness and with excellent result. But latterly we have been getting back to teaching both in relation to Justification and to Sanctification which savours more of rehabilitation of the first and fallen creation than of the new creation in Christ Jesus. But God has not put the new wine of the Kingdom into old bottles. Nor did Jesus come to patch the old covenant when it was decaying and waxing old and ready to vanish away, with a piece of that New and Everlasting Covenant, ordered in all things and sure—even the sure mercies—the just and holy things—of David. For as new wine must be put into new bottles, so must the new and heavenly life be put into new creatures in Christ Jesus.

The red heifer of Numbers xix. was without blemish, and on her never came yoke. Otherwise she would not have fulfilled the required conditions. But these qualifications had no substitutionary value or cleansing efficacy except through death. This is true of every typical offering, from Adam's sacrificial beasts, in whose skins God clothed the fallen pair, to the last paschal lamb before the great anti-typical Passover. And the great principle here implied is equally true of the Great Sacrifice Himself. We are justified and reconciled by the blood of the spotless One, and his divine and human righteousness in the eternal past and in the eternal future is ours, for He is God manifested in flesh, and we are made the righteousness of God In Him. But the commencement of our union with Him is at his cross. We are justified by his blood, and not by works of law. But Jesus was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. And just as the value of the red heifer's spotless purity was laid up in the ashes of her burning, so the value of our Lord's eternal righteousness before and after his incarnation abode with Him in death and resurrection. And as the virtue of the heifer's unblemished life and expiatory death was applied to the ceremonially defiled person, by the sprinkling of the living water with which the ashes were mingled, so the everlasting righteousness which Christ brought in, and the atoning death He died, are communicated to us because we are crucified together and raised together with Him. He who died and rose again for us is Himself Jehovah-Tsidkenu, the Lord our Righteousness.

HUGUENOT CHURCH IN LONDON.

The world's history does not record a more barbarous massacre than that in France on St. Bartholomew's Day, August 24, 1572; at which time the celebrated Admiral Coligny was murdered in the Louvre, and his body thrown out of the window, that the Dukes of Guise, Anjou, and others might have the satisfaction of seeing his head cut off, and his body scandalously mutilated and maltreated. All this was concocted and executed under the infamous Pope Gregory XIII., in the name of Christianity, and for the greater glory of God!

The affrighted and persecuted Huguenots, soon after this, fled to England, during the beneficent, but, alas! too short, reign of Edward VI., who not only gave them help and protection, but also a site and temple for their worship, in the City of London. Recently, because of the great development of our postal system, the site of this building has been acquired by the Post-office authorities, at a cost of £26,000.

As the great mass of the French population is now located in and about Soho-square, the Consistory of the Huguenot Church has purchased a site in that locality for the new building, at a cost of £10,000. The plans, &c., for the work have been made, the estimated cost being £10,000. It is expected that the works will shortly be commenced. In the meantime the Protestant worship is performed in the Athenæum Hall, 73, Tottenham Court-road, by Pastor J. Massis, of 34, Fitzroy-square, who since his installation last year has increased the congregation by nearly 100 members. The annual school fête was held on Thursday last, July 24, just 340 years since the establishment of the church by royal charter. Several French pastors were present, and the prizes were distributed by Madame Massis. The handsome hall was well filled, some 300 persons being present, of whom 130 were children.

Differences in the Gospels.*

By Rev. A. MOODY-STUART, D.D.

THE CENTURION'S SERVANT.

Matt. viii. 5-13; Luke vii. 1-10.

In the healing of the Centurion's Servant, recorded by St. Matthew and St. Luke, the one Evangelist states that he came and besought Jesus to heal him, and the other that he sent messengers to beseech Him; but, as in other cases, when we compare and combine the accounts of both Evangelists, the full narrative of the miracle may be gathered without violence to either. Most readers have probably thought what is expressed by Calvin, that the difference is a "mere trifle," and expositors have generally agreed with him in holding that "there is no impropriety in Matthew saying that the centurion did what was done in his name and at his request." This, which we are far from undervaluing, has been the usual explanation, from the days of Augustine, who gives it in answer to an objector by whom the variation was held to be a contradiction; adding at the same time that the Lord Jesus had in that hour more real intercourse with the centurion than with any of his messengers. But Chrysostom, as quoted by Whitby, takes the words of Christ to the centurion, "Go thy way, and as thou hast believed so be it done unto thee," to imply his personal presence; and his suggestion, that with or after his last messenger he had himself come to Jesus, appears to be plainly indicated by Luke as well as stated by St. Matthew.

The centurion, deeply moved by the suffering and threatened death of his valued servant, sends the elders of the Jews, whose synagogue he had built, and through them "he beseeches Jesus to come and heal him." He sends them, both as influential intercessors with Christ, and because he counts himself unworthy to come in person; and his petition for healing expressly includes the personal presence of Jesus in his house as essential to that end. This commission the elders deliver to Jesus, not in his, but in their own words, "they beseech Him instantly," and they enforce their petition by their own arguments of the centurion's worth and his kindness to Israel. Jesus complies at once with their request, agrees to come, and promises to heal.

The centurion is then informed, through a message which is not recorded, that his petition has been cordially granted, and that Jesus is already not far from his house. "The Lord had healed his soul before healing his servant"; and every fresh answer to prayer at once strengthens faith and humbles us in the dust. The ever-watchful Shepherd of Israel, who saw Nathanael under the fig-tree, sees the tender master watching over his dying slave, and grants him more abundant grace, so that his faith and humility have both rapidly increased. He now fully discerns the almighty power of the Son of God, and that distance can make no difference to Him who has angels waiting on Him to execute all his commands; while at the same time he is overawed with such a sense of his infinite majesty that he is humbled and ashamed at the thought of his coming under his roof.

This at first he had earnestly desired as essential to a cure, but now earnestly deprecates as unnecessary for the recovery of his servant, and unsuitable to the majesty of the Lord. He therefore sends a second embassy of his own personal friends to intercept the Lord on his way, and to ask Him to speak only a word of healing without coming to his house. But the form of his second appeal, as well as its object, is altogether different from the first; and the messengers are so far from speaking in their own name that they never appear at all; they make no request either for him or for themselves, but leave the centurion to speak in his own words exclusively of them. Even the introductory term "saying," in ver. 6, is in the singular, and not theirs, but his. It would therefore seem as if he felt that his second message, withdrawing and countermanding his first petition, required his own presence to explain it, and that he hastened to overtake his friends and present it in person, or rather went with them, and then sent them before him; as it is said to be still the habit in some parts of the East for one who sends an important message to follow after it and convey his own message.

Two instances of a similar kind are narrated in the Old Testament, in Jethro coming to Moses, and in Jehoram coming to Elisha. In Exod. xviii. 5, 6, we read, "and Jethro, Moses' father-in-law, came with his sons and his wife unto Moses in the wilderness, where he encamped at the Mount of God: and he said unto Moses, I thy father-in-law, Jethro, am come unto thee, and thy wife, and her two sons with her." In these words we seem to read of the priest of Midian and the leader of Israel meeting face to face; but in the next verse follows: "And Moses went out to meet his father-in-law, and did obeisance, and kissed him; and they asked each other of their welfare; and they came into the tent." Jethro, having sent a messenger before him, is himself close at hand to repeat the salutation, at once coming and sending; or, in the words of Chrysostom's suggestion in the case of the centurion, "himself coming to send."

In the history of Elisha, the messenger whom Jehoram sends to slay the prophet is so immediately followed by the king himself that only the king's words are narrated. Before the messenger arrives, Elisha foretells his coming to the elders that are seated round him, and adds, "Is not the sound of his master's feet behind him"; and "while he yet talked with them, behold, the messenger came down unto him: and he said, Behold, this evil is of the Lord; what should I wait for the Lord any longer?" (2 Kings vi. 31-33). Instead of the messenger's words to the elders, we have here the king's words from his own lips; the narrative, as Le Clerc says, being marvellously condensed (mirum in modum contracta est hæc narratio). And from St. Luke's condensed narrative there is fair reason to conclude that the friends are sent by the centurion to prepare the way for himself; that "the sound of his feet is behind them," and that the recorded words are not only his own, but are spoken by himself to the Lord.

This supposition is supported by the statement in ver. 7, that Jesus, after hearing his petition, "marvelled at him," as if at himself personally, and still more fully by his own explanatory words. In asking the Lord not to "trouble Himself," he assigns as his reason, "for I am not worthy that Thou shouldest enter under my roof"; and then he does not add, "nor do I think myself worthy to come unto Thee," but turns immediately from the present to the past, "neither thought I myself worthy to come unto Thee." These words are commonly, and so far as we have observed, invariably, taken by expositors and critics as the centurion's explanation of his not coming with his friends. But in their natural, and to us obvious, meaning, their design is to explain that it was the sense of unworthiness that prevented him coming to the Lord with his first petition by the elders; that he has come in person now, because he now feels that if he was unworthy to come to Jesus, he is much more unworthy that Jesus should come under his roof, of which he now also sees that there is no need, because a single word will heal; and he has, therefore, come in person to entreat the Lord not to take this trouble on his account.

The narrative of St. Luke, which is so full in its earlier details, is extremely brief at the close; for, after recording the words of Jesus that, "He had not found so great faith, no, not in Israel," he neither reports the word of healing, nor the assurance that the Gentiles will sit down with Abraham in the kingdom of heaven, but merely adds, that "they that were sent returning to the house found the servant whole that had been sick." He does not indeed say that they returned with the centurion, yet neither does he say that they returned to him, but to the house; and in the case of a Gentile slave in a Jewish town, of which the elders were the leading men, it was important that they should bear witness to the instantaneous cure by the omnipotent word of Jesus.

Where then is the centurion? There is a Divine abruptness introducing a glorious fulness in the words of our Lord, when, before answering him, He turns round to the people that followed; tells them that He had not found so great faith in Israel; and holds out to them this Roman soldier as an example of many who are to come from east and west, and sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom.

How must this singularly lowly man have been filled with grateful wonder at the glorious future set before him! Coming for the life of his slave, he has not only his petition granted, but is assured for himself of a seat in the kingdom of heaven with the honoured fathers of Israel; where among the "many" there is also both room and welcome for his dying servant, who was probably, like his master, a believer in the God of Israel. Knowing that Christ's word cannot fail, and free now of all anxiety for the sufferer, while his messengers hasten back to make sure that the promised healing has been effectual, the devout soldier may well have lingered in adoring gratitude to drink in every word that falls from those gracious lips, till the Lord Himself sends him home with the blessing, "Go thy way, and as thou hast believed, so be it done unto thee."

"To save space by condensing" has been remarked as characteristic of St. Luke, as it is of other inspired writers; and the occasional accompanying difficulties are much more than compensated by our having a record of the greatest events in so brief a compass.

* Since this article was in the hands of the printer, I have seen Chrysostom's Homily on the Centurion's Servant, of which I had previously only seen an extract. He makes no reference to the old legal maxim that what we do by another is done by ourselves; he regards the two Evangelists as mutually supplemental, each giving details omitted by the other, as when Matthew notes the personal coming to Christ, and Luke the coming of the messengers, yet without any discord between them. He speaks of Christ not merely praising the Centurion's words, but marvelling at or admiring himself, and holding him out as an example of faith to all the people; and suggests it as probable that after sending his friends he came himself to our Lord, and spoke to him the words that are recorded. He adds that Christ gave him much more than he asked, for he came asking the health of his servant, and departed having received a kingdom.

THE THREE GARDENS.

BY REV. JAMES CULROSS, D.D.

THE GARDEN WHERE THEY LAID HIM.

II.—What the Old Testament showed concerning the Hereafter.

ONE of the great works in English theology is Bishop Warburton's "Divine Legation of Moses Demonstrated." It had its origin in the Deistic controversy which raged in England in the early part of last century. With great vigour, learning, masterly reasoning, and boldness of imagination, Warburton encountered the deists on their own ground.

The attack which he set himself to meet was directed largely against the Old Testament, particularly the Pentateuch, because of its alleged silence respecting a future state. The Bishop turned the artillery of the deists upon themselves, maintaining that this very silence evidenced the Divine legation of Moses. In other words, he based his attempt to prove the inspiration of the Pentateuch on the absence of express teaching respecting a future life. The three principal propositions which he maintained were these: First, "that the inculcating of the doctrine of a future state of rewards and punishments is necessary to the well-being of civil society"; second, "that all mankind, especially the most wise and learned nations of antiquity, have concurred in believing and teaching that this doctrine was of such use to civil society"; third, "that the doctrine of a future state of rewards and punishments is not to be found in nor did make part of the Mosaic dispensation." From these three propositions he deduces the conclusion, "that therefore the Law of Moses is of Divine origin."

It is true that the sanctions of this law, in so far as they are expressed, which is but partially, are drawn from the present rather than from the future beyond the grave. Just where we might have expected the bringing in of "the powers of the world to come," there is not so much as a word. Instead of bidding his people project their thoughts into a future beyond the grave, God comes forward personally, sovereignly, and presently, in the Mosaic dispensation, saying to his people: "I am God who redeemed you; there is my Law; I require obedience; you 'have to do' with ME, now and here." The "immediateness" is the strong thing. Their whole life is set in a direct relation to God.

But it is unwarranted and misleading to say that the doctrine of a future life is not to be found in the Pentateuch. It is not indeed handled as a doctrine, or explicitly stated, in the Pentateuch, or anywhere in the Old Testament. Rather (while deeply implied) it is veiled. Whatever the reason, there seems a purposed reticence concerning it. But it is there—in the law, the prophets, the psalms, the history, so that spiritual men who could look behind the letter might read it, at least as a mystery. It lurks in every utterance expressive of personal relationship to Jehovah and of hope in Him. It inspires every psalm in which ancient saints gave voice to their joy in God. It gleams out upon us like a sunbeam when we read of a living God who is the God of Abraham and Isaac and Jacob, who, having entered into covenant with them, cannot consign them to the abyss of nothingness; of a living Redeemer; of a Holy One whose flesh should not see corruption; of the awaking of those who sleep in the dust of the earth, some to everlasting life and some to shame and everlasting contempt; of One who has promised to swallow up death in victory, and who calls the dwellers in the dust to arise and sing, because "thy dead shall live, my dead body shall arise"; of One who calls Himself "the Lord thy God," beside whom "there is no Saviour," and who proclaims, "O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction; repentance shall be hid from mine eyes."

Two remarkable passages may be singled out for their bearing on this subject. The first is that condensed and enigmatic, but infinitely weighty and sublime passage (Job xix. 25-27), which the patriarch wishes "were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock for ever." Our authorised version runs: "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: whom I shall see for myself, and not another; though my reins be consumed within me." The translations proposed are without number. I do not think it possible, under any fair interpretation, to eliminate the thought of a life beyond death, Ewald's interpretation, though it falls short of the ordinary evangelic view, carries in it that Job, in uttering the words, is "an inspired prophet," and means to say that "God does not die, and will become my Redeemer after my death." He goes on to paraphrase: "After I have lost skin and flesh I shall, nevertheless, behold God, shall then still feel the joy of the appearance and immediate presence of God also as the judge and defender of my innocence, which I cannot enjoy before the death of the body! and then, as follows of itself, with spiritual eyes, not with my present ones, and yet as certainly, and as clearly and sensibly as possible. Whoever beholds God becomes conscious of the pure light, the clear truth, and the eternal life, feeling no separation, and no disagreement at all between God and himself; accordingly, no alarm, no fear, nor punishment. Of being able to do this in bodily life, Job has long ago completely despaired, but he now knows that he can and certainly will do it spiritually after physical death. Full of joyful exultation, here at last his heart leaps at the surprisingly clear picture of this awful future moment, which is now so certain to him." How much more the passage carries in it is open to large discussion. For my own part, I believe that through the inspiring "breath" of God, the seer points forward by his words to a great future manifestation at the last, and utters his profound, unalterable conviction of a Hereafter, in which he shall see God as his Kinsman-Redeemer.

The other passage is the Vision of Dry Bones (Ezek. xxxvii. 1-14). The "captive exiles" in Babylon have passed from presumptuous confidence almost to despair. "Our bones are dried," they say, "and our hope is lost." The people being in this mood, the hand of the Lord came upon the prophet Ezekiel, and carried him forth in the spirit, and set him down in the midst of a valley full of bones, and caused him to pass by them round about. It looked like an old battle-field, where thousands had been slain and none had buried them. Vulture and wolf had long ago ended their horrid festival, and now only bones remained, scattered over the open valley; and lo, they were very many and very dry. Oh, the bright and joyous life that once had been! Oh, the hopes and fears, the desires and passions, long ago stilled for ever! As we are now, so once were they. The morning light was sweet to them, and the calm of eventide, and the love of friends, and the gambols of happy children. It was all over long ago—over and forgotten and untraceable. All that remains is a field of bleached, scattered, crumbling bones.

As the prophet gazes in silence, the question startles him, "Son of man, can these bones live?" What a question for a "son of man"! Had he not thought of God the life-giver, he might have answered, No: there is hope of a tree, if it be cut down, that it will sprout again, and that the tender branch thereof will not cease: the flower that has been crushed will bloom once more when spring returns; but no spring awaits these mouldering bones; no morning dawns on the night of death. But to have made such answer would have been to limit the power of God; so the prophet replies, "O Lord God, Thou knowest"—at once an acknowledgment of his own ignorance and of the omnipotence of God.

The voice then bade him prophesy over the bones and say, "O ye dry bones, hear the word of the Lord! Behold, I will cause breath to enter into you, and ye shall live, and shall know that I am the Lord." So he prophesied as he was commanded. The effect was instant and startling. While the words were yet on his lips, a movement began in that field of death: a shaking; a coming together of bone to his bone; a clothing of the skeletons with sinew, and flesh, and skin—"but there was no breath in them."

Once more the voice spoke: "Son of man, prophesy to the wind"—the life-breath which makes man a living soul—prophesy and say, "Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain that they may live." He did as he was commanded, and the life-breath came into them; and they lived and stood upon their feet, "an exceeding great army."

The vision portended the restoration of Israel, apparently overtaken as a nation by death. It symbolised that God would bring back their captivity and restore them to their own land. We should miss the best part of the meaning, however, if we thought of nothing beyond. The restoration symbolised is no mere political event, but infinitely more a spiritual one. Mere return to the land of their fathers would have been only the gathering of the dry bones together and transferring them to another place—as the bones of the first Napoleon were brought from St. Helena to France. But they were to be dry bones no longer. They were to "live unto God," being quickened by his life-giving Spirit.

The voice itself furnishes the interpretation: "Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel; and ye shall know that I am the Lord...when I have brought you up out of your graves, and have put my Spirit in you, and ye shall live." This is the meaning of the vision for Israel, "life from the dead." It is not designed, immediately at least, to foreshadow or predict "the resurrection at the last day," and cannot be taken to prove or establish it. Yet it does this indirectly and suggestively—even as the new life in Christ Jesus is the promise and foretaste of immortality. It is certainly fitted to start the thought of resurrection, if not already started, and is in full harmony with the hints and intimations of it already lodged in the heart of Israel. The idea of a resurrection underlies and vivifies the whole representation.

Yet, profoundly and mightily suggestive as all this is, life and immortality cannot be said to have been yet brought to light. What was literal, and what allegorical, in the prophetic utterances? What was mystical? Who could tell? Just enough was disclosed to make ancient saints confess that they were strangers and pilgrims among men, and to kindle desire for "a better country, that is, an heavenly." The deep ground of hope really lay in the relationship to Himself, into which the eternal God had brought them. Can the living God let death hold those concerning whom He says, They are mine? It was on this relationship that ancient saints built their confidence. Having, though only for one glorious moment, seen

The brightness of the skirts of God, having entered into league with the eternal I AM, they could not do otherwise than reach out to a life beyond the touch of death. They dimly anticipated, "Because I live, ye shall live also."

MR. ALFRED S. DYER arrived in England from Bombay on Friday last, on a short visit, principally on business connected with the anti-opium and social purity movements.

Itinerating in China.

For some six months past I have been convinced from the Scripture that going without purse or script did apply to me, and have only been waiting the Lord's time for an open door to test it practically. This was given me last week, just after the Chinese New Year commenced. Believing that we are all interested in this question, and that every little ray of light is a help to the blaze, I am sending you a diary of a week's journey in this neighbourhood, adhering closely to the spirit of the above words.

We (D.V.) are hoping to get amongst the Tibetans shortly, and though it is a vast uncivilised district, and in parts colder than Sining, we do not see in the least why these methods should not be carried out there. Our Father loves to be trusted. It is no vain thing, and I cannot see that it is foolhardy.

The natural man is fearfully worldly and sensual. Preaching the Gospel in this way is just lovely. You don't give him a peg to hang his carnal mind on. It is unworldly, living in the unseen world. It is a help and blessing to the faith of the missionary. We believe that "two and two" is the Lord's design. But No. 2 not being forthcoming, No. 1 thought the Lord would supply all the deficiency, and though a comrade would have been a great help, confidence was not disappointed.

We are praying and ask your prayer, and, moreover, are sure that God will raise up men for this Tibetan work; if not Englishmen, then Tibetans.—Believe me, faithfully yours under our one Master,

CECIL POLHILL TURNER.

Sining, Kansuh, China, Feb. 1.

THURSDAY, January 23.—Two Mohammedans called, living in the Tong-kwau (east suburb), one of them having been interested in the shop on Sunday, and promising to come up to the house. Both waited a considerable time, till another guest had gone, and then asked to be told the Gospel again, listening very nicely, and asking questions very much to the point. They expressed a desire to serve the Lord, promising to come up on my return from my proposed journey. This day, early, we set apart for joint prayer and fasting, to seek the fulness of the Holy Spirit, power, and provision for the journey I proposed taking the following day.

Friday, January 24.—After breakfast and more united prayer, set off with the prospect of spending seven or eight days in the neighbouring villages. Being convinced for some six months past that the principles taught in Matt. x. applied to me, and would be fully blessed by God if closely adhered to—and, moreover, that a more expeditious, safe, and thorough way of fulfilling our Lord's last commands could not be devised—I had for some time been desirous, but was prevented by circumstances, of making a trial. Now every obstacle was removed, and the Lord said, "Go, and try Me." I went, confident that God would bless, and not one good thing failed.

My wife accompanied me a few li; about four li outside the city, I reached the cavalry barracks; was not permitted to enter; proclaimed my message outside to a few who gathered round, warning them of the consequences of refusing God's offer of grace, and then pursued my journey. When I had gone three or four hundred yards, heard a voice behind calling me. I turned and halted; a man overtook me running. He proved to be one of the listeners whom I had just left, a civilian from Tankoer, and came to inquire more particularly how he could pray at home; led him into an adjoining field, where he knelt, and repeated after me a prayer to God for forgiveness, cleansing, and light, for the sake of Jesus. He returned, promising to come up on my return. A little further, preached in a farm. One elderly man led me to his house, giving broth and bread. Went on, and preached in next village; people fairly attentive. Later, was given tea and bread in a house. Towards evening a man said I had better put up in his house, and preach in the adjoining village next morning. Later, he led me to the house of his uncle, in the village, who had a nasty running sore on leg.

If he wanted God to hear him, I insisted on his removing his gods and idolatrous things, which he did. I then prayed and laid hands on him in the name of Jesus, telling him, if he had faith in Jesus, from that time he would be healed. That evening a young Mohammedan servant (the sick man was an idolater) came up, while I was reading the Word, and asked me to tell him the doctrine shortly; I did so, and then went on reading. He came up again, and said, "Will you tell me more of that?" I did so, urging him to believe. He promised to come up to Sining on my return, and then pray. I urged him to do so that night; after some hesitation he knelt down and asked God to forgive him. Ten li to-day.

Saturday, January 25.—Snowy, dull, and cold. Preached in Mohammedan village; a number of listeners, inclined to laugh. Went on. Preached in idolaters' village; people said "Yes" to everything, but apparently without any conviction of the truth. Went on. In another idolaters' village an old man stuck up a stick of incense, and prostrated several times to Jesus; showed him his mistake, upon which he declined to have anything more to do with us. A man wanted me to pray for him; if he were healed of his asthma, all the village would believe, he said. He lived in the temple. I could not pray for him unless he let go his idols. It was getting towards evening, and several little villages refused to pay much attention to me. At last a young Mohammedan listened, and presently his mother told him to bring me into the house. They put me up that night, and were most kind and hospitable. The woman appeared to be in a decline. Next morning laid hands on her, and prayed in the name of the Lord.

Sunday, January 26.—Close by preached at a large Mohammedan village; attentive listening. Finally one elderly man took me to his house. We shut the door, and both knelt down, he confessing his sins, and asking the Lord's forgiveness. In the next village, also Mohammedan, went into their mosque; told my message to the headman and others; spoke a few words further on in the village, and went on. After going about a li, was overtaken by a tall man, who presently began asking about the way to pray and serve God, as he had just been listening with the headman; led him just off the high road, and he repeated a prayer after me, kneeling. His wife was sick. I told him to pray in faith for her. The next was a large idolaters' village. Preached in the temple to a large audience. A few li further on went into a small Mohammedan village; a little knot of people gathered round, several of whom soon became interested. Presently I asked one young fellow, who seemed specially so, if he would go to his house and pray. He said he really wanted to believe, and would do so; he led me to his house; another young fellow followed. One knelt and prayed that evening, and the other next morning; also asking that a nasty bronchial cold might be removed. This house I stayed in. The youth accompanied me several li next morning, and told me his father-in-law scolded him for bringing me to the house. Twenty li.

Monday, January 27.—Left the Peh Cuan, or North Valley; crossed the river in easterly direction. At the first village nobody wanted my message. Went on. An old man, after listening a bit, gave me bread and tea. Next village, preached in a temple; a good crowd, but inclined to jeer. Went on. Before getting out of the village, a man overtook me and invited me into a house; he afterwards listened nicely. Towards evening a man riding overtook me; after hearing my message, invited me into his house, gave me some food, and afterwards put me up for the night. Twenty li.

Tuesday, January 28.—A fall of snow in the night; but fine, bright day. Reached a Mohammedan village, and was directed to a shop, where I had a nice talk. The proprietor had some of our Gospels, which he said he was fond of reading; listened very earnestly, and promised to come into the city to learn more. Crossed a bit of a mountain, then off with shoes and stockings to cross a partially frozen river, and entered Wei Yüenpu, a small town. Preached here in several places; but, finding no one willing to receive me, pushed on into the country, in the direction of Sining. A few boys followed me; one presently invited me into his house and gave me food, but made it plain that they did not want me to stop. Going out into the yard, a man invited me to tell the doctrine to himself and others; I was taken into a comfortable room and regaled with rice and meat. I was not sorry for the two additions of food, only having had half a small bread since starting, but was not at all faint. The meal finished, several gathered round to listen, the man who originally invited me listening especially earnestly and explaining to the others.

Here, also, it was made plain to me they did not wish me to stay the night. It was getting on in the evening, and I didn't know how far the next village was, but trudged off; hadn't gone more than a hundred yards, when I heard my name called, and saw my friend beckoning me to return. He said he thought I had a comrade to meet on ahead; but, learning from the others that I had none, begged me to remain at his house for the night. He and his brother were most kind and courteous, making me thoroughly comfortable and at home. He read a good many chapters of Matthew and Thessalonians, and seemed quite to understand what was required to trust in Jesus. Next morning I urged him to lose no time in deciding; but he said he must think it over and talk it over; and would certainly endeavour to visit me in the third month, inviting me to pay them a visit in the second.

Wednesday, January 29.—Had a long, earnest talk in the next village. Many listening intently, but refusing when it came to the point of breaking with idolatry, kneeling and asking God for forgiveness. At another village they refused to hear a word. Late in the afternoon I reached a little village—Kauchiatsai. Invited a man to listen; he directed me to a spot, and said he would call others. Presently had quite a nice little concourse, soon many of them intently listening. At length I invited one man, who seemed specially interested, to retire to his house, to put away his idols, and pray, and off we went, followed by a lot of boys, &c. The man's brother came in, then other neighbours. We were kept at it—teaching, urging, and exhorting, till a fairly late hour.

When all had gone, the man said he was afraid of his brother, and daren't put away his idols. Next morning several of the previous day's listeners came in. Going out into the street, a man asked me to remain a few days and teach them. I did not see my way to do so then; the man promised to come into the town in a few days and learn more, and, if the villagers wished it, invite me to re-visit them. As I was just leaving the village, a youth insisted on my going into his house, where I was introduced to his mother; presently in came her mother and another daughter—the mother sixty-nine years of age, the daughters about fifty each. Excessively nice old bodies, they listened like anything. When I told the old lady of sixty-nine she'd have to put away her gods and idols, she assured me that didn't concern her much, as she hadn't been able to see them for a long time. She was partly blind. Her son and another man also listened very earnestly. The sun was pretty high in the heavens when finally I got off. Had two talks on the way; but, not finding any special call to linger, walked straight on into Sining, reaching just at evening. Fifty-five li.

Among the advantages gained by preaching the Gospel in such a method are the following:—

(1) In the course of a day you can preach the Gospel in four or five villages, with thoroughness and expedition.

(2) The people are not attracted by your horse or equipage. Where there is real interest or desire to hear, you preach; where there is none you are not delayed.

(3) You get to the homes of the people, instead of putting up at an inn. As a rule, the best talks were at the houses we put up at, i.e., individual dealing.

(4) Your life is preaching faith in God.

(5) Your trust in God is increased.

(6) You are more sure of going or remaining where God wants you than if left to your own judgment.

(7) You learn to look more to the home beyond, and care less for creature comforts.

CECIL POLHILL-TURNER.

GRESHAM, NORFOLK.—Mr. J. J. Clow, of the Evangelisation Society, commenced a month's mission here on Sunday, July 6, in a large tent, belonging to Miss Hammond, of Fakenham. The weather has been exceedingly bad, and the tent has been in great danger on several occasions of being demolished; but from the first the meetings have been well attended, especially on the Sundays. There is quite a revival of religion in the hearts of God's people, and the consequence is that that we are continually hearing of persons who profess to have found the Saviour.

FREE METHODISTS AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.—One of the most important matters brought under the consideration of the recent assembly of the United Methodist Free Churches, at Leeds, had referance to a Forward Movement in Foreign Missions. A proposal was made by Rev. G. Turner (missionary secretary) to largely extend the operations of mission work in East Africa, especially in the Galla country. A station has already been opened at Golbanti, which is the key to the Galla districts. This is a country occupied by no other missionary society, and offers large opportunities for Christian enterprise. Rev. T Wakefield, who has already spent nearly thirty years in East Africa, consented to return to that field, taking with him two or three young men, who will devote themselves entirely to the opening of new missions. It was decided to raise a special fund to meet the extra outlay involved. This fund should reach at least £12,000, and as next year is the centenary of John Wesley's death, it would be a fitting time for raising such a fund.

THE WONDERFUL WORK IN ITALY.

I have recently had an opportunity of witnessing the present deeply interesting condition of Italy. There is a great drama being enacted in that land under the eyes of the present generation, to which the German or English Reformation, three centuries ago, alone can afford a parallel. Oppressed for many ages by the tyranny of the Roman Church, maddened by her cruel exactions, demoralised by her superstitions, the Italian people at length rose against their oppressor. The temporal power of the Pope was overthrown, United Italy emerged from the troubled waters, and the wonderful spectacle of a great nation struggling out into civil and religious liberty was presented to the gaze of the world.

Long centuries of Papal rule had produced its inevitable results. With the finest climate in the world and a fertile soil, Italy had sunk to the deepest poverty, and her working classes to the most degraded condition. In the great city of Venice, four out of every seven of the inhabitants are entered in the Congregazione dei carità, in other words, the register of paupers entitled to relief from the funds left from time to time in bygone years for charitable purposes; women of the working classes in Italy are almost in the position occupied by their sex in savage tribes; they toil in the most laborious work in the fields; they act as porters in the streets. I have seen a gang of thirty or forty women carrying heavy burdens of stone on their heads from a quarry; in short, they are simply beasts of burden.

Can we wonder that the nation burst asunder the fetters in which they were bound, and revolted from the power enthroned at the Vatican, to which they rightly attributed their wretched condition? Of the thirty-three millions of the population of the country, twenty-two millions have cast off for ever their allegiance to the Church of Rome, and since the overthrow of the Pope's temporal power, they have made wonderful advances, on the right hand and on the left, towards true freedom, civil and religious.

As it was in England three centuries ago, so the land of Italy was devoured by innumerable confraternities as by a plague of locusts, and one of the first steps in Italy, as in England, was to suppress the monasteries, which in both lands were hot-beds of vice and corruption. This was but it was followed by one still more severe in the passing of the Penal Code, which enacts that "if any minister of religion by preaching, or by writing, or by conversation, or in confession, speaks against the king or the unity of Italy, or disturbs the minds or consciences of the people, he shall be liable to fine, imprisonment, and dismissal from office."

As may readily be understood, there was much need for this stringent law, and it has not been allowed to lie idle; many priests, including two bishops, have been arraigned and punished for offences against its provisions.

But perhaps the greatest blow to the influence of the Church has been the Bill now before the Senate. In the course of ages large sums had been left for charitable uses, amounting now to upwards of a hundred millions sterling. This was administered by the bishops and clergy, and various confraternities, and a large portion of the revenue was absorbed by them for their own benefit. A Bill was introduced by the Italian Government to take the administration of this vast fund from clerical hands, to change some of the appropriations of the revenue, and to place it in the hands of a commission for each district, from which the parish priest was to be excluded. This Bill passed the Lower House by an overwhelming majority, and will doubtless soon become the law of the land.

It is impossible to avoid mentioning these steps in the great work of Italian emancipation, although they appear to be as much of a political as of a religious character; but as it was in our own and in the German Reformation, politics and religion are inextricably bound up together, and we must consider the whole aspect of the events in order to see their real drift. But we may ask by these successive steps? I reply that now at length we may truly say of Italy, "The Word of God is not bound." Protestant ministers are now as free to preach the Gospel in Italy as in England or Scotland. When I was in Rome sixteen years ago, I was obliged to go outside the Porta del Popolo on Sunday to a place of worship in a hired room; up to that time no "heretical" church had been permitted within the "sacred city." Now there are twelve Protestant churches within the walls, besides a large number of mission-halls where the Gospel is preached.

WHAT HAS RELIGION GAINED

The work among soldiers by Signor Capellini is very remarkable. From small beginnings it has grown to be a great and important movement; the enlightened king Humbert has encouraged the work by his sanction and approval; the many converts, who are constantly, after their short term of service, returning to their native villages, are gradually filling Italy with earnest and decided evangelists. I had the pleasure of being present at one of Signor Capellini's Sunday evening meetings in Rome; the hall was crowded with soldiers; Major Whittle and Rev. Dr. Pierson, of Philadelphia, who were in Rome at the time, addressed them, through an interpreter, and were listened to with profound attention; and the singing of Sankey's hymns in their own mellifluous language, to tunes so familiar to us in this country, seemed to be a link which united us all in a common bond of Christian brotherhood.

As an evidence of the depth and extent of the work, I may mention at the close of Major Whittle's address. "I have," he said, "been addressing English soldiers at Woolwich, and I hope shortly to address them again. It would deeply interest and encourage them, if I could tell them how many of this large meeting of Italian soldiers are on the Lord's side, or at least are earnestly desirous and determined to be so. Will as many of you as can say this, kindly stand up for a moment?" With one or two exceptions the whole audience rose simultaneously to their feet! "Thank God," said Major Whittle, "this will be cheering news for me to take to Woolwich."

A PLEASING INCIDENT

The people of Italy are hungering for the Word of God. Signor Sonzogno, of Milan, the proprietor and able editor of the Secolo, although a Roman Catholic, has announced a popular edition of the Bible in half-penny numbers. In his prospectus he says, "There is one Book which gathers up the poetry and the science of humanity, and that book is the Bible. It is a Book that believers and unbelievers should alike study, and that ought to be found in every house." This edition of the Scriptures has met with an enormous sale, and the issuing of it has clearly sprung from the acknowledged fact of the great demand for such a work among the masses of the people.

THE JEWS IN ROME

have been released from the Ghetto and from the cruel restrictions under which they have groaned for centuries of Papal rule.

There are evangelists both English, Scottish, and American in nearly every Italian town. At San Remo, at Bordighera, and at several other places, Mr. E. C. Newbery's mission-halls are spreading the light of the Gospel among the people. At Spezia, Florence, Venice, and many other points, other evangelists are holding up the lamp of truth; the Free Italian Church and the Waldensian Church are now at liberty to preach the Gospel wheresoever they desire; in a word, the fields are white to the harvest, and only waiting for the reapers. But those at present engaged in the work are but as a few scattered labourers on the outskirts of the field. Without vastly increased efforts, multitudes of the people will lapse into utter indifference or infidelity. All this, however, may be averted if the Churches of England and America rise to the opportunity and send a great army of labourers to this long down-trodden land with the message of life.

Then will there be as glorious a consummation of the great Italian Reformation as there was in England three centuries ago, and Italy will march in the front rank among the nations made great and free by the mighty power of the Gospel of Christ.

A GOOD WORK AT TORQUAY.

An interesting evangelistic and undenominational mission is being carried on in Chelston, Torquay, under the Dowager Countess of Castlestuart. A Scripture reader is maintained; he visits the homes, and also conducts the services at the mission-hall. Though Romanism and Ritualism are firmly established in the district, this mission is prospering, and God is blessing the simple preaching of the Gospel of his grace.

In addition to the mission there is a day-school, where the Word of God is taught. A convalescent home has also been established, which is very beautifully situated, and near the mission-hall. Visitors to Torquay are invited to visit this Home, the terms of which are very reasonable. The reader (Mr. Powell) conducts services on the sands during the months of August and September.

BILLINGSGATE CHRISTIAN MISSION.

Dear Sir,—We have just concluded a week of special services conducted by Mr. Henry Lakin. Two services were held each day—one at 12 noon, specially for those engaged in business in the market, and in the evening at 7 o'clock we met outside our mission hall, and held a short open-air meeting, inviting those who gathered round to come up stairs. This brought in another class of men, and also those who reside in the city. Several professed conversion, and we would ask the prayers of your readers that they may be kept, and that the Lord's work may prosper in this somewhat neglected part of his vineyard. We gladly welcome anyone to our noonday service every Monday, at which well-known ministers give an address from week to week. We are anxious to clear the debt which attaches to our new hall.

LAVENDER FOR OUR SOLDIERS.—Will friends who can spare some lavender from their garden, send some to fill little muslin bags for our sick soldiers in hospital at home and abroad. A text card is always attached to each bag, and God has often used these little messengers in his service. Soldiers in India and Burmah, and Army Scripture readers at Gibraltar, Aldershot, Netley, and other places, have desired to thank the kind friends who last year thus remembered them. Boxes or parcels may be addressed to Mrs. Stanley Puckle, "The Hollands," Langton, Tunbridge Wells.

"He's Coming To-morrow!"

BY MRS. HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.

DEAR FRIENDS,—A few days since, in company with Rev. W. M. Montgomery, who has taken such a deep interest in the Scandinavians, we called upon Mrs. Stowe. He was anxious to see her before leaving Hartford, and as I had known her since I was a boy in Phillips' Academy, we took the liberty of calling upon her. She was at her door just starting for a little walk. We found her quite sociable and pleased to be reminded of the days when her husband was professor in the Andover Theological Seminary, where her children were about her, pursuing their studies.

The same day I found upon my study table the following from her pen, which I had not seen in print. I thought it might interest your readers.—Yours,

Hartford, Ct. E. P. HAMMOND.

"THE NIGHT IS FAR SPENT; THE DAY IS AT HAND."

I.

My soul vibrated for a moment like a harp. Was it true? The night, the long night of the world's groping agony and blind desire—is it almost over? Is the day at hand?

Again: "They shall see the Son of Man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh."

Coming! The Son of Man really coming, coming into this world again with power and great glory?

Will this really ever happen? Will this solid, commonplace earth see it? Will these skies brighten and flash? and will upturned faces in this city be watching to see Him coming?

So our minister preached, and for moments I felt a thrill of reality in hearing. But, as the well-dressed crowd passed down the aisle, my neighbour, Mr. Stockton, whispered to me not to forget the meeting of the bank-directors on Monday evening, and Mrs. Goldthwaith poured into my wife's ear a charge not to forget her party on Thursday; and my wife, as she came out, asked me if I had observed the extravagant toilet of Mrs. Pennyman.

"So absurd," she said, "when her income, I know, cannot be half what ours is! and I never think of sending to Paris for my things: I should look on it as morally wrong."

I spoke of the sermon. "Yes," said my wife, "what a sermon! so solemn. What could be more powerful than such discourses? My dear, by-the-bye, don't forget to change Mary's opal ring for a diamond one. Dear me! the Christmas presents were all so on my mind, and I was thinking of them every now and then in church; and that was so wrong of me."

"My dear," said I, "sometimes it seems to me as if our life were unreal. We go to church, and the things that we hear are either true or false. If they are true, what things they are! For instance, these Advent sermons. If we are looking for that coming, we ought to feel and live differently from what we do! Do we really believe what we hear in church? Or is it a dream?"

"I do believe," said my wife earnestly, (she is a good woman, my wife) "yes, I do believe, but it is just as you say. Oh dear! I feel as if I am very worldly—I have so much to think of!" and she sighed.

So did I; for I knew that I, too, was very worldly. After a pause I said, "Suppose Christ should really come this Christmas, and it should be authoritatively announced that He would be here to-morrow?"

"I think," said my wife, "there would be some embarrassment on the part of our great men, legislators, and chief councillors, in anticipation of a personal interview. Fancy a meeting of the City Council to arrange a reception for the Lord Jesus Christ!"

"Perhaps," said I, "He would refuse all offers of the rich and great. Perhaps our fashionable churches would plead for His presence in vain. He would not be in palaces."

"Oh!" said my wife earnestly, "if I thought our money separated us from Him, I would give it all—yes, all—might I only see Him."

She spoke from the bottom of her heart, and for a moment her face was glorified.

"You will see Him some day," said I, "and the money that we are willing to give up at a word from Him will not keep Him from us."

II.

That evening the thoughts of my waking hours mirrored themselves in a dream.

I seemed to be out walking in the streets, and to be conscious of a strange, vague sense of something just declared, of which all were speaking with an air of mystery.

There was a whispering stillness around. Groups of men stand at the corners of the streets, and discuss an impending something with suppressed voices.

I heard one say to another, "Really coming? What? to-morrow?" And the others said, "Yes, to-morrow: on Christmas Day He will be here."

It was night. The stars were glittering down with a keen and frosty light; the shops glistened in their Christmas array; but the same sense of hushed expectancy pervaded everything. There seemed to be nothing doing; and each person looked wistfully on his neighbour as if to say, "Have you heard?"

Suddenly, as I walked, an angel-form was with me, gliding softly by my side. The face was solemn, serene, and calm. Above the forehead was a pale, tremulous, phosphorous radiance of light, purer than any on earth—a light of a quality so different from that of the street-lamps, that my celestial attendant seemed to move in a sphere alone.

Yet, though I felt awe, I felt a sort of confiding love as I said, "Tell me, is it really true? Is Christ coming?

"He is," said the angel. "To-morrow He will be here!"

"What joy!" I cried.

"Is it joy?" said the angel. "Alas, to many it is only terror! Come with me."

In a moment I seemed to be standing with him in a parlour of one of the chief palaces of the city. A stout, florid, bald-headed man was seated at a table covered with papers, which he was sorting over with nervous anxiety, muttering to himself as he did so. On a sofa lay a sad-looking, delicate woman, her emaciated hands clasped over a little book. The room was, in all its appointments, a witness of boundless wealth. Gold and silver, and gems, and foreign furniture, and costly pictures, and articles of vertu—everything that money could buy—were heaped together; and yet the man himself seemed to me to have been neither elevated nor refined by the confluence of all these treasures. He seemed nervous and uneasy. He wiped the sweat from his brow, and spoke—

"I don't know, wife, how you feel, but I don't like this news. I don't understand it. It puts a stop to everything that I know anything about."

"O John!" said the woman, turning towards him a face pale and fervent, and clasping her hands, "How can you say so?"

And, as he spoke, I could see breaking out above her head a tremulous light, like that above the brow of an angel.

"Well, Mary, it's the truth. I don't care if I say it. I don't want to meet—well, I wish He would put it off. What does He want of me? I'd be willing to make over—well, three millions to found a hospital, if He'd be satisfied and let me go on. Yes, I'd give three millions—to buy off from to-morrow."

"Is He not our best Friend?"

"Best Friend!" said the man, with a look of half fright, half anger. "Mary, you don't know what you're talking about! You know I always hated those things. There's no use in it; I can't see into them. In fact, I hate them."

She cast on him a look full of pity. "Cannot I make you see?" she said.

"No, indeed, you can't. Why, look here," he added, pointing to the papers, "here is what stands for millions! To-night it's mine; and to-morrow it will be all so much waste paper; and then what have I left? Do you think I can rejoice? I'd give half, I'd give—yes, the whole, not to have Him come these hundred years." She stretched out her thin hand towards him, but he pushed it back.

"Do you see," said the angel to me solemnly, "between him and her there is a 'great gulf fixed.' They have lived in one house with that gulf between them for years! She cannot go to him; he cannot come to her. To-morrow she will rise to Christ as a dewdrop to the sun! and he will call to the mountains and rocks to fall on him—not because Christ hates him, but because he hates Christ."

Again the scene was changed. We stood together in a little low attic, lighted by one small lamp—how poor it was—a broken chair, a rickety table, a bed in the corner where the little ones were cuddling close to one another for warmth. Poor things! the air was so frosty that their breath congealed upon the bedclothes, as they talked in baby voices: "When mother comes she will bring us some supper," said they. "But I'm so cold," said the little outsider. "Get in the middle, then," said the other two, "and we'll warm you. Mother promised she'd make a fire when she came in, if that man would pay her." "What a bad man he is," said the eldest boy, "he never pays mother if he can help it."

Just then the door opened, and a pale, thin woman came in, laden with packages.

She laid all down, and came to her children's bed, clasping her hands in rapture.

"Joy! joy, children! Oh, joy, joy! Christ is coming! He will be here to-morrow."

Every little bird in the nest was up, and the little arms around the mother's neck; the children believed at once. They had heard of the good Jesus. He had been their mother's only Friend through many a cold and hungry day, and they doubted not He was coming.

"Oh, mother, will He take us? He will, won't He?

"Yes, my little ones," she said softly, smiling to herself, "He shall gather the lambs with his arms, and carry them in his bosom."

Suddenly again, another scene was present.

We stood in a lonely room, where a woman was sitting with her head bowed forward upon her hands. Alone, forsaken, slandered, she was in bitterness of spirit. Hard, cruel tongues had spoken her name with vile assertions, and a thoughtless world had believed. There had been a babble of accusations, a crowd to rejoice in iniquity, and few to pity. She thought herself alone, and she spoke: "Judge me, O Lord! for I have walked in my integrity. I am as a wonder unto many; but Thou art my strong refuge."

In a moment the angel touched her, "My sister," he said, "be of good cheer. Christ will be here to-morrow."

She started up with her hands clasped, her eyes bright, her whole form dilated, as she seemed to look into the heavens, and said with rapture—

"Come, Lord, and judge me; for Thou knowest me altogether. Come, Son of Man, in Thee have I trusted; let me never be confounded. Oh, for the judgment seat of Christ!"

Again, I stood in a brilliant room, full of luxuries. Three or four fair women were standing pensively talking with each other. Their apartment was bestrewn with jewelry, laces, silks, velvets, and every fanciful elegance of fashion; but they looked troubled.

"This seems to me really awful," said one, with a suppressed sigh. "What troubles me is, I know so little about it."

"Yes," said another, "and it puts a stop so to everything! Of what use will all these be to-morrow?"

There was a poor seamstress in the corner of the room who now spoke. "We shall be ever with the Lord," she said.

"I'm sure I don't know what that can mean," said the first speaker, with a kind of shudder, "it seems rather fearful."

"Well," said the other, "it seems so sudden

—when one never dreamed of any such thing—to change all at once from this to that other life."

"It is enough to be with Him," said the poor woman. "Oh, I have so longed for it!"

"The great gulf," again said the angel.

Then again we stood on the steps of a church. A band of clergymen were together, Episcopalian, Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian. Old School and New School, all stood hand in hand.

"It's no matter now about these old issues," they said. "He is coming; He will settle all. Ordinations and ordinances, sacraments and creeds, are the scaffolding of the edifice. They are the shadow; the substance is Christ." And hand in hand they turned their faces where the Christmas morning light began faintly glowing, and I heard them saying together, with one heart and one voice—

"Come, Lord Jesus; come quickly."

AFRICA: AN APPEAL.

"I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send?"—Isaiah vi. 8.

O Church of God, awake from sloth,
Turn from the clash of creeds,
Awake to acts of sacrifice
Not words, but noble deeds;
To Africa, hear, hear the call,
The door is open wide.
For love of God, for precious souls,
For Jesu's sake, who died.

Ye Christian men of England,
With you to-day she pleads;
Think of her awful sufferings,
Her dire and dreadful needs;
Think of the slave, the lash, the brand,
Her woes, that like a flood
Have swept her fields and villages
With blast of fire and blood.

O God, whene'er I think of Thee,
My heart cries out, "How long"
This frightful tale of horror,
And this bitter tide of wrong,
Shall Now be as the days gone by,
The future as the past?
Shall Arab band sweep this the land
With burning, blighting blast?

I hear a cry come moaning up
From dying human souls,
Like a surging, rushing river
Its mighty volume rolls;
'Tis the cry of myriad bondmen,
'Tis the cry of human blood
Rising upward, mounting upward
To the holy throne of God.

O Saviour Lord, what love was thine,
May thy deep love inspire
Full many a heart with ardent zeal
With fervent sacred fire,
With high resolve great things to dare,
For love, O Lord, to Thee!
So by thy Gospel's mighty power
To bring them liberty.

A vision lighteth up my heart,
A dream of days to be,
A dream of peacefulness and rest,
When Afric's sons are free;
Of holy calm, of Sabbath psalm,
Of happy gladsome days.
When from above the Saviour's love,
Shall fill their hearts with praise.

God of all power, how weak these words,
How feeble is this pen;
Speak Thou the word, so forth may go
Devoted, earnest men—
Women and men, whose hearts shall cry
"Lord, here am I, send me.
For this great work I give myself
And all I have to Thee."

For the Young.

HINA'S SERMON.

BY EVA TRAVERS EVERED POOLE.

I came across a sweet little story only yesterday—and the story taught me a great deal. I think if I tell it to you, young readers, in simple fashion it will preach us a sermon. I will call my story "Hina's Sermon."

She was a sweet little maiden, fair and rosy-cheeked, with those clear, brown, limpid eyes that remind one of some still forest pool lying under the shadow of great, out-spreading branches. Her dark curls clustered under a little pale blue hood, fringed with some soft, white fur, reminding one of newly-fallen snow-flakes, and making a fitting framing for the innocent baby face.

She stood at the corner of the street in front of a great staring, red-brick building, with heavy iron doors, and a flight of very white stone steps leading up to them. On the wall close by the doors, a box had been affixed, with a slit in it, and inscribed over the box were the words,

"Please remember the Poor."

Yes, she had read them before, but never till to-day had they struck her little heart so strangely. The red-brick building was the "Children's Orphan Asylum" she knew, and inside its walls were children as small as herself, but with no dear father or mother to love them, no happy home, and with much of the bright colouring already faded out of their lives.

Hina stood and looked, first at the box and the words inscribed above it, then down at her own chubby, ungloved palm, in which lay, moist and shining, a silver sixpence! It had been given her that morning as she started for school, by Uncle Fred, with a smile and a reminder that chocolate creams were to be found in the sweet shop near the school, and when fresh, were very wholesome for little maidens!

Just a little hesitation, just a little struggle, and the victory was won! One could see the gleam of triumph in the big, brown eyes and catch the rippling of the happy smile across the pretty face that peeped from under the pale blue hood.

Presently she stood on tip-toe to reach the box; but her arm was short and the box stood high. Quickly looking round she saw a tall gentleman just behind her, looking at her as he passed with a pleasant smile.

"Oh! please sir, will you lift me up? Only just a wee bit, I'm not very heavy," the child's treble voice pleaded; and very good-naturedly the gentleman stopped and, putting his umbrella down on one of the great stone steps, lifted the little creature to within reach of the box. The winsome little face with the soft curls and blue framing was close to his own, and the child paused a second and said, very gently:—"Would you mind, sir, just turning your head while I put it in? I don't want to be a proud Pharisee!"

The gentleman smiled under his heavy brown moustache, but to humour the child turned his head away until he heard the clink of the little coin as it met others in the bottom of the box. Then, as he put the little maiden back upon the pavement he said, still smiling but very courteously, as he took her proffered hand, "What did you say, my child? I don't think I understood you quite."

"Don't you know, sir? Haven't you ever read what Jesus said about the hypocrites—men who walked about the streets and gave money just for people to see and praise them, not because they loved to please Jesus? He says we must not be like them, but just give all we have and not let any one see how much but Himself. I expect you're only pretending you don't know what He said?"

"Good-bye, sir, and thank you. This is my school and I am rather late. I am so sorry I can't walk on with you"—and the little maiden nodded and smiled as she stood on the steps until the gentleman had passed quite out of sight.

Her kind, unknown friend was a man of large wealth, well known in the religious world. Somehow the simple sermon contained in Hina's words had struck home to his heart, as no pulpit sermon had ever done. He had given largely and constantly in the Master's name, and the Master's cause. But he had always prided himself on his liberality, and liked his name to appear on every subscription list, rightly spelt, and with the proper initials prefixed, so that no one might make a mistake as to the magnificent donor.

"Dear me!" he thought to himself, "am I a 'hypocrite-man?' a 'proud market-place Pharisee?' How that little pure-faced maiden shamed me, with her sweet, shy way of giving! What a sermon she has preached me! I stand condemned before God to-day. Oh! may I have a simpler, truer spirit of Christ-like charity—"Less of self and more of Thee."

So Hina preached a sermon all unconsciously—I think it would have lost half its efficacy if it had been a conscious rebuke, don't you?

How do we give? Is it in Hina's humble, faithful way, willing to be unseen of men, and unpraised by them, bent on simply pleasing Jesus—or is it our goodness, our giving, our "righteousness" done to be seen of others and to have "glory of men?" (Matt. v. 6.)

Perhaps you and I need to listen to Hina's sermon, and to stand and question with ourselves, "Why do I give?" and "How do I give?"

Children's Scripture Union.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., Aug. 3, John i. 29—39; Mon., Aug. 4, John i. 40—51; Tues., Aug. 5, John ii. 1—12; Wed., Aug. 6, John ii. 13—25; Thurs., Aug. 7, John iii. 1—13; Fri., Aug. 8, John iii. 14—24; Sat., Aug. 9, John iii. 25—36.

CHILDREN'S SEASIDE SERVICES.

Arrangements for August, 1890, in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission:—Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Llandudno, Aug. 3 to Sept. 14; holding services also at Colwyn Bay (Rev. H. S. Hume in charge), Llanfairfechan and Pensarn. Mr. H. Hutchinson, Bridlington, Aug. 6 to Sept. 6. Mr. E. T. M. Dennes, Whitby, Aug. 1 to Sept. 4. Rev. C. H. Nash, Mr. R. L. Barclay, and others, Scarborough, Aug. 7 to Sept. 8. Mr. Josiah Spiers and Mr. R. Westall, South Shore, Blackpool, Aug. 10 to Sept. 10. Mr. J. H. Greene, Saltburn. Mr. Alfred Haley, Whitley (near Newcastle-on-Tyne). Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Messrs. H. F. Mercer, T. G. Tredennick, and Maggs, Yarmouth. Dr. F. Churchill and Mr. Ernest Lampen, Southwold. Mr. E. J. Kennedy and Captain Chapman, Cromer. Rev. W. E. Peters, Mr. H. Hankinson, and Mr. A. G. Dodderidge, and others, Eastbourne, from Aug. 5. Mr. J. Reginald Naylor and Rev. H. J. Gibbs, Bournemouth, from Aug. 5. Mr. H. L. C. de Candole and Mr. Sidney Warren, Southsea. Rev. W. T. Storrs, and others, Sandown, Isle of Wight. Mr. James S. Tyler, Worthing, to Sept. 6. Mr. Livesey Carrott, Littlehampton, from Aug. 3. Mr. Louis Parkinson, Deal. Rev. Walter Senior, Captain Winn, and Mr. Herbert E. Brown, Margate. Messrs. E. and C. H. Collier, Herne Bay. Rev. Alfred Waller, Southend. Mr. W. R. Moore, Ilfracombe. Mr. J. Crofton Rainey, Paignton. Mr. H. G. Harris, Weston-super-Mare. Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, Rhyl, from Aug. 5. Mr. Howard Staines and Mr. Sidney Webb, Penmaenmawr, Aug. 2 to 24. Mr. Reginald Callender (probably), Weymouth.

The Hop-Pickers' Mission.—Some thousands of people of the poorest and most wretched class will shortly be gathering in our hop gardens. Rev. J. Burnham, who has for years been engaged in Christian work among the pickers, hopes to labour as in previous years. Last year the Mission employed twelve missionaries, who visited many gardens, speaking to the people and holding meetings for their enlightenment in spiritual things. The pickers show, in some cases, warm appreciation of the interest taken in them. Parcels of clothing for the poor women and children, and tracts and Gospel portions (as well as other help) may be sent to Rev. J. J. Kendon, Goudhurst, Kent (Marsden Station, S.E.R.)

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

July 22—26, 1890.

(From Our Special Reporters.)

We doubt if the little town of Keswick has ever had so many inhabitants within its borders as during this Convention time. Last year it was full to overflowing, but this year the strain upon its sleeping and feeding provision has almost reached breaking point. Many were able to obtain the former only after long and patient search in the courts and alleys and by-streets of the town. Unfortunately, the weather has sustained its usual reputation for dampness, though there have been intervals of breezy sunshine. Rain or shine appears to affect very little the attendances at the meetings. The great tent is packed at almost every meeting, and at the general meetings overflow services have to be held in the Drill Hall. With five meetings a day in the tent, three in the Drill Hall, and three in the Lecture Hall, it cannot be said that there is any dearth of opportunity for getting some of the rich feast of spiritual things provided.

TUESDAY.

Limiting the Holy One.

BIBLE-READING BY REV. HUBERT BROOKE.

Compare Ps. lxxviii. 41, 42 and Num. xiv. It is not in the power of angels or devils, or of the forces of Nature, but it is in the power of God's people, to limit the Holy One of Israel. When the Israelites had come through the Red Sea, they sang unto the Lord, for He had triumphed gloriously (Exod. xv. 1); but now, eighteen months after, they believed the spies, and in their hearts returned into Egypt. The point at which we draw a line and limit God from going further, is when He calls us to make a new start. "He has brought me so far, but cannot take me beyond." The Israelites had seen his presence as no other people had. They had seen the waters divided, and the Egyptians overthrown. They had been fed with manna, and God had given them water for their thirst. Now He offers them further blessing—offers to lead them into the good land. No, they said, He cannot do that. They magnified difficulties; looked at the enemies, and not at God. They put God out of the reckoning, and brought an evil report on the land.

The spies said the people were giants, and themselves as grasshoppers. Whereas, the nations are as the drop of a bucket; it was they were the grasshoppers (Isa. xl. 15, 22). Jacob was a worm, which God would make into a new sharp threshing instrument, having teeth, and threshing instruments are not turned aside by grasshoppers.

They said, "Let us make a captain and go back to Egypt," while all they needed was to take God for captain and go into the land. They brought a slander on the land; said it was not worth having. So young Christians ask older ones what some promise means, and are told it does not mean all it says.

Mark what happened (Num. xiv. 13). The inhabitants would hear of it. The world behind tells the world in front that God is able to bring his people out of Egypt, but not able to bring them into Canaan. Thus they caused the name of Israel's God to be blasphemed.

Do not say the land of promise is not for you. There are no special Christians. Either you are God's people or not God's people; and, if you are, the promise is for you. If Christians disbelieve, they discourage their children, making them wilderness-wanderers for forty years, while their own carcases, their own lives, are wasted there. How sad a spectacle! Lives intended to be spent for Him wasted uselessly. They had life, but not life more abundantly.

"Ye shall know my breach of promise." They delayed the fulfilment of the promise to their children, and themselves missed it altogether. The living Church is the body of Christ, and any one member who draws back helps to put off the coming kingdom.

The promises of God are exceeding great and precious (2 Pet. i. 4). But people sit down content with one. They have been redeemed from Egypt, but know nothing about the land flowing with milk and honey.

There is a terrible possibility of limiting God. He cannot lie, He will fulfil his word; but his promises are to faith; and He cannot deny Himself. There are foes stronger than we, but they are as the drop of a bucket before Him. Where it is said these enemies are peculiarly strong, or we are peculiarly weak, and, where God is not trusted for victory, He can do no mighty works there because of our unbelief. Not believing his power to the full, we tempt God and limit the Holy One of Israel.

His Word calls us to find out what He intends to do: it records promises concerning continual deliverance and perpetual progress in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Have you ever dreamed of enjoying all that God has promised you? Are you ready to believe that what God was at first He is all the way? The secret of progress is the same as the secret of beginning.

Rom. i. 17 tells us that God's righteousness is revealed from faith to faith. All his other promises are on the same principle. Deal with each succeeding promise as with the first. "As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord (once for all), so walk ye (continuously) in Him" (Col. ii. 6). You gave up your own power and wisdom when you received Him, so walk step by step, doing the same. The Apostle (Heb. vi.) desired that they should show the same diligence constantly as they had at first. At each step Israel took another city, until the whole land was taken. Be followers of them who through faith and patience—believing and waiting—inherit the promises.

Now you are going to do one of these two things—either to believe and possess, or to disbelieve and reject. What can you do with any one promise that you cannot do with any other? Let us have nothing to do with limiting, but believe that what God has promised He is able to perform.

The hymn was sung—

I'm more than conqueror through his blood.

Debtors to God.

To another full tent addresses were given at 11.30 by Rev. W. Haslam and Rev. J. G. Gregson. Mr. Haslam spoke from Rom. viii. 12: "Therefore we are debtors." God, by means of these conventions, is opening out the things that He has for us in Christ. He is showing us there are greater things for us than merely being saved and going to heaven when we die. Man's religion makes God his debtor; but God has placed man under untold obligation for all the provision He has made. In his pleasure He has planned to save us, and if we do not fall in with his plan He is grieved. We cannot please Him if we walk after the flesh, but if the Spirit of God dwell in us we shall walk according to his good pleasure. As converted people we need to realise not so much the salvation as the Saviour. The next stage is this: Have we got the Spirit of Christ? For this experience we need another act of faith. Before we can be his followers He must Himself dwell in us in his risen power. In the old dispensation they knew about forgiveness and the keeping power of God, but in this dispensation we have also the risen life of Christ. Wherever He comes to dwell, He must bring with Him all his power. He does not give us a certain stock of grace apart from Himself; but, if we receive Him into our lives, all his grace and might are at our disposal. Have we had any experience of this added blessing? As we heard to-day, we have been limiting God's great gift to us, thinking more of a dead Christ than a risen, living One. Assuredly He is here, and is knocking at the door of many hearts.

Much may be done when He does come, in cleansing the temple and casting out the traffickers. The fact that we abhor that which we did not notice before, shows that He has begun his work in us. He purifies, that we may have fellowship with Him in his great work throughout the world. The Apostle also speaks of the Spirit of the Father (ver. 11) who raised up Jesus from the dead. That is, to quicken our mortal (not our dead) bodies by the working of his mighty power. We limit the Divine power here, too. Let us not only believe He can do it, but say He has done it. Let us have a conquering faith. It is only the empty ones He can fill, and the weak ones He can use. There are these three operations: the Holy Spirit working to save sinners, Christ working to keep believers, and God working to quicken our mortal bodies for his service. We are so careful of our precious bodies. "Do thyself no harm" is a very favourite text with many people. Though we have limited God, He is waiting to be gracious. We can only pay our debt by giving ourselves. We may have sorrows and trials, but we shall also have joy, and shall be more than conquerors through Him that loved us.

DEBTOR TO MEN.

Paul says again (Rom. i.) that he is a debtor to men also. Our own salvation is a secondary thing; we are saved to bless others. Many men are leading holy lives in order to propitiate and please God; as if Christ had not done everything already. Do not let us detract from his finished work by any works of our own. The Apostle said he was in debt to preach the Gospel to all men. So are we. We pity the heathen and the unconverted at home; but, if we are believers, whose fault is it that they are still unsaved? God has saved us; what are we doing to save others? Only one thing can overthrow the false religions of the day — the love of God in the heart. Thank God, He is stirring up his people everywhere to lay hold on Himself. A Ritualist priest once said to me he objected very much to lay preachers, especially women preachers—that was a horrible thing. He said they were Korahs. I told him he was the Korah, because he took upon himself to say that Christ, the only Priest, must not dare to forgive sinners, except through such as he. He was a religious, praying man; he went to his room and prayed over the matter. By the morning, God had revealed to him the truth of what I had been saying, and he heartily thanked me. He wondered how he could have been tied and bound by such a delusion. I brought him to Keswick, and he heard much that was strong meat to him, and that he found it difficult to swallow. But he did it. After hearing an address at the tent, he would go to his hotel and pray over it a long time, that God would reveal it fully to his soul.

Rev. J. G. Gregson

put this apostolic question: "Did ye receive the Holy Ghost when ye believed?" Priscilla was not a doctor of divinity, but she was deeply taught in God's truth. Some women nowadays may not be permitted to preach, but they are all allowed to ask questions. Let them put this question to some of our divines, and, if they cannot answer it, then do as Priscilla did—teach them the way of God more perfectly. If any have come to Keswick to receive a Divine blessing they must be in a divine attitude. It is not a question of giving up this and that; there must be a getting rid of self. God wants us to wait for his promise. We are in too great a hurry in these days. What is the use of going here and there to the ends of the earth if we are not sent by God. Let us seek first to testify at home. We say we want power; God never gave man power but once, and then he used it against the Giver. Power is not in us, but in God who dwells in us. We are but earthen vessels, easily cracked and broken; but, if such a vessel is filled with the power of God, He can use it. We shall not get power merely to exalt ourselves, or to draw large congregations. We too often think we are indispensable to God, and if we go abroad we think there is a sort of halo of glory about us. With God there is no distinction between home and foreign missions.

The first manifestation of God's power in us will be the denial of self. It is by the Spirit of God only that we can do his work and glorify Him. We want power again for fruit-bearing. It is not by the exercise of our gifts and talents that we can do anything; they must all go on the altar and be burned up. Where then is the fruit to come from? God will give spiritual power by his indwelling Spirit. We talk about being emptied; we cannot empty ourselves till the Spirit comes into us and burns everything up. There must be patient waiting upon God; He is not in a hurry. Christ waited for thirty long years before He began his work. If we are sent away from Keswick and do not find anything wonderful to do, let us wait on God. Are we now ready and willing and wishing to receive the Holy Spirit of God? If we can go forth and witness for God, the world will recognise it. How is it we find the world encroaching on the Church instead of the Church redeeming the world? When God indwells and abides in his people, the world will know and feel the power of it. Let this question of the reception of the Spirit be settled by each one individually, alone with God. If we receive this Spirit we shall go back to our homes full of power.

The "O Thats" of Scripture.

Rev. C. A. Fox took this theme on Tuesday evening. Let us look, he said, at some of God's "O thats." They are the ejaculations of a disappointed God—disappointed because his people have gone no further; have not maintained their place of privilege and power. There is one of these ejaculations in Deut. v. 29: "O that there were such a heart in them, that they would fear Me, and keep all my commandments always, that it might be well with them, and with their children for ever!" God too often sees in us a heart not fully cleansed, claimed, yielded, filled with the Holy Ghost. Passing on from this "O that" of eternal welfare, let us turn to another Divine ejaculation, in Isaiah—the "O that" of peace—"O that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments! then had thy peace been as a river, and thy righteousness as the waves of the sea" (xlviii. 18). These are the possibilities of the redeemed children of God. Peace, not like a dried-up stream, but as a torrent, a river—full, rich, glorious, bounding, overflowing, and fresh. Archbishop Whately once said to a man standing on a bridge: "Have you seen this river before?" "Oh, yes, I live here in the town." "But have you seen this river?" "Yes." "No; it is a new one to-day." So the river of God's peace is always new, and fresh, and overbrimming—mercy upon mercy, blessing upon blessing, grace added to grace; a river that keeps on progressing and fertilising more and more. "Your righteousness as the waves of the sea." You have seen the sea. Far off it was as a visible tremor on the horizon. But you have seen it growing, and growing, until the great billows leaped one upon another and plunged in with thunder on the shore. This is what God intended the righteouness of his children should be—that they should be more than conquerors. You shall not only have victory through Christ, but you shall have the spoils of the enemy to lay at the feet of the Lord Jesus.

Turn to Ps. lxxxi. 13 for another ejaculation—the "O that" of plenty. "O that my people had hearkened unto Me, and Israel had walked in my ways! I should soon have subdued their enemies, and turned my hand against their adversaries." God calls his people here to remember the deliverances He had wrought when they called to Him in the day of trouble. We know something of what it is to pass through the furnace of trouble; have we called on God to deliver us? It is but a call. The Lord is not far off—yea, the very thoughts of our heart are heard in heaven. But we must put away all strange gods; there must be no conflict between God's will and ours. How can we get this blessing of plenty? "Open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it." There is too much routine about our prayers; we do not cry out to God as did the publican, "God, be propitiatory to me, the sinner." We must open the mouth wide—not merely in prayer and praise, but in witness for Him, and in holy hunger of expectation. May God enable us so to open wide the arms of our faith that we may receive a whole Christ to be the reigning Sovereign Lord in our lives henceforth and for ever; and that we may lay down the arms of rebellion for ever and ever at his feet. What follows? "I should soon have subdued their enemies." His power would have been on our side. Not only so. "I should have fed them with the finest of the wheat"—fulness of knowledge and power. That is what God gives to us when we hearken to his voice.

Let us turn now from these "O thats" of God, to

THE RESPONSE OF THE CHURCH.

"O that Thou wouldest rend the heavens; that Thou wouldest come down; that the mountains might flow down at thy presence!" The Church overhears God in his disappointed mood, and at last she gathers up strength to say: "If Thou wilt come down the thing shall be done which Thou art desiring to be done." People talk much about rending the heavens; how is it to be done? We find it in this chapter. There must be first of all full confession. "We are all as an unclean thing" (ver. 6). There is failure even in our best things. "Our righteousnesses are as filthy rags." What a terrible confession. It is Isaiah himself who is speaking, whose lips were touched with the Spirit of fire, and whose mouth spoke the Word of the living God with such marvellous grandeur and energy. So also we find Daniel in the Old Testament, and John in the New, making deep confession of their own sin and that of their people.

"We all do fade as a leaf." Are not many of our lives like faded leaves—the colour washed out—powers, properties, graces, gifts, energies, gone? "Our iniquities, like the wind, have taken us away"—carried away in the tumult of passion and evil within and around us. If any here are looking for real blessing there must be this deep, humbling confession of sin and failure—not only of things conscious, but of the many things that God's eye must see that we are not conscious of. This should be done emphatically, and done every day, and absolution received from the lips of the great High Priest Himself.

But there must be something more even than this confession and despair of self. "There is none that calleth upon thy name that stirreth up himself to take hold of Thee." This is one of the most wonderful passages in Holy Scripture. The holy Lord Jesus will let the poor sinful woman at his feet take hold of them and wash them, and He will love her for it. He will let the defiled Peter clasp Him by the knees, and love him for it; He will let the lost sheep rest on his shoulders, and He will rejoice over it. Shall we not "call upon his name?" We have lost our own name and reputation; let us stir ourselves up to take hold on Him. Because of our iniquities He has hid his face from us. Just because we are being consumed under his hand for our sins, we must bestir ourselves to take hold of Him. Then, see how closely after come these wonderful words, "But now, O Lord, Thou art our Father." Still the old, familiar word, "Father." "I will arise and go to my Father."

HERE IS FULL AND ENTIRE SURRENDER.

We are the clay, and He is the potter. He will take and fashion us for his own use. He will mould us by providences, sorrows, trials, temptations; by those peculiarities we call infirmities.

This being so, "O that Thou wouldest rend the heavens and come down!" Pentecost was a rent heaven. In Scripture there are many things rent. The grave was rent. The body of our Lord was rent with many wounds. But, till Christ ascended, the heavens were not rent. When He went in as a Conqueror, the Holy Ghost descended and the Pentecostal fire fell. What is the effect of that fire? It consumes, it separates. Oh, that the fire of God might separate between our soul and our sin! What is this fire? "He is like a refiner's fire." It is Jesus. Do not let us be afraid of Him. Let Him burn us as He will. Love burns hot, and his love must consume all in us that offends. This fire also illuminates and gives power of testimony. When the Pentecostal fire fell, the disciples began to speak out; they could not help it. This is what we want.

The fire brings fusion. Here are people from all sections of the Church of Christ, and we all meet as brethren. No one of us knows scarcely to what religious persuasion the others belong, but we know that we are all persuaded of the Lord Jesus. One is our Master, and all who love Him in sincerity are our brethren.

Under Sentence of Death.

Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe followed with a very thoughtful address on 2 Cor. i. 8-10, ii. 15, 16. It was to most of the less-instructed hearers very difficult to apprehend, and some helplessly gave up the attempt to follow the speaker. We found that a party of spiritually intelligent friends had been deeply interested and profited by it, and asked one of them, who frequently sends us accounts of the work of God, to write out a résumé. The following is the result:—

Three of our party have been, we trust, definitely helped through that wonderful message, but how we can hardly tell. It seemed an effort to understand, baffled and almost bewildered for long, till suddenly it seemed as if light shone in and all the past was illumined, and we could see that the darkened pathway had been leading all along to light; that every hope but one was destroyed, and that through despair of self one was driven to the only sure hiding place and standing place.

I think he began with remarks on the painfulness of the experience of getting to the end of one's self; spoke of the awfulness even of earthly death, and said that the spiritual experience was infinitely more full of awe. Then came the experience of the Apostle, having the sentence of death in himself, "That he should not trust in himself, but in God that raiseth the dead."

A "savour of life unto life, or of death unto death" was spoken of. The Gospel is death not only to those who reject it, but to those who receive it. Continually we are to give over to death whatever God had sentenced to death, and to life what He wills to live. He spoke of the imperfection of the presentation of the Gospel to anxious souls; how evangelists sometimes placed before them only the condemnation on account of sin, and to meet that need a Saviour to save from hell; neglecting to show them the state of death in which they are, and, therefore, their inability to do anything to please God, and their state of bondage to their terrible enemy—sin. He showed us how Paul preached the Gospel, bringing the soul in its utter need to cry, "Who shall deliver me from the body of this death;" and how God, in answer to the despairing cry, enables him in self-despair to cast himself utterly on God, and to say, "I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord."

We were told to give over to death our service. To regard our bodies as already sentenced to death, and therefore not to be too much concerned about them—to leave to God the care of them, that when sickness or death comes into our homes, we should have the same thought—given over to death already—and thus letting the Lord choose the time or means. I think this was the thought, but am not sure it was expressed.

And as to our work he said much that made one feel only too glad if what we have dared to call our work for the Lord could just be put out of sight altogether, so full had it been of self-pleasing and self-seeking; as if one could give it over to death joyfully, only wishing to be able to forget the shame of it, and putting our trust only in God who raiseth the dead.

I am sure there was much more about deliverance than about death, but I cannot recall it so clearly. There was a very helpful definition of the distinction between faith, trust, and confidence. This comes out in the precious text, "I know whom I have believed"—that is faith. "What I have committed unto Him"—that is trust. "I am persuaded"—that is confidence.

I do wish that others might share in the profound humiliation, and, strange to say, calm and comfort, the message has brought. Paul's verse will always now be doubly precious: "We have the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God that raiseth the dead." I think I never saw before that the death of all trust in ourselves is the death of all doubts and fears. It carries us on to "Who delivered us from such a death, and doth deliver, and we trust that He will yet deliver."

WEDNESDAY.

The Claims of the Heathen World.

For the last year or two nothing has been more hopeful in connection with the Keswick meetings than the growth of missionary zeal and interest. Last year this was especially manifest in the commissioning of Rev. G. C. Grubb and his companions to go out as Keswick missioners to visit different parts of the foreign field. Much satisfaction was expressed when it became known that Mr. Grubb, after a long and busy tour of visitation in India and elsewhere, would be present on this occasion. He made his first appearance at the tent on Wednesday afternoon, and received a hearty welcome from everybody. The meeting was specially for considering the claims of the great heathen world on the Christian Church. The tent was full, with many standing at the entrances. Mr. Wilson, who presided, gave expression to the general thankfulness for God's mercy to Mr. Grubb and his companions during their journeyings of nine months on foreign service, as representatives of Keswick.

Mr. Grubb gave the first address. During the time at his disposal, he said he could only give a few incidents of the lovingkindness of the Lord since they left England on October 17. They had a splendid voyage in the Chusan, and the Lord gave many seasons of refreshing with the large company of outgoing missionaries on board. Many of these testified that on the voyage they had found a liberty of soul they did not possess.

SEVERAL STRIKING CASES OF BLESSING

were mentioned by Mr. Grubb. One instance was that of a lady who heard Mr. Millard use the word "hallelujah," and objected. After a week, she discovered that she had nothing to "hallelujah" about, but it was not long before she had. Passing for a moment from the ship to New Zealand, Mr. Grubb spoke of a young man there who was walking in the grounds of the Bishop's Palace with Mr. Millard. The latter urged him to have the matter of salvation settled at once. He did not like at first to kneel down for fear the Bishop's wife, a relative, might see him from the window. At length, he knelt, and gave his heart to God. He afterwards said he now understood why the Salvationists clap their hands, and shout "Hallelujah." "I hope," said Mr. Grubb, "some of you Keswick folk will get to this before long. I fear that Keswick is getting very respectable; you all seem afraid to give voice to the joy that is in your hearts." Coming back to the outward voyage he told of a lady who was very nervous when a big wave struck the ship, and was frightened lest the ship should be going down. Mr. Millard asked her why she was afraid; if it did go down, she would only be drowned. She found she was not really trusting the Lord. She went to her cabin, and got right with Him, and proclaimed it by putting a text, with "Hallelujah" on it, outside her room. The quartermaster was asked if he had been converted, and he said, "Bless you, sir, six times." He was one of those who only trusted for forgiveness, and did not go on to get deliverance from the power of sin; but he learned that secret.

Mr. Grubb and his companions made it a practice to lay every small detail of their course before the Lord. They had some very direct answers to prayer. One day they were in the cabin praying about having a service on the Sunday; and while they were thus engaged the captain sent a messenger, requesting them to hold a service. They had some trouble with one man on board, and were praying about it, when he knocked at the door, and desired to have their differences put right. At Colombo their hostess had met with a serious accident, causing, as the physician said, concussion of the brain. She was interdicted from attending any of the meetings, but she was unwilling to be thus deprived. Mr. Grubb gathered around her with several Christian friends in the house, and he anointed her with oil, praying over her. That afternoon she dressed and attended the services, and has been perfectly well ever since. That was not the only instance of faith healing, said Mr. Grubb, that occurred during the mission. He could thank God that he had not experienced a single moment of illness since he went away; though night after night he had gone to bed so tired that he could not pray more than to say these three words:

"GOOD-NIGHT, LORD."

There had been many cases of distinct conversion, and it was difficult to select. A doctor came into Colombo to give evidence in a lawsuit. The suit was delayed so that he attended the meetings and got soundly converted. He has since been testifying for God. A young muscular planter was seen riding on his bicycle by Mr. Grubb who claimed him for God though he did not speak to him. He attended several meetings, and gave himself to God. He had since written to say it is a splendid thing to be saved, and he is obliged to tell everybody about it.

On the first Sunday in Colombo the rains of the monsoon season came down tremendously. One of the clergy advised them to give up the mission because of the rain, and go to Tinnevelly. Mr. Grubb said he believed God had sent him to Colombo, and he was going to conduct the mission, rain or no rain. They made the weather a matter of special prayer, and from that day to the close not a single meeting was interrupted by the rain, in the rainy season. The papers took the matter up, and one editor asked where the monsoon had gone. It was noised over the island, and when they were going to a place the people said there would be fine weather, for the missioners were coming. As Elijah was a man of like passions with them, they thought they might pray to God about the rain as well as he.

Much infidelity was met with, both on board and, especially, in New Zealand. In that country, however, there were twenty infidel societies eight years ago, but now there is only one, and it is kept from decay by a rich old infidel. Several septics were converted through the mission services. No argument was used with them. They were convicted of sin and gave their hearts to God. At a place near Nelson Mr. Millard was holding a service, and the foremost infidel in the place was present. He fell on his knees and cried for mercy while the service in the church was going on, and he has since been boldly testifying for the Lord. At another place a man praised God for having been delivered from twenty-five years' infidelity. A working man said, in his homely language: "That preaching has knocked all the apples out of my basket; I am going to get a new set of apples put in."

Coming home from Auckland to San Francisco they prayed to the Lord as to whether they should come steerage, and they decided to do so. That had saved £120 for the Keswick mission. But the Lord had blessed the step most wonderfully in giving them power with the saloon passengers. In no ship had they more influence. They were blessed to the conversion of an old spiritualist gentleman. He asked why they were going steerage, when they could easily have gone first class. He thought he was living up to spiritualist creed; but his conscience smote him, because he felt he had been wasting his money while they were saving money. He was completely broken in pieces, and before he left the vessel he was rejoicing in the Saviour. Mr. Grubb added that there are now in America ten millions of spiritualists who utterly deny Christ, and say that He has not come in the flesh.

AN INFIDEL'S MOUTH SHUT.

There was on board an infidel lecturer of eighteen years standing, and Mr. Grubb said he had never suffered such soul agony in his life as in listening to this man's awful blasphemies. Argument with him was no use, as he did not want to learn truth, and they took him to the Lord for judgment that his mouth might be stopped. All the rest of the voyage on the Brittania he never spoke a word openly about infidel subjects. He was not converted, but his mouth was stopped. It came about in this way. Mr. Grubb had been preaching about Zaccheus, and this infidel went to the smoking-room and began to make fun of the sermon. A gentleman there said: "Shut up, you fool. We know that he is right, and we are wrong; and you know it too." The man got up in anger and left the room. Mr. Grubb told also of a well-known actor who was on board, and who was greatly impressed. He came up to the preacher one Sunday, and thanked him, with tears in his eyes, for having come to tell them such things. His manager came one day and said; "I must tell you this: if Christ is anything, He must be first and last. But how could I go on with my profession if I were a Christian?" The reply was, "I do not know; that is not my business. You will have to settle that with the 'First and Last.'"

Some exceedingly interesting particulars were given by Mr. Grubb about his encounters, on board one ship, with jockeys going to the races at Melbourne. He said these jockeys showed more friendliness to them than some of the professing Christians. One jockey, a Roman Catholic, came to Mr. Grubb as he was reading, and asked if it was a Bible. On being told it was, he said it was the first time in his life he had ever had a Bible in his hand. "Would you like to read a chapter?" "I would; it is a very good book." He read John iii., and at another time Mark xvi. He would then go up on deck and repeat to the other jockeys all that he could remember. They rewarded him by dragging him along the deck by the legs, and this was for some time a daily amusement. Mr. Grubb told of one striking interview with this man, and said he expected to meet him in glory. One thing that greatly delighted him was the discovery that Christ was born in a stable; that was to him the most lovely thing in the world.

In closing his singularly interesting narrative, Mr. Grubb said they found everywhere an earnest desire for the Word of God. There was much that he could not now touch upon, but he and his companions magnified the Lord for his goodness to them.

Mr. Wilson announced that a register had been opened near by the tent, setting forth the needs of different parts of the heathen field, and for taking the addresses of those who were willing to offer themselves for service.

Mr. Eugene Stock read part of a letter from the Senior Bishop of New Zealand, expressing much gratitude for the visit of Mr. Grubb and his fellow workers.

REV. S. A. SELWYN

quoted Ps. li. 12: "Then shall I teach transgressors thy ways." This question must be settled by every Christian—What was I converted for? When inconsistency in Christians is removed there will be more hope of infidels and Romanists. Some professing Christians seem to be living for money and pleasure. Others live for happiness alone. Have we learnt that we are saved to do God's will in extending his kingdom at home and abroad. How much have we done it? One qualification is the restoration of our joy. Are we all out-and-out rejoicing Christians? If we had been, our country would have been converted long ago. Another qualification is to be upheld by the Spirit; that brings freedom to work according to God's will. What a privilege it is to take the message to transgressors.

When we live a yielded life, we shall be kept from sin in ourselves, and enabled to point sinners to Christ. We look at these things too much as privileges and too little as commands. We have been saying, This is for a few good people only. No; God intends every Christian to be a worker. What are we doing for Him? Very well to sing and shout, but what could we say to Him if He came now? What have we been doing with our money and talents? Home heathen! Not one in all Great Britain but is within walking distance of the Gospel message. Multitudes of us have become Gospel hardened. We are having spiritual dyspepsia. Where are the workers in India, Africa, and China? There are three words: Come, yield, go. Parents are hindering their children from going to the field, while multitudes of heathen are going to hell. How shall we meet the Master at the great judgment?

The natives on the West African Coast are doing a great work, but help is much needed from England. What is one man among ten thousand people? Here are Englishmen who would go out to fight for Queen and country, and who would go out to a good situation abroad, who, nevertheless, will not step into the breach for King Jesus and his heathen. Settle it to-day. Don't ask, Why should I go? but, with the command before you, say, Why should I not go? "Who will go for us?" "Here am I, send me." That is consecration.

REV. BARCLAY F. BUXTON

said that each one here is as responsible for souls as those who have spoken. We ought, on our knees, to ponder Ezekiel xxxiii. 6, "His blood will I require at thy hand." Will that doom await some here rejoicing before the Lord? There is blood to save, and the Holy Ghost to give power, but where is the willingness to go out and do battle for God? If our consecration does not enable us to bear the cross and despise the shame, what is it worth? Are we soul-winners at home? If not, how can we be so abroad, where the power of the devil is still more rampant? Oh to be burdened for the souls of those near us. It is a cross, but this is what God requires of us. It is no drawing-room work, this fighting for souls. Let us boldly step forward and seek to win men for the Lord Jesus. If we "believe in the life everlasting," surely we shall be soldiers of the cross, and seek to draw men back from condemnation to God. "Dost thou believe" in heaven and in hell? If so, let your lives show it. Wait on God for the Holy Ghost, and then He will use you in saving others.

gave the closing words of exhortation. He wanted to comfort those whose grey hairs precluded them from going abroad for service. He echoed the invitation to all who are young and free, to go to these wide-spread fields. Yet there must be no "dry tree" in God's vineyard, bearing no fruit. You may serve God as truly in a kitchen at home as in India or China. "What is the claim the Lord has upon me?" is the question for each. He will teach us what it is. Let us all feel that we must work. The night is coming for us all very quickly.

In Num. iii., iv., and viii., we read of the dedication of the Levites. They were to be offered, cleansed, separated, and given. The Levites are the Church of to-day—a kingdom of priests unto God, so as to draw the world to God before his coming in kingly power. The Levites were zealous for God in a testing time, and so they had the honour of being chosen for what God would have had the whole nation to be. God separated them to stand before Him, and to bless the people in his name. Many of the Levites had heavy burdens to bear, and so many missionaries may have to do. Levi ought to have been a mighty power in the land, but they shirked their privilege. As they were given up to Aaron, so we are given up to our Aaron. The Levites retired from active work at fifty, but not so the priests. It was Aaron's own family that was wholly given for a service of delight to do God's service night and day, but not to have any burdensome duty. Shall we claim our relationship to the true Aaron and be wholly devoted to his service—not intermittent, or one accommodated to our convenience. Do we regard it as a little bit of an "extra" put on, as "Ascot week" for the world. Surely we ought to live and work in the light of the coming back of the Great High Priest. He has given us charge of this work till He returns. Shall we sit down and feast, instead of doing His work? The Lord does not call everyone to be heroic, or to speak on a platform, and perhaps make a fool of himself. If we are "wholly given unto Him," He will point out the service. We belong to Christ. Let us take a humble lowly position. Let us not take the flesh from the pot of God, and neglect to do the service that He appoints.

How to Meet Temptation.

On Wednesday evening, Rev. F. B. Meyer spoke:—

My subject is the dreaded way of Temptation. Turn to Matt. iv., where we have an account of our Lord's temptation, which evidently follows the historical order; whilst that of St. Luke follows the order of temptation as given in 1 John ii. 16.

The tempter came to our Lord; and he will come to us in proportion as we are closely identified with Christ; not that he cares much for us, but that he may wound Christ through us. He rejoices to attack Christ in us; and there is a better chance of success with us, because in us, as not in Christ, there is a strong tendency to evil. He comes in lonely hours, when we are in the wilderness, led apart out of these crowds into our several isolated spheres of duty; in moments of physical depression—to Elijah, overwearied with the strain of Carmel; to John the Baptist, pining in a dungeon; to Jesus, after forty days of fast; and to many, after a great blessing.

The Lord's baptism was his act of consecration to do the will of God and fulfil all righteousness, though it led him into the Jordan of death. Instantly He was anointed with the Spirit and proclaimed the Son of God. Was not this the moment when there burst on his human consciousness, as never before, the assurance of his Divine Being? So with us; it is when we stand on the other side of a great blessing that we may expect to be vigorously assailed. It was after Peter's recognition of the Divine Sonship of his Lord that he was bidden to get behind Him (Matt. xvi. 17-23). It is when we stand in "the heavenlies" that we have to do with "the wiles of the devil" (Eph. vi. 12).

And the Spirit of God leads us into temptation! He will not, and cannot tempt. But He permits us to come into circumstances of temptation, that we may be able in some measure to sympathise with and succour others (Heb. ii. 18). And also, because a blessing is not ours so long as it only exists in our intellect or upon the pages of our note-book. St. James says that it is not the hearer, but the doer who is blest (Jas. i. 25). And therefore the Spirit forces us into conditions where we are compelled to use some blessing He has bestowed. The temptation never comes without there being an amount of unused grace in the heart, to which it directs our attention and forces us to put it into use. Temptation is made a blessing, by driving us to make the most of our resources in Jesus. There are thus treasures in the darkest hours of temptation; as sweet spices may be imported in common packing-cases (Isa. xlv. 3). There is an oratory of peace in the castle beleaguered by tribulation, which the hunted soul gladly seeks (John xvi. 33). There is a combination of the placidity of the sea of glass with the biting flames of fire (Rev. xv. 2).

THE WHITE DEVIL.

We have most of all to fear the devil, when he comes in a religious garb. Fear the black devil less than the white one. As Christian life advances, he attacks us less in the grosser passions, and presents his temptations in subtler forms to the motives and thoughts, and with reference to our religious standing. The prime point of his attack is a morbid conscientiousness, which is peculiarly sensitive to worries, and which is much more concerned with questions of rites and ceremonies, of dress and ornaments, of expediency, than of what concerns the fundamental distinctions of right and wrong, and of what pleases God. Directly you find yourselves worrying about a number of these things, unable to hand them over to Christ; asking what this and the other teacher thinks, and seeking to do as other Christians do, instead of waiting quietly in the Master's presence for Him to indicate authoritatively

Rev. GEORGE C. GRUBB,

Mission Preacher.

THE subject of our portrait this week is Rev. George Carleton Grubb, youngest son of the late Mr. Richard Grubb, J.P., of Cahir Abbey, co. Tipperary. It was at school in Switzerland, when about sixteen, that the realisation of God's great love was the main instrument of his conversion. That wonderful verse, John iii. 16, came upon him as a voice from God, and led him to resolve to enter the ministry, that he might give his life wholly to the preaching of Christ. About this time also, the reading of the life of Rev. Henry Watson Fox, one of the missionaries of the Church Missionary Society in South India, directed his thoughts towards the foreign mission field.

When in Trinity College, Dublin, his leisure hours were spent in aiding in different forms of Christian work, but he was specially attracted to the soldiers, and would frequently visit in barracks. Christian officers with whom he was associated have frequently spoken of his three to five minutes addresses in the barrack-rooms as being models of their kind, and perhaps there are few preachers who make their way so rapidly with soldiers, or know so well how to rivet their attention. Many soldiers are now scattered in various parts of the United Kingdom who date their conversion from his efforts on their behalf.

Shortly after his ordination by Dr. Maurice Day, Bishop of Cashel, he became curate of Cahir, and throughout the South and West of Ireland opportunities of conducting evangelistic services frequently offered themselves. In the general West London mission of February, 1885, he was invited by Rev. Nevile Sherbrooke, the incumbent, to conduct the mission services at Portman Chapel. Blessing of a very marked character followed this effort, and Mr. Grubb's name became widely known amongst Christian people. Shortly after this the Home Mission Society of the Church of Ireland asked him to join their ranks, and since then he has been constantly engaged in almost every part of Ireland and in parts of England, bearing the Lord's message in his own striking way.

One marked feature of these missions has been the attendance of Roman Catholics, attracted by his earnest catholicity of spirit, more intent on preaching the Gospel than on inveighing against the errors of their Church. Hundreds every night have attended his meetings, and several have received the Gospel from his lips. It is a remarkable fact that no Roman Catholics who have been converted to the Gospel of the Lord Jesus have been known to take part in political disturbances during the last few years.

In 1887, the Church Missionary Society decided to send a party of mission preachers to visit their stations in India and Ceylon. Mr. Grubb was one of those selected, and, along with Colonel G. W. Oldham, a Christian officer of large experience, was appointed to work in the Bombay Presidency and Ceylon. The magazines of the Church Missionary Society gave long accounts of what proved to be a remarkable time, through the blessing of God's Holy Spirit. Very many testified to having received the gift of peace and rest in Jesus Christ, and many hundreds of letters of thanks were received by the missioners from Europeans and natives alike. We subjoin an extract relating to the work of Mr. Grubb and Colonel Oldham in Ceylon, from the report of the Church Missionary Society for 1888-9, contained in a letter from Rev. J. D. Simmons, a missionary.

Speaking of some of the planters on the coffee estates, he says:—

> They seem to have been literally filled with the fire of love to and zeal for Christ. They began at once to work for Jesus, not only amongst their countrymen, but more especially with the coolies on their estates. They started schools for the children and adults who were willing to learn, They have often taught and preached themselves, after a hard day's work. Then they began to visit the bazaars on Sundays. Sunday is the great day of trade, when the bazaars are filled with coolies. To these, three of the young men are preaching. Sunday after Sunday, the glad tidings of the Gospel. They distribute large numbers of tracts and handbills. Sometimes they walk eight or ten miles to reach the appointed place; there they preach for a couple of hours, getting a hasty breakfast as best they can, and then make for another preaching-place, or walk home, weary in body, but strong and joyful in spirit. I do not hesitate to say that the intense earnestness and holy lives of these young men have made a deeper impression on the natives than anything that we appointed labourers have done. They see that there is a reality and a power in a religion which has produced such wonderful effects upon young English planters, too many of whom have been far from recommending our religion by purity, kindness, gentleness, and care for other men's souls. The good has not been confined to its effects upon the heathen. It has greatly encouraged and stimulated the native Christians, and it has stirred us labourers up to emulate their loving zeal.

During his recent return visit to Ceylon it was a great joy to him to discover that only one or two of these converts had grown cold. The majority were living earnest and devoted lives, preaching the Gospel by their words and consistent character among their coolies and employés, many of whom have been converted.

Last year the trustees of the Keswick Convention decided to send abroad a band of men who might bring to other lands the blessed truths which are emphasised by the Convention. They asked Mr. Grubb to become the leader of this band. He consented, though on an independent basis, and he and three others, Messrs. Campbell, Millard, and Richardson, have, since last October, been holding missions in Ceylon, Tinnevelly, and New Zealand successively. Rev. John Barton, the secretary of the Church Missionary Society in Tinnevelly, states that as a result of their visit the feelings of the natives may be best expressed by the words, "There was great joy in that city."

Tall in figure, Mr. Grubb is about thirty-four years of age. One form of his preaching is to select a word, such as "Precious," or "Compassion," or such a sentence as "Where is now thy God?" and to dwell upon the various forms of truth which group themselves around its use upon each occasion, and which thus enables them easily to be remembered. His peculiar gifts of speech are thorough naturalness and abandon, with a latent vein of Irish humour. The addresses delivered by him at Keswick last week, and more or less fully reported in this issue, are good specimens of his platform utterances, though of course the genial personality of the man and his downright enthusiasm of spirit are wanting. It is probable that his next sphere of Christian labour will be the Cape of Good Hope. We pray that a life so well begun may continue and grow in increasing usefulness to the glory of God.

The Keswick Convention.

his will for his child—then know certainly that you are being assailed by the wicked spirits in heavenly places.

The devil also has a great hold on those who have an inadequate knowledge of Scripture. He garbles Scripture, wrenches it from its context, and hurls it at the soul, as once against Christ (Matt. iv. 6). This is often very trying to the young disciple, and can only be met by seeking a wider knowledge of Divine truth, so as to be able to compare Scripture with Scripture, and to say, "It is written again." Also seek that the Holy Spirit may enlighten and penetrate conscience with his Divine illumination (Rom. ix. 1).

We are often tempted to question our past experience. If Thou be the Son of God. Forty days from now He will be suggesting that all your present blessed experiences were illusory, mere excitement, the influence of numbers. At such a time, meet the suggestion as our Lord did (Deut. viii. 3, 5). Answer, "Even if it were so, and I did not take up a definite position of consecration then, I do it now. I am now standing on resurrection ground, and now filled by the Spirit. It is not simply a memory of the past, but a living experience of the present."

We are also tempted to keep the blessing for ourselves. When we have seen a vision, we must not stay thinking of it too long; for downstairs there is the summons of the world (Acts x. 19). And if we do not obey it, we lose what we had got. Jesus had power to feed the hungry thousands, but He must not make bread for Himself. If you would have, share. If you would increase, give.

We are also tempted to go to extremes. As every hill has its valley, each virtue has its peril. Faith is tempted to throw itself presumptuously from the mountain brow. It is quite right to throw yourself down when God bids, but not otherwise (John vii. 1, 6, 9, 30). The prophet perished because he took his orders at second hand (1 Kings xiii. 18). But though the tempter would get you to cast yourself down, he cannot throw you down. He can only injure you through yourself. And as long as you maintain your position in the holy place of consecration and communion, He cannot touch you.

We are tempted to seek power outside of God. Power is so blessedly useful to do good with that we may well seek it. But we must not take it by a single act of homage to Satan. We must take it only from God (Matt. xxviii. 18). And God will only give it to us when we have obeyed its laws. If you want the help of any natural force, you must obey the laws of its operation, and it was only after Jesus had learned obedience that He was able to bestow the Holy Ghost (Heb. v. 8, 9).

Do not be afraid of Satan. He has been conquered by Him who is now within you. Ask him to repeat through you the victory of the cross and resurrection (1 John iv. 4). Flee to Him, as Abiathar did to David, his raiment bespattered with blood and torn by the briars of the wood, and you will have the same reply (1 Sam. xxii. 23).

Daniel's Continuance.

A fresh and helpful address was given by Rev. H. C. G. Moule on "How to Continue," illustrated by the life of Daniel. As I look at this multitude of Christians, one thought above all possesses me—that we are not here for ourselves, and that we shall go away not for ourselves, unless our gathering has totally failed of its object. We gather here to learn things, or to remind one another of things, out of the Word of God, that are full of personal blessing — the blessing of conviction and humiliation, as well as of peace and joy. Think what magnificent results will follow if indeed we all go away not for ourselves. How many homes, circles, parishes, missions, countries are represented in this tent, God only knows. Shall the Lord Jesus Christ be manifested in and through us in the thousand ways by which we touch the things around us? Shall every home represented here in the highest possible sense be better for our gathering at Keswick; by finding us lowlier, stronger, brighter, more chastened, more patient, more sympathetic, having learned these things at the feet of the Master Himself? And shall we abide there attentive to every little claim, willing, in the smallest things as well as in the great things, to lay ourselves down and to lay ourselves out; and so, without any noise or blowing of trumpets, it shall be known that it is Jesus Christ and not our own poor, unhappy selves that is the secret of the blessing.

That it may be so, we must last. We have been reminded by Mr. Meyer of the deep and dark temptations not to last. It is delightful to be here, and to experience the power, even of human sympathy, but what about the afterwards? Someone has described it as being like the opening of a conservatory door, and letting the east wind blow through it. Yes, it will be, if we let it be, and forget how to continue.

Let us briefly look at this Old Testament saint's long continuance, and see from his example how to continue. "And Daniel continued even unto the first year of Cyrus" (i. 21). Do not leave out the words, "the first year of King Cyrus." Do you know that that means a long time—

SEVENTY YEARS AND MORE?

Remember the circumstances. Who was the man that lasted; and where did he last? He was a captive exile in the absolute power of a most despotic tyrant, who thought nothing of a burning fiery furnace when he was not worshipped, and who thought nothing of destroying the whole body of learned men in his realm, when they could not tell him a dream he had forgotten. These were not easy circumstances in which to last. This captive had been torn from his home when the last agony of Jerusalem had begun, when the Chaldean had come and taken the first instalment captive. He had left Jerusalem, in every sense, tottering to its fall, and was transferred for the rest of his life to Babylon, there to hear of the actual fall of Jerusalem; and with everything imaginable of outward circumstances that could depress and discourage him about the cause of God. Moreover, he had not only to see round about him rampant idolatry and gigantic wickedness, but he was a busy man in the employment of a Pagan Emperor. It was a strange life he was called on to lead these seventy long years. Yet he never made the least motion or attempt to go back to Jerusalem—only keeping his windows open towards it—because it was the will of God He should be in Babylon.

We have all been familiar with the details of the story from childhood. What it must have cost to last all those years, so absolutely unhelped by circumstances. There were no great gatherings there of enlightened, devoted believers. Daniel was torn away from all the signs and symbols of the presence of God which in those days were the only light of their kind upon the earth. How could he live in the most stifling conceivable circumstances and glorify God there? And yet he did last, in submission to the afflictive will of God. We may use the word by anticipation, and say that he took up the cross and all that it involved; and gave a life-long "Amen" to the will of God.

A GRAND SORT OF LAST.

He continued in his duty. When a very old man, with the temptations of Oriental official life for two generations clinging to him, the keenest-sighted enemies that ever looked into a man's life and books, could find no fault in him except in the law of his God. That was a grand sort of last—sailing straight a very long voyage, with an ever-deepening sense of the holiness of the path of duty. He also continued in testimony. I love to think of him as possibly the author of the 119th Psalm; it wonderfully applies to him. Certainly he gave testimony before kings and was not ashamed. Whether it was to Nebuchadnezzar or Belshazzar or Darius, he did not hesitate to confess Him Whose he was and Whom he served. There was also a wonderful beauty in his tone towards others. There is no character in Scripture that more nobly illustrates respectfulness and deference and loyalty—the more than natural courtesy which is to be learned at the feet of God. You never find him asserting himself with loud proclamations of his own righteousness and claims, or showing the faintest sign of contempt for the heathen around him as such. One heathen king after another is not only trusted, but served with respectful, deferential, one might almost say affectionate, loyalty, till that astonishing culmination when "O King, live for ever," comes from the man in the depths of the lions' den. Such a man is a magnificent example of the kind of last which means a steady step-by-step deliverance by the power of God from things around and within.

Then see what a glorious sunset there came to the day; what a port that ship sailed into after its long, straight voyage. We read that God had brought him into tender love with one of the great officers of the court. And toward the end of the book there comes a voice from heaven, "Oh man greatly beloved." What a Presence was round him, and what power he found in it. From one point of view it was no wonder that he lasted. And from one point of view it is no wonder if we last.

Look briefly at what all this has to say for us. I have spoken already of the contrast between our gathering here and our going away to the varied realities of our daily life. Soon we shall be removed from the Christian fellowship and intercourse, and will have to face the work of the home, of the business, of the profession. We shall have in the path of duty to expose ourselves to the little stings, or the great agonies, that come to us in the events of common life; where there will be no hope, or we may say risk, of human notice and applause; and when the victory that God will give us can be known only at first between us and Him. We shall have to stand amid the environment of all the varieties of character that are chosen for us and not by us; of all that is meant by blame, by criticism, by unsympathy—though not always, thank God; immensely far from that.

THE SECRET OF LASTING.

Still these things do come, and the question for us to ask is: Can we last? What a sorrowful thing, not to last. Many of us I daresay read a letter the other day in THE CHRISTIAN, in which a thoughtful writer expressed some surprise that at gatherings like these, in a certain sense every gathering seemed to begin from the beginning. He found there were those who had offered thanks for blessing at the end of one Conference who were almost certain, at the beginning of the next Conference, after the experiences of the year, to speak as if they had to begin again. It ought not to be so, but the fact remains that it often is so. Let us look the matter in the face, and see if we can find out the secret of how to last. As far as one can gather, Daniel's secret stands nobly on the surface. We may sum it all up in this—Daniel by His grace took pains to maintain intercourse with God. Of course he used means. He used prayer, the Word of God, and Christian fellowship. The right use of means is not to be a substitute for the immediate presence and power of God in his people, but channels by which a man may, as it were, draw out of God's fulness. While we hear much here about the blessed rest, we must not forget the word: "Let us therefore labour"—let us be in earnest—to abide in that rest. Thank God for the rest; it is a glorious reality. It is not a phrase, or a term, or an aspiration merely, as to the golden future. It is a present reality, through Him who loved us and dwells in us. Cannot multitudes of us say, "Yes" to that? Let us also seek after that intercourse with God that Daniel preserved; that depth of submission to his will, with a tender, penitent spirit running through it all. Daniel was much more ready to confess, even where he had not sinned, than to think of being sinless. Let us in that spirit of tender penitence have the persuasion that whatever be the circumstances that God has chosen, He can keep us there and supply our every need.

THURSDAY.

TO-DAY there were special railway excursions from some of the towns round about. The day was beautifully bright—a welcome change from Wednesday, when the rain poured pitilessly nearly all day long. As a result of the fresh accession of visitors, the meetings were exceedingly crowded. Late comers to the tent found themselves confronted by a throng that blocked up every entrance.

A great part of the time of the early prayer-meeting was taken up with the reading of the very numerous requests for prayer. A brief address was given by Rev. Colin Campbell, of Weston-super-Mare.

The Bible-reading at 9.45, by Rev. Hubert Brooke, was one of great profit as an exposition of the Christian walk and service, based on the calling of the Levitical order in the Mosaic economy. Notes of the Reading will be given in a future issue. At the close, Mr. Wilson, the chairman, reminded the congregation that the boxes to receive gifts for the expenses of the Convention were at the doors. Mr. Brooke had been speaking in his address of making investments for God. The chairman said they had been told of the security and the dividend; he would add nothing more.

The Baptism of the Spirit.

An immense concourse was gathered in the tent in the evening, with the usual overflow in the Drill Hall. The first address was by Rev. G. C. GRUBB from Zechariah iv. 6. It is not enough, he said, to question God about the baptism of the Holy Ghost; if we are ignorant of it we must be ready to confess. Oh that all ministers, Sunday-school teachers, and Christian workers here would humble themselves to confess this ignorance. When a man has received that baptism you cannot argue him out of it. He will know it just as much as he knows when he was converted. It is a matter of our inmost consciousness. The prophet Zechariah confessed his ignorance to the angel that woke him and talked with him, and then it was said to him, "This is the word of the Lord to Zerubbabel. Not by might (or, as in the Hebrew, not by an army), nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." There is danger in these days of increased interest in missionary work, lest we should think that the work of God will be done by an army of missionaries. My heart almost sank within me on board the Servia, when a young man spoke to me of how glorious it was that 5000 students in America are willing to be missionaries. I could not say whether it was glorious or not. It might be more glorious if fifty were baptized with the Holy Ghost. Oh for an army of baptized men. I pray that all the missionary societies may be saved from an army of unbaptized missionaries. If all are baptized with the Spirit, then one shall chase a thousand, and two shall put ten thousand to flight. The man who has received this baptism knows it.

The first part of Zechariah's vision revealed the secret of power. The second part (11-14) revealed the CHARACTERISTICS OF TRUE TESTIMONY.

How much shorter many of our sermons would be if we only emptied out what God has poured in. Perhaps half an hour's sermon would only be five minutes long; and perhaps one intended to take ten minutes would take three quarters of an hour. When God pours out, people must listen. Hear the interpretation of the two olive trees in Rev. xi. 4. We find there the characteristics of the reception of the baptism of the Holy Ghost: "I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy, clothed in sackcloth." After a man has trusted God for this enduement of the power, the first thing that is manifest is a change in his outward deportment. Alas! the Church of to-day likes to walk in silver slippers; to be clothed in fine linen, and to fare sumptuously every day. The true Church of God in the wilderness ought to be clothed in sackcloth. Another mark of these two witnesses (ver. 5) is that "fire proceedeth out of their mouth." What is the fire? "Is not my Word like fire which burneth the chaff?" The Spirit-baptized soul has a supreme delight in the word of God. Our foes are to be slain, not by logic, or college education, but by the fire of God. Only this will kill the infidelity, the rationalism, the ritualism, and the self-complacency of those who oppose us. Oh for that holy fire. A third characteristic is this, "They have power to shut heaven..and power over waters to turn them to blood." Elijah and Moses had such powers. Oh the power of prayer from a Spirit-baptized man. I remember, at this Convention, four years ago, at the Drill Hall, one of the brethren prayed. Two hundred young men were present, and, though we tried to continue the meeting, no one could speak; all were in tears. We just cried away till we found ourselves in the presence of God, and got the blessing. Another characteristic is that these witnesses torment the world (ver. 10). When you are really baptized how you torment those round about you. They cannot bear it, but you are not able to help it; it comes out before you know what you are doing. Brethren, the next time you find yourself in a drawing-room, be careful how you speak. Perhaps the hardest place in which to witness for Christ is a nineteenth-century drawing-room.

I HAVE FOUND IT AWFULLY HARD.

It needs real momentary faith in God. Of course the world will not like you if you are tormenting them. So you will not be surprised to hear that another mark of the Spirit-baptized man is death. "Their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city which (spiritually) is called Sodom and Egypt." The great danger of Keswick is that it is becoming popular all over the world. True holiness, true crucifixion, true baptism of the Spirit will never be popular, because it means baptism unto death. It was the Church of his day that crucified the Lord of glory. The high priests, properly ordained, and having their priesthood down from Aaron himself, put our Lord to death. And the Church of to-day, in all denominations, will not bear true holiness teaching; they will crucify those who testify to the power of a perfect Saviour.

How are we to get this baptism? It is to be had for the asking. Do you hunger and thirst for it? Then ask for it. They that hunger and thirst for righteousness, says our Lord, shall be filled. He satisfieth the longing soul. God give us now such an awful soul-hunger and soul-thirst that will be satisfied with nothing but the true filling that comes from God. Then you will not be put off with a sentimental or an intellectual blessing. "Ye shall eat the good of the land." In this glorious land there is no scarceness, but rivers of water, and bread to the full. Do not stagger at the promise of God. There is a fulness of blessing that is unspeakable. Do not let the devil balk you of it. You must be in downright earnest. Here Mr. Grubb told of a young man in a town in New Zealand whose earnestness to get the blessing was remarkable. Mr. Grubb spoke with him at the close of a meeting, and they prayed together, but he did not seem to get rest. A few days after, his uncle came to Mr. Grubb with tears rolling down his face, and said the young man had written a letter to say he was going away fifty miles into the jungle to be filled with the Holy Ghost. The uncle feared that his mind was a little affected. Mr. Grubb replied that, instead of that, the young man had never been more in his senses in his life. For five days that young man remained alone with God in the jungle, and when he came back his mouth was filled with praise. His captivity was at an end. Since then he has offered himself for missionary work.

Paul and the Second Advent.

The Coming of the Blessed Master was the theme of an address by Rev. C. A. Fox. To some it seemed outside Keswick lines; others found it very profitable:—We are now in the dispensation of the Spirit, between the coming of Christ in humiliation and his coming again in glory. He has had many comings. He came to Eden to two guilty souls. He came in majestic power to Moses at Sinai. If we resort to some solitary place, seeking to meet Him, and conferring not with flesh and blood, He will reveal Himself to us. He came at Calvary to a lost world, and was alone in his death. Then did the corn of wheat fall into the ground and die; now in these Keswick days we are seeing samples of the fruit. He came again at Pentecost to a few waiting, fearing, wondering disciples, and the place was filled with the Holy Ghost. I believe in the filling of the Holy Ghost, both for places and for people. Some say: Why come to Keswick? If the Holy Ghost is here, why not come?

Let us look at the Advent Epistles. The Epistles of Paul to the Thessalonians were the first written, yet the Second Coming of Christ was deemed of such importance that he puts it at the close of every chapter. In chap. i. of the first Epistle, he speaks of them as being saved "to wait for his Son from heaven." The "Keswick blessing" would come to us all at our conversion, but for unbelief. This doctrine of the Second Coming was brought home at once to the young converts in Thessalonica.

In chap. ii. you see what this Coming is to soul-winners: "Are not ye our crown of rejoicing, in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming?" See to it that you have in that day some jewels dug out of the mire or the mine; in some way redeemed, so that in the day when Christ makes up his jewels some of them may be yours. Many here have been out in the far-off fields, and it is hard work, but they have a boundless reward. Let nothing hinder you from being a winner of souls. Even the children can help to let down the net into the sea. Begin at once. A Frenchman said to a lady in a drawing-room: "Is the Lord your Saviour, and are you rejoicing in Him?" "I don't think that is a fair question." A little while after she asked how she was to come to Christ. "Oh, just as you are!" The lady sat down and wrote the hymn—

Just as I am, without one plea,
But that thy blood was shed for me,
And that Thou bidst me come to Thee,
O Lamb of God, I come.

In the end of chap. iii. we see what the Coming of Christ is to the Church collectively. Unity, brotherhood, and charity one toward another depend on our recognition of the Coming of Christ and the coming of the Holy Ghost. "Christians, love one another." My soul is tired with the

that we find between saints, at home and abroad. The Apostle Paul had to write it down that he spent part of his time in beseeching two lady workers (Euodias and Syntyche) to be of one mind. "But she has wronged me." "Well, you take the lowest place, and let her go lower still; and you will both be covered by the blood, and will never be heard of again, either of you."

At the close of chap. iv. we read that "We which are alive and remain unto the Coming of the Lord shall not go before them that are asleep." This affects the Church in the unseen world. So we find that three worlds await his Coming—heaven, earth, and Hades. All the worlds are waiting for his return. I do love to think of those loved ones who are gone before. They have seen the Lord, and they shall come back with Him. "We shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air." I believe every word of this. What will the prince of the air think then, when another and greater Prince is there? He will be cast down. The time is short; let us be in earnest. There are many signs of our Master's speedy Coming. False doctrines on every hand; from spiritualism and Princeism to that blasphemous teaching about the feminine god—the woman clothed with the sun.

What connection has this Coming with the Keswick doctrine? "The very God of peace sanctify you wholly." "Preserved blameless unto the Coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." We Christians who are anxious to be true, stand between the God of peace and the God of faithfulness. People say holiness teaching exalts man; if it does, the Bible does not teach us so. "Sanctify you wholly." Surely there ought to have been a revised version of this. Sad to relate, it stands in its awful naked reality, and Divine dignity. "It is too much," you say. "Faithful is He that calleth you, and He also will do it." May he do it now, and may the evil spirit be cast out, so that the person of Christ be enthroned in our poor hearts.

Turn to the second Epistle and you find that in each chapter of it also there is the mention of the blessed Coming of our Lord. Chap. i.: "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his holy angels." Let us give the angels their due honour. They have had a part in all this marvellous redemption. This chapter speaks of the persecuting world and its judgment. Persecution is the providence of the Church. "Simon, behold, Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat." Think of Satan being put to sift God's servant. I believe the world would persecute believers again. I believe for our adherence to the simple Gospel. "Taking vengeance on them that know not God." Here is wrath to the enemy, but rest to the saints of God. This is the final outcome of persecution.

WE MAY HAVE TO GO TO THE STAKE

In chap. ii. we have a further aspect of the marvellous Second Coming. "There shall be a falling away first." Has it not come? The Man of Sorrows and the man of sin shall meet. They met in the wilderness of temptation, and they shall meet again. We know which of them shall conquer. "That Wicked"—with a big initial G. Some would-be philosophers are now printing books with a little "g" for God. It is mean, wicked spite, to say nothing more. One would not care to belong to such company as that. This man of sin is coming—perhaps has partly come. I am sure a part of his luggage has come. "With all power, and signs, and lying wonders, and all deceivableness of unrightousness in them that perish." An awful picture; but it is one of God's own painting.

In the last chapter we read "The Lord direct (or make a channel in) your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ." Oh for this patience in common home life—the kind word, the shake of the hand. Oh for more of the gentle, simple, humanities and courtesies of life. Let all be done to the glory of God.

AFTER-MEETING.

These occasions for the pulling in of the net, and for the taking of an open stand on the side of God and a consecrated life, grow more and more solemn as the days pass and the opportunities become fewer. On Thursday evening Rev. E. H. Hopkins gave some words of instruction to the young believer:—Consecration and faith are the two feet on which we walk. Do not wait for feeling or realisation. The true order is fact, faith, feeling. Here is a Divine fact: "My grace is sufficient for thee." Rest on that, and thank God, though there be no feeling. There are the Divine "I have," "I am," "I will"—for past, present, and future. Step out on the promises of God's grace and strength. Surrender and trust—that is the life of faith, and it does not begin till the act of committal takes place. His promises reach out into the future; therefore be not afraid. If there has never been a definite full surrender to the Master, let it be done to-night. Let yourselves go, and let the Lord do with you what He likes. If others have made fresh discoveries of God's power and will for them, let them testify to it now. As the hymn was being softly sung—

My life is thine, Lord Jesus,
Bought with thy blood Divine;
And given to Thee with gladness,
No longer mine, but thine,

the invitation was specifically given to rise as an indication of full surrender to God. There were a good many responses, and, after a second opportunity was given, others joined them in standing before God and man in token of a desire and determination to be all for Him. The abounding grace of God for every need in life and service, was gently set forth, and the soft hymn-singing was continued, to give another chance to waverers or hesitating ones. Finally, a great company stood. Then a praising prayer was offered by Mr. Hopkins, and the hushed assembly was dismissed into the cool and quiet night.

MR. GRUBB ON HIS MISSION TOUR.

The missionary meeting on Saturday forenoon was held amidst a steady downpour of rain. That did not, however, prevent a very large attendance of the friends of missions, nearly all of whom sat out the three hours or more over which the proceedings extended. The occasion was one of supreme interest and importance; these missionary reunions at Keswick become more and more so every year. We may honestly say that for practical and far-reaching worth this was equal to any of the meetings of the entire week. One chief point of universal interest was the anticipated addresses of Mr. Grubb and his companions. This week we give Mr. Grubb's address only, deferring to our next issue, for reasons of space, our notes of the rest of the proceedings.

THE KESWICK MISSION.

Mr. Grubb said: First of all let me make a business statement. I received last year from private friends, apart from the Keswick fund, £290 18s. 8d. I have spent every penny of that, besides £40 furnished from the Fund towards my companions' expenses—in all £330 18s. 8d. There is nothing over; but there is nothing owing.

When we arrived in Ceylon we were met by our good Church Missionary friends, Mr. Higgins and Mr. Wood and some others. Here I must give one great general thanksgiving to the missionaries of the Church Missionary Society for their kindness and fraternal fellowship. It was indeed a great joy, after a long day's journey to go into the happy home of the missionary, and to get what I may call a good Irish handshake, whether they were English, Irish, Scotch, Welsh, or American. I need scarcely say that about seven-eighths of our work was in connection with missionaries of the Church Missionary Society; though I also preached in Presbyterian and Methodist Churches.

At Mr. Barton's invitation we passed from Ceylon to Tinnivelly, and held missions at Palamcotta and other places. I may give one instance of

THE LORD'S LEADING IN TRAVELLING.

When we arrived at Tuticorin we drove up to the railway station to find that the train had left one minute before. We praised the Lord that we were late for the train, and concluded that He meant us to do something at Tuticorin, though we had not intended to stop there. We should be a day late for Mr. Barton, but we knew he had faith enough to leave us in the Lord's hands; so we prepared ourselves to see what He meant us to do. We went and called on a gentleman whose name had been mentioned to me, and I was astonished to get from him such a warm reception, as he had never seen me before. He showed me a telegram he had received from a friend in Colombo, to this effect:—

Rev. George Grubb, a servant of God, goes to Tuticorin by to-day's steamer. Receive him and be kind to him.

We found there were some in that house to whom the Lord was to give us a message. There was an old Indian general there, and as Mr. Campbell spoke to him of the love of God, the tears stood in his eyes. I trust the dear old man has heard something for eternity. There were two young girls waiting for the steamer; they were Protestant girls, but they had been put by their parents into a Roman Catholic convent for their education. I found that there is a great deal of this kind of thing in India. The consequence was that one of these girls had already joined the Roman Catholic Church. As God has given to me some slight knowledge of the deep, dark, and

SATANIC MYSTERIES OF ROMANISM,

I began to speak to her. I asked what she had found, and she could not tell me she had found anything. I told her what Jesus was to me, and what I had found in Him, and she looked exceeding sorrowful. They left next day, and I do not know how far our words took effect, but God gave us a message to deliver to them. The dear friend with whom we stayed rejoiced before the evening of the day with exceeding great joy.

The work began at once in Palamcotta. All the other missionaries were gathered together. They are indeed walking and living and abiding in God, and I look back with joy to our fellowship with them in the work. Mr. Barton had brought together the native pastors and catechists, and some of them testified that they had received the knowledge of forgiveness and assurance of salvation; others testified to the reception of the fulness of the Holy Ghost. It has certainly been a reality with some, for one of the pastors has written to me to say that when he went home he preached to his people what he had heard, and exactly the same things took place in his congregation as at Palamcotta. He said he could scarcely speak to the people, and began to cry; but it was the best sermon he ever preached in his life. A revival has sprung up there.

Then we went to Mengnanapuram, where Mrs. Thomas has lived and laboured for fifty years on those sandy plains. She and her daughter and others are now at work there. There is a church and congregation of at least 2000 Christians; and mission schools. I do thank God for these mission schools. From five o'clock in the morning to eleven o'clock at night, Mr. Millard, Mr. Richardson, and Mr. Campbell, with David, the catechist, were engaged in dealing with the dear children. I may mention one instance of

CHILD-LIKE FAITH.

There was in the congregation there a lad about 17 or 18. He had been the best palmyra-tree climber in the neighbourhood. In boyish frolic he had climbed up on a heathen idol and made fun of it. The heathen priests cursed him. Not long after, he had a stroke of paralysis and became deaf and dumb. Of course the priests said it was an instance of the power of their God; the Christian's God could do nothing like that. The children brought this lad to me one afternoon and they said: "Could not Jesus cure this boy of paralysis and of his deafness and dumbness?" "Certainly," said I, "if we will believe. Let us go into the house and kneel down and believingly pray the Lord, for his glory's sake, to show that He is stronger than a filthy heathen idol." These four lads and the four of us knelt around the paralytic lad. We cried to God that the boy should be delivered, and would take no refusal. Then the strange certainty—those who know it will understand what I mean—that we were heard, came upon our souls. I rose and opened a Tamil Bible and asked the boy to read some verses. He read five verses from Luke xiv. with perfect distinctness. I do not know what you will say about it, but I am telling you facts. I do not seek to explain them. I have no theory about miracles. I only know my Jesus has not changed during the last 1900 years.

God made use of this incident to the conviction and blessing of a native pastor. He had said before we arrived that he had been preaching for many years; and did these people think that they could do anything in twelve days? David the Catechist took the lad, and said, "Do you know that boy?" "Yes, he is deaf and dumb." "How, then, does he now speak?" The pastor was silent, and then said, "It is the hand of God." And he gave himself right up to the Lord.

AN ALL-DAY MEETING

Bishop Caldwell, of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, asked me to go to his place, Edeyengoody, which means, "the habitation of the shepherd." We went there, and the meeting lasted from nine o'clock in the morning till half-past ten at night, without a single intermission. When one of us finished another began to speak, and there were relays of people all the time. I also conducted an open-air meeting under a tree, and there two men testified to having found deliverance from delusions about the Second Advent. They had believed some prediction that the Lord would come in 1885; when He did not come they lost all faith in their Bibles, and of course had lost all joy in their souls. We showed to them that they had gone on wrong premisses, and had therefore come to a wrong conclusion. Now they saw the truth of the Word of God—that Jesus is coming, but has authorised no one to be the advertiser of the date of his Advent. These men testified that they had been restored to peace and joy in Jesus Christ. Several also of the native pastors received the fulness of blessing in their souls. I shall never forget the affectionate farewells of these men.

After that we had an invitation from the Bishop of Nelson, New Zealand. We packed up and off we went. I am a great adept at packing portmanteaux now, for we were on fourteen steamers, and we have got to know pretty well what a steamer is like. We touched for a week at Melbourne, and were met there by Mr. Macartney.

"MR. KESWICK."

Before we had left the ship I heard a voice saying: "There's Mr. Grubb." I looked, but I did not know the speaker. "Who are you?" said I. "Keswick," said he. Praise the Lord for Keswick. I shook hands with the brother; to this day I do not know his name, but praise the Lord for "Mr. Keswick." The very first minute we reached Australia the Keswick Convention met us!

We spoke about six times during our stay, and met several Australian saints. Thank God, some of those whom we met were real, good, hot ones. The result of that visit has been that dear Bishop Goe, the Dean of Melbourne, and the Archdeacon have asked me to go there next year for a six or seven months' mission. The Lord has not made it plain yet that I should go; I want the clearest possible guidance.

We went on straight to New Zealand, and were received with open arms by Bishop Suter. We had a mission at Nelson, first in the Cathedral, and then in All Saints' Church. At the close of the mission we had a thanksgiving service in the Cathedral. A great many attended the communion. The Bishop had invited all denominations, and told the people that as some of them might have conscientious difficulties about receiving the communion according to the usage of the Church of England, he would distribute the elements, after the Presbyterian fashion, in the pews. Of course this made the service much shorter. At the close of the service the Bishop said: "I trust that all of us who are alive and here this day twelvemonths will meet in this Cathedral, and give thanks to the Lord for the blessings He has given to us these last few days." The theological students whom he is training received fulness of blessing. These dear fellows said: "We did not know before that such happiness was to be found on earth."

We went on to various places in the Nelson diocese; notably Westport, which is in a mining district. It is a place of 2300 inhabitants. I said to the clergyman, an Irishman, "I want to take the skating rink, for the church won't be big enough." He thought we had great expectations. I informed him that I had; for my Lord was able to do a great work, and I expected the rink would be full. It holds 1200, and there are a little over 2000 in the town. We seated the rink, and it was crowded out. Among those who attended were 200 or 300 Roman Catholics. When they heard that I was not specially attacking any denomination, and when they heard also that I came from County Tipperary, they thought they would like to see a Tipperary man seventy-six inches tall. So they came, largely out of curiosity, but the Lord turned this into an opportunity for them to see Jesus. Some of them came up afterwards, and most heartily thanked us for the message.

Then at Blenheim we were received by those saints of God, Rev. Thomas Grace and Rev. Arthur Grace, men who are living in the fulness of the Holy Ghost. Our New Zealand Mission was in a great measure owing to Mr. Thomas Grace. He wrote to a friend asking if anyone could go. This friend wrote to me, and I said I did not know anybody except myself; I was willing to go if the Lord should point the way. He did point the way, and this was the result. At Blenheim there is the great central telegraphic office of New Zealand. There are from fifty to seventy young men employed, and many of them are deeply tinged with the prevalent freethought of the colonies. They came regularly to the services and, thank God, some got a full deliverance from these baneful thoughts, and are now rejoicing in the knowledge of God. At a missionary meeting we held fully thirty stood up as signifying that they would seek guidance from the Lord as to whether they would labour for God in the colonies, or in China, India, or Africa. At Nelson also, I may say, forty rose and yielded themselves for missionary work. After all, the shortest way to the heathen is through the consecrated Christians.

PRAISE GOD FOR "FOUR DEVILS."

We also visited Napier, to which we were invited by Bishop Stuart, an uncle of Rev. E. A. Stuart, of Holloway. I held a mission in the Cathedral there. It was filled from end to end, and it is the largest place of public worship in New Zealand. God poured out his Spirit mightily. One sign was this—we could scarcely stop the services. After we had pronounced the benediction the young men determined to continue the service, and they went into the adjoining garden. They got down on the gravel on their knees, and cried to God. There was a printing office hard by, and the prayers entered in at the windows. The compositors were greatly astonished to hear loud voices in holy wrestling with God. They listened to the prayers, and there was a notice of it in the paper next day—how some young men had held such a strange thing as a prayer-meeting!

A day or two after these events, the Bishop and these young men came to see us off. Before the train started the Bishop said, "Let us pray," and we all fell on our knees on the railway platform. No wonder all the heads were out of the carriage windows in a moment. The Bishop gave us his fatherly benediction, and we went on our way rejoicing. At one station where we stopped we heard a man remark to another, "Do not go into that carriage; there are four devils in there! They had a prayer-meeting on the platform." So praise God for "four devils."

"WHY ARE WE HERE?"

One result of the mission at Napier has been that from twenty-five to thirty-five offered themselves for Missionary work abroad; one of them was the Bishop's niece. I was walking up a hill one day with two young men and trying to tell them of Wilmot Brooke's work in Africa, and the needs of the Congo, the Soudan, China, &c. Suddenly one of them burst out into a bitter wail of agony. The tears poured down his face and he was just able to say, "Oh, why are we here?" I pass on to you to-day these four words of that young man: "Why are we here?" What is to be the result of this Keswick Convention? How many vacant places will there be here next year, because you shall have been called by God to serve Him in the uttermost parts of the earth? May that young man's question ring in your ears, until you give an answer to it. "Why am I here?" May I say, in Scriptural terms, "What doest thou here, Elijah?" God write his own message on our souls and lead us in the path that He shall choose, to the glory of his well-beloved Son who has bled and died for us.

CONVENTION NOTES.

None of the utterances were more helpful than the three Bible-readings by Rev. Hubert Brooke, the first of which is summarised in our present issue; the other two will follow.

Deserving of notice was the invitation by the vicar of St. John's, Rev. Mr. Hoare, to all the ministers present, to the communion on Thursday morning in that church, and which about 300 accepted. The Congregational Chapel was packed at a similar service on Sunday evening by a multitude who accompanied Rev. F. B. Meyer and Rev. Mr. Clumpha (the minister) from the tent. Might there not be a general communion in the tent as at Mildmay?

The preachers' meetings in the Drill Hall were attended by a large number of pastors, teachers, and evangelists. At one of them Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe made interesting reference to his having met Sir S. A. Blackwood at a northern watering place, at the time of the Oxford Conference, and having his attention drawn to the teaching there. It came to him like a revelation, though it was the old Apostolic Gospel, and gave a new and mighty impetus to his life and ministry. Long after this he had had a conversation of over two hours with a leading teacher on sanctification. At the close his friend said: "I am disappointed; I thought we were nearer together than we are." He replied, "No, we are far apart; and this is the difference—you look for a perfect sinner; I look to a perfect Saviour."

Meetings for young men were also held in the Drill Hall, at one of which Dr. White spoke very timely words on daily living—rising early, eating and drinking, reading, business, recreation, &c. This brief practical address was not the least valuable, even when compared with the utterances to the great congregation.

The resident population was not forgotten: open-air preaching took place at night as often as the weather permitted. Several brethren took part, among whom was Mr. Henry Thorne; but the lion's share fell to the old warrior, Richard Weaver, who spoke with his ancient fire, and received many a thankful "God bless you," and warm hand-grip from many out of England, Ireland Scotland, who owned him as their father in the Gospel.

More than one reference was made to the errors and impostures that abound; and special prayer was made for one referred to in The Christian, who had attached himself to an erratic teacher, to the great sorrow of his family.

Rev. W. H. Rayburn and his devotees assembled twice or more each day, when, after having addressed them, the "bishop" invited "testimonies," and calmly and complacently listened to encomiums of himself as a "teaching priest," and other adulatory epithets.

We are informed that we were in error in stating, in our last number, that Rev. Barclay F. Buxton is a son of Mr. Sydney Buxton. He is the son of Mr. T. Fowell Buxton, of Easteye, Herts.

Rev. G. C. Grubb starts on Friday (this day) on his mission to the Cape. We are sure the prayers of many will accompany him.

ITINERANT EVANGELISTS.

A correspondent sends us the following hints to itinerant evangelists:—

(1) Do not hastily judge of the spiritual state of a district from the indifference or shyness of individual cases met on the road.

(2) Do not be surprised if, being a stranger, those to whom you speak are unwilling to make you their confidant.

(3) Do not misjudge them because they express themselves in their own way.

(4) Do not regard them as not Christian because they hesitate to say they are saved.

(5) Do not feel hurt if, appearing as a stranger at a good man's door, he receives you with reasonable caution.

(6) Assure yourself that there are no earnest workers in the field before reporting the need of them.

(7) Do not hastily report a district to be neglected or in darkness where inquiry would show that good men had been working with considerable blessing for many years.

(8) Do not expect to reap a harvest without toil, or, if your word is blessed, remember that perhaps other men have laboured, and you "have entered into their labour."

(9) Rather strengthen existing missions than introduce others.

HELP THE YOUNG MEN.

Sir,—At a time when the welfare of young men—spiritually, socially, and intellectually—is receiving so much attention from Christian people, may I venture to bring to the notice of your readers a few of the features of the work of the Church of England Young Men's Society? It is a very sad fact that in the City of London tens of thousands of young men are practically homeless. They leave the safety and comfort of country homes, and are "pitchforked" into a huge city, often without a friend or helper to cheer or guide them. Temptation dogs their footsteps. Vice meets them at every street corner, and they are in imminent danger of moral shipwreck. So long as they are at work but little harm can come to them. The dangerous time commences with the evening's leisure. Then it is that they are likely to vary the monotony of city life by plunging into pleasures that deaden the conscience, degrade the character, and ruin every prospect of a successful and honourable career.

Under these circumstances what an urgent need there is for such work as that of our Society! Its bright and attractive rooms in the very heart of the City form a veritable "city of refuge" to young men. There they can read ennobling books, or listen to instructive lectures, or play innocent games amid safe surroundings. There they may indulge in the healthy exercise of a well-equipped gymnasium, or practise public speaking in a successful debating society. There, above all, they find sympathy, a cordial welcome, and a genuine home, and it is not too much to say that the Church of England Young Men's Society has been the social salvation of an immense number of young men. Nor does it stop there. It also gives men the advantage of mental culture, and the unspeakable blessing of spiritual enlightenment. Surely such a work as this must commend itself to every true Christian heart. And yet this Society is in urgent need of practical help. The Council is now appealing for £1000, of which the sum of £350 has already been forthcoming. I sincerely hope that the Council will be enabled to go forward in its work of helping and saving young men.

A worker writes: Though in the middle of summer, and so many counter attractions, the Lord is graciously sending in numbers of people, including many strangers, every Sunday night, to our united evangelistic meeting. A faithful Gospel appeal or short testimonies are always given by members and Christian friends, and occasionally visitors help to make the meeting profitable. On a recent Sunday two striking testimonies, which excited deep interest, were given by a Christian gentleman and a sailor from a private yacht. The latter, especially, with the simple power of the Gospel united a grace of delivery and elegance of language that were refreshing to all present.

This meeting is usually crowded to inconvenience, being held in a small meeting-room in the Association house. The new lecture hall will seat 130 people, and building is about to commence. We yet want £20 or £30, to seat and fit the hall when it is up. Our Friday meeting, too, keeps up wonderfully during summer. Bright singing of Mr. Sankey's new hymns precedes both these services.

Our open-air mission was unable to start this summer, owing to the want of an enclosed space to carry it on. It was deemed advisable not to go out again to a public place where no rights could be observed on either side, and in the face of such a determined opposition as was met with last year. Will your readers pray with us for the conviction and regeneration of the thousands of Roman Catholics who predominate in the population of this town?

A most interesting missionary meeting, in connection with our Y.M.C.A. Missionary Union, was held lately, when Rev. James Ervine, vice-president, the Congregational minister of Kingstown, gave a splendid address on "The Red Indian Tribes" of North America. There was a collection for Dr. Guinness' Training College at the close.

Personalia.

Rev. Thomas Spurgeon entered upon his work as special evangelist in connection with the Baptist Union of New Zealand, at Invercargill, on June 8.

Mr. D. C. Joseph, of the Evangelistic Mission to Israel, hopes to start on his return to Jerusalem on August 9. His health has been restored during his recent stay in Great Britain.

Pastor Archibald Brown has declined the call which he lately received from a Baptist Church in Australia. "At present," he says, "I feel bound too tightly with the cords of love to leave my happy flock in East London."

M. de Pressensé, the celebrated French pastor and senator, has undergone another surgical operation, in the hope of recovering his voice, of which he has for some time been deprived, through an affection of the respiratory organs.

Rev. Dr. Lunn, who has been working in association with Revs. Mark Guy Pearse and Hugh Price Hughes, in connection with the West London Wesleyan Mission, has been appointed chaplain to the Young Men's Polytechnic Institute, in Regent-street.

Rev. A. J. Diaz, who has been carrying on an important evangelical work in Cuba as a Baptist missionary, has been arrested and imprisoned. His case has been presented to the State Department as that of an American citizen who is a victim of religious persecution.

Rev. Dr. Doudney.—The presentation of the testimonial to Dr. Doudney, on the completion of his jubilee as editor of The Gospel Magazine, will be made at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, on Wednesday, August 20, at 5 p.m. Alderman Sir Andrew Lusk, Bart., will preside.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse will probably leave England for Australia in January next. His intention is to spend about six weeks in Australia, and also to visit Tasmania and New Zealand. He wishes to visit the large centres of population, and to conduct services, and lecture on behalf of local interests and his Mission in West London.

Rev. G. C. Needham.—We regret to learn that this well-known worker has been laid aside for a short time. A ruptured blood-vessel in the leg held him prisoner in his room during the Niagara Bible Conference, which he looked forward to attending with an ardour natural to be found in one who was among its original promoters.

Rev. Dr. Moulton was elected President of the Wesleyan Conference, which commenced its yearly sitting on Tuesday last week, at Bristol. Dr. Moulton joined the Wesleyan ministry in 1858, and is widely known as principal of the Leys School at Cambridge. He is a highly accomplished Greek scholar, and was a member of the New Testament Revision Committee.

Mr. Spurgeon, in a recent letter to Rev. Dr. Wayland, of Philadelphia, wrote:—"Though not in pleasurable health, I am alive and working on, God is giving me many converts—almost more than I can see at once when they come to join the church—69 in the month of May. Mrs. Spurgeon does not improve; but, on the whole, the declining of her health is far more gradual than we feared. She is happy and useful."

Mrs. Amanda Smith.—Mrs. Davies, of St. Margaret's, Foxrock, co. Dublin, writes:—"Mrs. Amanda Smith has been our guest since July 18; but intends leaving us on the 30th inst., en route for her native land. She has not been able to appear much in public, although pressed to address a few small meetings. She is troubled with rheumatism and a chronic cough, the result of run-down health. Not being connected with any missionary society, she is dependent on her friends for support, as well for herself as for two native children she has adopted. She has not spared herself, and has left a good name behind her everywhere."

RELIGIOUS OPPRESSION IN RUSSIA.—A telegram from St. Petersburg says that the Minister of the Interior has directed the local authorities to prevent foreign missionaries in Russia from carrying on religious propaganda, as is done at present among the Jews in Poland, to the detriment of the exclusive right of propaganda possessed by the Orthodox Greek Church.

Redcoats in Canada.

BY MISS C. R. STOCK.

IT is a glorious summer evening. We are crossing a wide meadow, with a wealth of elastic cool grass under our feet. Behind us the sun is slowly sinking in the west, giving promise of a magnificent sunset. Before us the land slopes down to the peaceful little river, and rises again beyond to where lies the town of Stratford, Ontario, apparently from this point of view embosomed in maple trees.

All around us are numbers of white tents, the resting-places of the two thousand soldiers who are camped out for their annual ten days' drill. Our good minister, Mr. Macdonald, has had it laid on his heart to do something for the spiritual welfare of these two thousand, brought from all parts for a few days to our very doors. With the help of a few members of the Y.M.C.A. and two or three ladies of the congregation, he has obtained two tents. One is for the sale at nominal prices of cooling lemonade or hot coffee, as the weather may indicate. The other is fitted up as a reading-room, with good books, the daily papers, pens, ink, and paper ad libitum, where the soldiers may retire and read and write their letters home. Both tents are hung round with pictures and bright-coloured text-cards, and outside hangs the notice stencilled in large letters on white linen, "Letters mailed, postage stamps sold."

The young man in charge of the reading-tent is one of our own former boys, gentle in manner, devoted to his work, and, above all, anxious to win some of these young thoughtless red-coats for the Lord. Before the year comes to its close, he hopes to be in far-off China, learning the language, and preparing for work among the benighted heathen. The refreshment tent is presided over by two devoted ladies from the city, who, regardless of fatigue and exposure to the hot sun by day, are spending almost all their time there, from seven o'clock in the morning till past ten at night, giving away choice Gospel booklets, and speaking a word in season, as they find opportunity.

Arriving at these tents, we notice a good-sized wooden platform, around which are ranged a number of benches from the class-rooms of the Baptist Chapel. A few soldiers and visitors are seated there, resting after the heat of the day. As we open up our folding harmonium on the platform, and our newly arrived party of boys and girls from the Old Country commence singing their beautiful hymns, more people begin to gather round, and a good congregation is formed. Hymn-books are distributed, and hymn after hymn is sung, in which many of the soldiers join most heartily. After prayer, offered by Mr. E. Merry, and a portion of Scripture read, Mr. Merry and Mr. Macdonald give short, pointed addresses, telling out the joyful news of full, free, and immediate salvation in the Lord Jesus Christ, till deepening twilight, so short in this country, warns us that nine o'clock is near, and that it is time to draw our service to a close.

Every evening meetings are carried on, an additional service or prayer-meeting being held occasionally at midday. After the morning drill is over on Sunday morning, many of the soldiers are to be seen worshipping in the various churches of the city, but two most delightful meetings are held from the little platform, at which there is a large attendance. In the afternoon a prolonged service from 3 to 5.30, at which numbers of visitors, besides the soldiers, occupy seats or stand around, while a dozen or more buggies filled with farmers and their families make a good background to this interesting picture. At 8.30 p.m., as the various churches in the city are closed, every bench is filled with lines of redcoats. Some time after the darkness of night has settled down on the camp, and when only the front row of faces can be distinguished from the platform, the friendly light from the lantern on the organ gleams out, and hymn after hymn is sung, while Mr. E. Merry and our young friend soon proceeding to China, again give beautiful testimonies to the saving and keeping power of our Lord and Saviour, and the men are once more entreated to close with the offers of mercy.

Some of the meetings are almost entirely given up to testimonies from the soldiers and others; the experience told out and the earnest exhortation given boldly before their comrades are deeply interesting. To-night it was touching to see one of our own boys, "F. T.," stand up and tell how he was saved. "Five years ago, when I was in Miss Macpherson's Home in England, I went to a meeting and heard an address on 'Behold I stand at the door and knock.' I began to think how often the Lord Jesus had knocked at the door of my heart and I had never let Him in. I felt very miserable, and the burden of sin became very great, for I knew what a bad boy I had been all my life. When I went home the first thing I noticed was a large text hanging up, with the very same words, 'Behold I stand at the door and knock.' I went up stairs with the other boys to the dormitory, but I could not go to bed. I sat down and wept. One of the little fellows came so kindly to me, and asked me what was the matter, and whether he could do anything for me. I replied roughly, and told him to go to his bed. He came a second time, and again I repulsed him. Then he went off and fetched one of the ladies, and she, with much tenderness, pointed me to the Saviour. That night I accepted the Lord Jesus Christ, and I have had great joy and peace since. There is mock joy in the world, but in serving the Lord there is real true joy, and I experience it." He closes with earnest, tender pleading for all to come to Christ at once.

Stratford, Ontario, June 25.

COUNT CAMPELLO'S WORK.

AT a meeting held in the French Chamber, St. James's Hall, on Thursday last, a very cheering account was given of the interesting work of Count Campello in Italy. Canon MONEY presided, and the audience heard with joy of the success of heroic endeavour to disseminate the Reformed faith in a country which, of all others, has suffered from Papal error and despotism. The work is developing in an encouraging degree, and the outlook is full of promise. The first church building is nearly finished, and young men are being trained to carry the Gospel into regions where the people are veritably thirsting for the Word of Life. The people say, "Send us a teacher; we will all be learners. Our priests are ignorant, and can tell us nothing about religion." There are many open doors, and young men waiting to be sent forth.

Having given an abstract of the annual report, Rev. SYDENHAM DIXON, Deputation Secretary, announced that the Count had been very cordially received by the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Bishop of London; and that his visit to England, now drawing to a close, has been very helpful in various ways. The CHAIRMAN rejoiced that Italy is now free and open to the Gospel. He referred to the severe persecution to which the Count has been subjected, pointing out that in Rome the Papal Church wears a face totally different from that shown in England. Friends in England are privileged to encourage him in his labour of love. God has clearly raised him up for a great work, and, while England shows a general interest in Italian affairs, it is but fitting that English Christians should specially sympathise with efforts for the spiritual enlightenment and liberty of the people. Rev. F. A. C. LILLINGSTON bespoke the ardent co-operation of Protestants. One of the best means whereby we can keep alive our testimony at home against error and for the pure Gospel is by helping on work in some other country.

Count CAMPELLO delivered an eloquent address in his own language, an English résumé of his remarks, for the benefit of those unacquainted with Italian, being given by a lady present. The Count is a man in middle life; he looks well and strong, although he suffers more or less constantly from a bronchial affection. He wears a beard; his tonsure has long since disappeared; for years prior to leaving the Church of Rome he told his superiors that "they might mark their cattle in that way, but he would never submit to the indignity." He rejoiced at the reception accorded him during his stay in England, in the course of which he had addressed eleven meetings. He did not leave the Church of Rome for any worldly advantage. He saw Italy suffering from want of the Word of God, and so, ten years ago, he came out, and had since done his utmost in favour of the Reformed faith. Recoiling from Romanism, Italy is drifting into atheism. To make known the Gospel in its purity is his aim and object, and therein he asked for British help. The Protestant nations, he said, are at the head of Christendom, prosperity and freedom dating from the Reformation. The address was full of warmth and energy, and engaged the interest of the audience to the end.

WAITING.

WAITING, waiting, waiting: Lord, I look to Thee
For the Spirit's fulness—glorious liberty!
From the chains of self-life, from the power of sin,
I am waiting humbly in the depths within.

Waiting, waiting, waiting: Lord, I silent stand;
All my heart is thirsty, like a desert land;
Let the living waters, in a mighty shower,
Come upon my spirit with their quickening power.

Waiting, waiting, waiting: Master, this is all,
All I dare endeavour, since I heard thy call;
Of myself despairing, broken, contrite, see!
I am looking only, blessed Lord, to Thee.

Ah, the weary sorrow in the days that were;
Ah, the lonely wrestlings in those nights of prayer;
Still I looked about me: helper there was none;
Still I looked within me: every hope was gone.

How I mourned and fretted, full of bitterness!
Often clamouring loudly in my sad distress;
But no single answer from the silent sky
Came unto my spirit in its agony.

Then I thought within me: I will cease the strife,
I will cease to wrestle for a larger life,
Cease from every effort, and in silence wait,
Like a lonely watcher, at the palace gate.

So I'm only waiting, waiting at the cross,
Minding not the tempests which my spirit toss,
Minding not the heart-ache and the void within,
And the conscious risings of unconscious sin.

So I'm waiting lonely, in the pitchy night,
Till the Bridegroom cometh, making all things bright;
Now and then afar-off sounds my spirit greet,
As of coming footsteps, and of music sweet.

Oft the light is feeble, and the oil runs low;
But, from unseen sources, comes an overflow.
Oft deep sleep oppresses, seals my eyelids close;
But my heart is waking, watching in repose.

Though no comrade cheers me—ah, they stand afar!
I will watch in silence for the Morning Star;
On the hills eternal still mine eye is cast,
Till the vision dawneth, wonderful and vast.

Ah, the jubilation! ah, the joyous thrills!
When his hidden glory all my being fills,
When his wondrous likeness all my soul shall grace,
And I shall behold Him ever face to face.

Waiting, waiting, waiting: Lord, I look to Thee
For the Spirit's fulness—glorious liberty!
From the chains of self-life, and the power of sin;
I am watching, humbly, in the depths within.

Answered Prayer.

Dear Sir,—I was much struck, some time ago, by a remark which is to be found in one of Rev. W. Haslam's books, that he believed "our experiences as Christians were given to us for others." I am sending an account of the following direct answers to prayer, because I believe that they are a message from the Lord to some one of whom I know nothing. During the past night I awoke with the feeling that I ought to send them to The Christian; I was kept awake for nearly two hours with this one thought, and could not sleep until I had made up my mind to do so. They had not previously been in my mind, and I feel that there is something in it more than I am aware of.

Some two years ago my husband had a shop in the City. He was in great perplexity as to how he should meet certain bills that had become due. Business was very quiet, and he daily became more anxious. He had a diamond ring that had been in stock for an unaccountable time. It was marked at a very low price, and he was never able to understand why it did not sell. It had been in the window month after month, until he was tired of seeing it. He tried several times to sell it to trade buyers for what it cost him, but without success. Twice it was sent to the sale-room; but, although it was reserved at a much lower price than he had paid for it, it did not sell.

At last it was laid aside to make room for something more saleable. In the midst of his trouble he thought of this ring, and was led to ask the Lord that he might sell it that day. When he dressed the window he placed the ring in it. It had not been there more than an hour, I think, when a gentleman came in and readily purchased it at a small profit to my husband. The sale of the ring did not help him out of his difficulties to any great extent; but it strengthened his faith. He knew by this that although God saw fit to allow him to remain surrounded by difficulties, yet He had not forgotten him, and his ear was still open to his cry.

Again, my husband was seeking a business, and had been praying earnestly for guidance. One was brought under his notice through the agency of a Christian man, in a way so special and peculiar that he was led to suppose that it must be of the Lord. He made every possible investigation; took a week to consider and pray over it; and finally decided on having it. I, however, did not feel satisfied. I came to the conclusion that it was sent only to test him, and I prayed very earnestly that if it were not God's will he should have the business some insurmountable barrier might be raised. The hour was fixed for my husband to sign the agreement, and he was about to start to do so. Suddenly it flashed through his mind that he must not take it. He could not put the feeling aside, and, quite contrary to his usual habit, he was compelled to change his mind after coming to a deliberate decision. He found shortly afterwards that he had been preserved from a snare, and had escaped overwhelming difficulties. Was this not a very direct answer to prayer?

I come to what would appear to some a very trivial matter. I think that some of us are apt to shut God out of the little things of our lives. I have somewhat delicate health, and need good living. The Lord has been pleased to allow misfortunes to happen which have made it difficult to obtain it. A few weeks ago I stood in special need in this matter. For days I pondered over it; I had the money in hand, but felt that it ought to be used for another purpose. I was greatly perplexed; both things were right, and I did not know which was most right. At last I did what I ought to have done before, I asked the Lord to guide me in the matter. I crossed the room to where The Christian Almanack hangs, to look for the daily text, with no thought of an answer to my prayer in that; but my eye fell on these words, "Take some food, for this is for your safety." It seemed like a voice direct from heaven; and was it not? Under other circumstances, I should have spiritualised the words; as it was, I took them in the literal sense in which Paul uttered them.

I could tell of many more, but these are the only instances that are specially laid on my mind, therefore I refrain from mentioning others. We are just now in doubt as to our future course. Will Christians as they read this pray that we may be kept trustful. My husband desires to engage in active Christian work, but we pray that we may follow God's leading only. Please ask that, if it be his will, He will open a door. P.

[The writer of the foregoing gives us no clue to her name or address, but we insert it in the belief that many of our readers will not only find encouragement in it, but will gladly join in the prayer that the needed guidance may be given.—Ed.]

Mr. Moody's Summer School.—3.

By a Special Correspondent.

The closing sessions of the great school for college students have been of blessed and abiding interest. More attention than usual has been given to an understanding of the history, organisation, and methods of college Young Men's Christian Association work, and the inductive Bible-study and Bible-training classes have been a stimulating feature. Never was Mr. Moody apparently more loved by the young men of this country, and the world for that matter, than to-day. The fellows always want to hear what he has to say. He pitches the keynote of the meeting, and each student has a note-book in which he eagerly jots down the nuggets of truth as they fall from the great evangelist's lips. Whether they can assimilate it all, or not, is another question, which time and their future career must answer.

The other morning, when some of the boys asked Mr. Moody if he would preach to them his well-known and powerful sermon on "Enduement for Service," he called out, "Well, boys, I will be ready to give you that address at six o'clock to-morrow morning." Promptly at that early hour more than 300 young men heard the evangelist. He is as practical and enthusiastic as ever, notwithstanding that his grey beard indicates that he is growing old, and may soon pass on to his great reward. In speaking of the methods of some ministers in soul-winning, he said: "Why, they think they have had a very successful year when they don't come out in debt; but, if you ask how many souls they have saved, they reply that the Lord has not showered his blessings upon them this year."

While the speakers, in eloquent power and Biblical learning, have hardly been up to the high standard of the past two or three years, there has been no lull in enthusiastic zeal for the Master's service, and reapers for the ripening harvest will be more plenteous than they would have been but for these consecrated gatherings.

One of the closing speakers was Mr. S. M. Sayford, who has been evangelising among the students of the different colleges. His keynote was unconformity to the world, in the sense in which it was urged by Paul. The so-called minor indulgences have been the very moths that eat holes in our so-called garments of righteousness, and the world makes a mock of us to-day, because of the moth-eaten garments we wear. Take the colleges of America for Christ, and you will take America, and America will take the world for Christ.

Everybody here is praying for the missionary of the cross, and pleading with the Master for more men who will give themselves up to the work. Knots of students have gathered in the woods about, and prayed for light to direct them aright; and there will be a large army of recruits in the field very soon as the fruit of this godly gathering. Rev. H. L. Hastings, of Boston, who has given many sledge-hammer blows against infidelity and scepticism, was one of the final speakers upon the subject of missions. In closing his address, with Ps. cxix. 130 for his text, he said: "It is the light of the World that changes people. Fifty years ago you could buy a man for seven dollars in the Fiji Islands, and eat him up when you had bought him. Now, you can't buy a man for 7,000,000 dollars. Something has raised the price of humanity. It is not secular lecturers. They don't go to the places where they dine on cold missionary. It isn't science; your scientific men haven't got round there yet. The men who five years ago sat down to cannibal feasts now sit down to the Lord's table. The men who years ago were deep in degradation, and steeped in blood, are to-day as peaceable as lambs. Twelve hundred Wesleyan chapels scattered through the islands tell the story. It was only in 1889 that the first decree was issued in China forbidding a man to kill his daughter, under a penalty of sixty stripes of a bamboo. That shows that the light of God is penetrating there. Others may turn from it and sit in darkness and the shadow of death, but let it be your light. 'The entrance of Thy word giveth light; it giveth understanding to the simple.'"

Northfield, Mass., U.S.A., July 9.

In issuing his invitation for the forthcoming Christian Conference, Mr. Moody says:—

"Encouraged by the manifest tokens of God's favour in all the autumn gatherings since the first memorable Convocation, and confident of this very thing, that He who met us in power in former days, and who is 'able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think,' will not fail us in the days to come, we have again arranged for a ten days' Conference at Northfield, Mass., from July 31 to August 9. At this meeting a number of God's honoured servants from this and other lands will be present as 'helpers of our joy' and ministers of grace. Among these are Rev. A. J. Gordon, D.D., of Boston; Professor Moorhead, Major D. W. Whittle, Rev. Marcus Rainsford, of London; Messrs. W. R. Lane and David Baron, of London, and others. The leaders of song will be Mr. Ira D. Sankey and Mr. Geo. C. Stebbins."

MR. W. HIND SMITH'S TOUR.

Gentlemen,—The paragraph in your issue of July 18, concerning my proposed tour round the world, has caused many to be anxious lest it is on account of health. Will you kindly relieve all needless anxiety by saying that my health is good, and that while hoping to see hitherto unknown relatives in India and New Zealand, the main purpose of my tour is to respond to numerous invitations from time to time received from members, who, during my twenty-six years of official connection with the Y.M.C.A., have removed from England, and, in not a few cases, are occupying important positions in the Colonies.

It will be my pleasure to renew my acquaintance with old friends, and, wherever possible, to strengthen the work of the Y.M.C.A., or establish Associations where there may be openings. I may also be able to make appointments with young men whose friends at home would like me to see them. God willing, I leave London, with my son, in the ss. Khedive, on October 16, and stop off at the following places, making our stay in each case depend upon the work to be done, viz., Port Said, Bombay (Presidency), Ceylon, Adelaide, Melbourne, Sydney, Brisbane, Tasmania, New Zealand and home by the United States of America and Canada.—Yours faithfully,

Wm. Hind Smith,
Organising Secretary of the Y.M.C.A.
National Council.

THE GOSPEL IN SPAIN.

DURING the past twenty years, the Gospel has been very steadily progressing in some of the villages of the Vega of Granada. The village of Escornaz, where the Spanish Evangelisation Society has had for many years an evangelical school; and where the veteran Alhama, of Granada, the fellow prisoner of Matamoros, has been, in connection with our work, preaching the Gospel of the grace of God, the people are now almost entirely Protestant. The spiritual issues of the work have been so encouraging that the Society has recently sent forth a godly and experienced missionary to evangelise throughout the towns and villages. The following is the main portion of a brief notice of work by Mr. Murray, the new missionary, appearing in the July issue of Times of Refreshing in Spain:—

"Señor Alhama met us on our arrival, and has rendered us many invaluable services. He introduced us to his congregation on the second night after our arrival; and once a week since we have enjoyed the privilege of addressing them. We respect and love him as a kind, honest, disinterested, and brave labourer and sufferer for the Gospel. He has introduced us to the people of Escornaz as his friend, brother, and colleague, and besought for us the same love they have ever shown to him for twenty-two years. The work began in the towns and villages, when there was more freedom than there is now. At that time the evangelist could go from place to place, and anywhere and everywhere gather crowds, indoors or outdoors, without interference. Now outdoor preaching is impossible, and we require a fixed locality, and the permission of the authorities before we can begin to work in any place. In Escornaz, the Mission fortunately has a school and schoolmaster, and so we can have meetings there.

"To prosecute the work in existing circumstances, it is quite indispensable that we have a small school and place of meeting in each village or town in which we have many friends. If we had this, the Mission would at once make a forward movement in Asquerosa and Fuente de Vaqueros. The one village is about a league, and the other two leagues distance from Escornaz. A periodical recently spoke of the three as 'the worst in the district,' as they were all Protestant. But as we can only address the people in our premises in Escornaz, and our services begin as late as 8.30 or 9 p.m. for the adults, it is clear we can do nothing to consolidate or advance our work. The sum required annually for houses and teachers in each place would be small, and we hope that speedily this will be provided.

"It would gladden the hearts of the supporters of the Mission to see such a village as Escornaz, mostly Protestant, and so many in the neighbouring villages are only waiting opportunity to follow suit. Much has been done, and much remains to be done, ere this good beginning can be ripened. I have been twice there, and on the last occasion taught a hymn practice, and conducted a Sabbath school and Bible-class, besides an evangelistic meeting, and conversing with many of the people.

"There were more than thirty children in the Sabbath-school, and as many boys and girls, after work, in the Bible-class. There were certainly eighty persons in the evening meeting, besides those who were on the stair and on the street. Three of the leaders told me I was perfectly understood, and would soon be able to speak and preach like a Spaniard. If the outpouring of the Holy Spirit were vouchsafed, we might anticipate, where there is so much Scripture knowledge, and such love and reverence for Señor Alhama, a blessed work of grace. I have not been long enough to judge for myself of the spiritual life, but I have seen and heard enough to satisfy me that in Escornaz and Asquerosa many have bravely suffered for the truth."

While the work of this Mission is thus extending, the income of the Society is being greatly reduced by the recent deaths of liberal supporters. Further support is, therefore, most earnestly solicited, that the land where many of the people seem to be stretching forth their hands to God may be possessed for Christ. Free copies of July Times of Refreshing in Spain will be sent to anyone applying to Mrs. Peddie, 8, Granville-terrace, Edinburgh, secretary and treasurer of the Spanish Evangelisation Society.

American Notes.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

ANOTHER of our heroic men has been summoned home. General Clinton B. Fisk has just died in his sixty-second year, leaving a wide gap in the ranks of Christian philanthropists. Like the late lamented George H. Stuart, General Fisk was identified with a variety of work, holding honorary relations with several institutions. As the founder of the Fisk University, the home of the original Jubilee Singers, he continued President of its Board of Trustees. He was also officially connected with Dickinson College, Drew Theological Seminary, Pennington Seminary, Albion College, and the American Missionary Association.

General Fisk is more widely known as the nominee of the Prohibition party for the Presidency of the United States in 1888. His life previous to 1884 had been identified with the Republicans, but that year snapped the chains which bound him to a party closely allied with the whisky movement, and gave his support to ex-Governor St. John, of Kansas, the Prohibition candidate for the presidency that same year.

Though of humble origin, the son of a blacksmith, General Fisk won his way to distinction and wealth. At the close of the war, he was rewarded for his soldierly qualities and services by the appointment as Commissioner of the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands. His duties were very difficult. Grave responsibilities rested on his shoulders. He had to reconstruct the whole social and industrial systems of the Central South. He succeeded so admirably that Southern men, representing one hundred millions of capital, petitioned President Johnson, after the death of Lincoln, to retain him at his honourable though difficult post. General Fisk was an earnest Christian, a man of prayer, and a wise counsellor.

Kansas leads in Young Men's Christian Association State work. The evangelistic and missionary spirit possesses the officers to an unusual degree. At the recent State Bible School, held on the banks of the Cottonwood River, near Emporia, 250 young men and women formed the class. Dr. Brooks, of St. Louis, was their chosen and beloved teacher. His influence throughout the south-western region is very great. The young men love to sit at the feet of this Gamaliel, who is truly a great scribe instructed in the Scriptures. Fifty of the students had already offered themselves for the foreign field. Seventy-four others joined this band of missionary volunteers, and will now prepare themselves for their future life-work. Such is the present Y.M.C.A. movement in Kansas.

The missionary student movement was well represented by Mr. Wilder at the Ninth International Christian Endeavour Convention at St. Louis. Five thousand students are already enrolled, the majority of whom have not, as yet, completed their course of study. Two hundred and fifty have already sailed for their respective fields. Twenty thousand recruits are called, with proportionate funds for urgent world-wide evangelism. This student-movement has been organised in ten different States.

IRISH GOSPEL MISSION.

WHILE Ireland is suffering from the history of the past and the political confusion of the present, it is well to remind those who pray daily for her restoration to the paths of righteousness and truth, that something is being done for the accomplishment of this end; and this something, though small compared with the great need, is being marked with the blessing of the Lord of the Harvest. Many of our readers remember that from time to time mention has been made of a new effort put forth under the auspices of the "Dublin Visiting Mission." This work has steadily gone forward, the number appointed to "The Irish Gospel Mission" (the name of the new branch) having increased from two to six workers. These young missionaries have been working amongst the outlying districts of this neglected country. Two labouring in the south-western counties and two others in the south-eastern, and two more in the north-west.

Now, what has been the result? Meetings have been held in halls, school-rooms, cottages, barns, cabins of boats, and in the open air. To these meetings Roman Catholics have been invited, and many have attended. At one place, during six services, seventy to eighty Roman Catholics were present at the meetings. The missionaries who have just returned have much to report, and such as is calculated to encourage the most faithless of Ireland's friends.

A few from among many incidents may interest your readers. At one meeting in D——e, Romanists were present. After the meeting one came and asked for a Douay Testament. It was given immediately. She began to read and meditate upon its truths. The whole story of love given there was so precious to her own soul that she began to collect her friends together by promising to read the strange book to them night after night. This went on; the seeker after the truth becoming by force of circumstances a teacher of the same. She has now gone to live in England, but her work of testimony remains; may it be a blessing.

At B——, the parish priest, having heard of our missions, arrived; forbad the people to attend any gatherings; they obeyed; but numbers stood outside and listened, and some came secretly to their lodgings, and joined them in reading the Scriptures and in prayer. An open-air meeting was also held, and amongst others a priest heard the message.

At R——, a poor old woman was so impressed during the services that she followed the missionary home weeping bitterly at the prospect of hearing no more of the good news. A local Christian was told of her case, and is continuing to give the instruction she needs.

At I——, another open-air meeting was held, numbers of Roman Catholics were present, and the deepest silence and attention were preserved throughout the service, which lasted for an hour and a half.

At B——, the Court House was granted for meetings. No seats could be obtained until a Roman Catholic publican came forward and provided all the seats and cleaning of the hall free of expense.

These are a few incidents from a short but very interesting history, which this new branch of work now possesses.

Will friends continue to pray that Ireland may, by the blessing of God, become in the future what it was in the past, a pattern of true piety and the birthplace of many whose devotion to God and the Gospel carried them unto the ends of the earth. If any further information is desired on this subject, it will be gladly given by Mrs. Smyly, 35, Upper Fitz-William-street, Dublin.

DARKNESS AND DAWN.

"The bright and morning Star."—Rev. xxii. 16.

I was wandering in the desert,
The desert lone and far,
Ere yet had dawned upon me
The bright and morning Star;
With not a voice to cheer me,
And not a hand to guide,
But weariness and darkness
And snares on every side.

Light after light had vanished
That once had lured me on;
Hope's fairy gleam had faded,
And pleasure's flash was gone,
While brooded o'er my spirit
The blinding mists of sin,
And wilder than the storm without
Was the wild strife within.

For passion's gusts were sweeping
Across my fevered breast,
And thrilling in my spirit
A voice that would not rest,
Sternly and sadly telling
Of all I might have been,
And pointing me to what I was,
With the deep gulf between.

I sat amid the shadows
Alone with my despair,
When a tender gleam of radiance
Stole through the darkness there;
The first soft hues of daybreak
Dawned in the east afar,
And o'er my soul's wild chaos rose
The bright and morning Star.

Oh, what a rush of gladness
Came with that pitying gleam!
The icy fetters melted
Beneath its loving beam;
And quietly and gently
The shadows passed away,
Till misery and gloom were gone
And all was glorious day.

Light of the World! how gently
Thy love hath led me back,
And kept my wandering footsteps
Within the heavenward track!
Now would I tell to others—
Would tell it wide and far,
How in my sorrow came to me
The bright and morning Star.

I would tell it to the sufferer,
To soothe his couch of pain,
To the sad and lonely weeper,
And bid her smile again!
I would tell it to the sinful,
Oh, more than all, to him
Whom Satan's chain is binding fast,
In heart, and mind, and limb.

Where'er lost sheep are straying,
Where'er the outcasts roam,
I would bear the Saviour's message
And call those wanderers home;
Till all God's precious children,
O'er earth and ocean far,
Were walking in thy light of life,
O bright and morning Star!

MISS RADCLIFFE, of Liverpool, has visited the neighbourhoods of Coedpoeth and Glanrafon, near Wrexham, and conducted a series of mission meetings at both places. A women's meeting was held in the afternoon and the general meeting in the evening. The mission extended from July 7 to 20. The chapels were crowded each night, and on the Sundays they were uncomfortably full. The meetings were a decided success, and the mission was certainly a glorious time of blessing from God in renewing many lukewarm professing Christians, and in bringing several new ones for the first time to accept the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour. Many are longing to see Miss Radcliffe again visiting the neighbourhood.

WORK IN QUEBEC.

FOR YOUNG MEN, BY YOUNG MEN.

There are few places in which Christian work is carried on that present greater difficulties in its accomplishment than does the province of Quebec, in Canada. The overwhelming majority of the Roman Catholic population occasions a need for thoroughly evangelical effort.

It is cheering, however, to hear of the blessing which is attending the labours of those who in various ways are seeking to further the Gospel of Christ, and to find that, in spite of Romish aggression, the light of the Gospel is kept burning in that dark city.

For many years the Y.M.C.A. has been owned of God, and has taken a firm hold on the hearts of the Lord's people, who have made it a centre of Christian activity and usefulness. The Association owns probably the best site in the city for its purpose, on which is erected a fine building, the front of which is occupied by the Association. Lack of funds has, however, prevented the completion of the rear portion, although the foundation is laid and six feet of wall built upon it. This additional accommodation is urgently needed to properly carry on the work, which is growing rapidly.

Amongst the many branches are a jail mission, work among soldiers and sailors, tract distribution, hospital visitation, and special work for young men. Although it aims first at the welfare of English and French young men, the building has come to be generally regarded as a centre of united work. It is therefore desirable to complete the premises, and thus extend its usefulness. The unfinished portion of the building would contain a gymnasium, with baths and a hall for Gospel services. Through a gymnasium a very large number of Roman Catholics, besides Protestant young men, can be attracted and brought under directly Christian influence. Hitherto the young men's work has been confined chiefly to the English-speaking population. Now it is felt that the time has come to extend operations.

The work is not wanting in direct tokens of blessing. Young men brought to Christ, and others led out into earnest work, give evidence that the Lord is working, and, although there is much opposition and a great prejudice against Protestantism, the workers feel that the openings for extended usefulness among the French in Old Quebec are very encouraging. The debt does not now exceed £300 (while the property itself is worth nearly £8000), and, if the £1000 necessary to complete the building can be obtained, a very promising future is before the Institution. An example may be cited to show that the Lord is using the Association for his glory. A young Englishman, led into evil through bad companionship, found himself in jail, and while there was led through the work of the young men to put his trust in Jesus Christ. A letter from him, received by the Secretary a few weeks ago, stated that he was a completely changed man. The general secretary (Mr. F. W. Gooch) is now in England, spending a month's vacation at his home in London. He returns to his work in Quebec early in August, and will gladly communicate with any friends willing to help. His address is Manseville, Chatsworth-road, West Norwood, S.E.

TRACT DISTRIBUTION.—Mr. H. Le Gros writes from Prospect-house, Ashwell, Herts:—"It may perhaps interest those of your many readers who are engaged in tract distribution to hear that some weeks back I gave a tract to two poor women in this village, which was the means in God's hand of leading both to the Saviour. The tract was 'Come to Jesus,' by Rev. Newman Hall. Both the women have since been leading lives thoroughly consistent with their profession." Mr. Le Gros informs us that the supply of tracts, from which he recently intimated his willingness to send parcels to applicants, has been quite exhausted.

Letters to the Editor.

PERSECUTION OF THE JEWS.

Dear Sir,—We were truly thankful to see in your last issue a paragraph, drawing attention to the increasing persecution of the Jews. It is impossible that British Christians can be aware of the intense sufferings which Jews are enduring in Russia. Since 1880 there has been no cessation of their sorrows. And now it appears as if a great crisis were at hand. The Russian Government seems bent on driving all Jews out of Russia. An "inspired" paragraph which appeared about three weeks ago in the Government organ mentions this, and remarks that the Government need not concern themselves as to "whither these five million people may betake themselves." Austria has already had to demonstrate against the forcing of crowds of destitute Jews into Austria from Russia. Multitudes come here from German ports, on their way to America. Many go to Palestine by every steamer.

The expulsions are effected by cruelties of every description, and it is now publicly stated, on good authority, that the Russian Government officials are encouraging the burning of towns and villages, as a short and ready means for ridding themselves of the Jews. It is impossible, in a few lines, to even enumerate the restrictions and laws now being enforced against the Jews, in order to prevent them from earning a livelihood in trade, agriculture, commerce, or any of the professions. Moreover, they may not have schools of their own, nor may they send their children to Russian schools, except in the proportion of five Jewish to ninety-five Russian children. In places where the Jews are in the majority—and they must be in the majority, in the crowded towns within the "pale of Jewish settlement"—their children are, by this edict, shut out from school altogether.

And now let me remind all who become aware of the acute misery and distress of the Jews, that we Christians have a plain duty before us. The Jews need our "mercy." Here is our opportunity. Let us see to it that "they obtain mercy," and help for bodily as also for higher need. Lord Shaftesbury foresaw the coming distress. He sought to provide for it. Acting on the lines laid down by him we have steadily carried on the work of relief and employment of Jews here and in Palestine. But though we annually help several hundreds, tens of thousands appeal for help in vain, and this because the funds at our disposal are as yet insufficient to meet the need. Now, while the cry of distress grows daily more urgent, people who have money are going away for rest and change, to the seaside, or country, or abroad. It is no small trial to watch the departure of those who could help, and to look forward to the anxious weeks of work that must elapse before their return. In Palestine and in London the distress of the Jewish refugees is so acute that we plead for means to be put into our hands now; so that while those who can do so, go away for recreation, we may be enabled to work on, without the anxiety and pain of having insufficient means to deal with the cases that come before us daily. The time has come for the work to be extended, so as to be in some proportion to the numbers seeking our help, and in some degree worthy of our profession of Christianity. Means only are wanting.

RELIGION v. POLITICS.

SIR,—I have been greatly interested in the letters which have appeared lately in THE CHRISTIAN, with regard to the attitude of believers towards party politics; but as the discussion is closed, I do not wish to enter into it, further than to mention that in the neighbourhood where I live there is an election to the Board of Guardians, the candidates being an evangelical churchman and a Roman Catholic priest. Now, sad as it may be, it is nevertheless true that many of the leading Dissenters, headed by the Baptist minister, are not only supporting, but also nominating, the priest—the fact being that he is on their side politically. The worst of the matter is that it is generally expected that should this man be elected, a Roman Catholic chaplain will be given to the workhouse.—Yours, &c.,

RELIGION BEFORE POLITICS.

ROMANISM.

DEAR SIR,—In reference to the remark "that pages of the Protestant Church are also written in blood" in your last issue, will you permit me to mention circumstances, that I have not seen noticed, which will account for persecutions by Protestant churches, and which they now deplore? These persecutions took place at a time when men were just emerging from Popery, and had not yet divested themselves of those persecuting principles hitherto inculcated, and had not had for long enough the teachings of the Bible to enable them to imbibe the spirit of Christ on this matter. The only branch of the Protestant Church (so called) which would be now intolerant is that which is again approaching Popery.

Whereas, on the other side, so far from regretting the past, not long since, the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Washington, in his paper "The Shepherd of the Valley," said his Church endorsed all that the princes of his Church had done throughout all the ages for the suppression of heresy, and he need not tell them that when they got the power in the United States, which they soon hoped to have, through the increase of the Catholic population, there would no longer be liberty of conscience there.

I notice in last week's CHRISTIAN that a Roman Catholic judge in South Boston denies that his Church believes in the doctrine of indulgences. A Liverpool paper of July 19, announcing the opening of a new church on the following day, stated that "the Holy Father has granted a plenary indulgence to all the faithful who will visit the church to-morrow." E. M.

INSPIRATION AND ECCLESIASTICISM.

SIR,—I read with much interest your remarks on a quotation from Professor Huxley's article in the July number of The Nineteenth Century. The quotation is as follows: "The question of inspiration really possesses no interest for those who have cast ecclesiasticism and all its works aside, and have no faith in any source of truth save that which is reached by the patient application of scientific methods."

I have not yet read the whole of the Professor's article, but may I suggest in addition to your comments on it, that, although inspiration may not have an interest for those who "have no faith in any source of truth save that which is reached by the patient application of scientific methods," it is precisely "for those who have cast ecclesiasticism and all its works aside," and because they "have cast ecclesiasticism and all its works aside," that the question of Inspiration has the utmost interest. To those who have not done this, who put the Authority of the Church on a par with the Scriptures, who place the guidance of their conscience and conduct in the hands of a priest, accepting their creed from him, it is comparatively of little moment to be assured of the infallibility of Scripture; but for those who refuse such guidance, and yet find the difficulty of rejecting Revelation greater than that of accepting it, the Inspiration of Scripture is of paramount importance.

It seems to me that scepticism and ecclesiasticism are joining hands in undermining the authority of Scripture, the latter availing itself gladly of that which forces the ignorant and indolent to take refuge from difficulty and discussion in the renunciation of moral responsibility, seeking to make it over to the Church of Rome or any other sacerdotal system. A SEEKER AFTER TRUTH.

THE OUTPOURING OF THE SPIRIT: OPINIONS OF RECENT WRITERS.

DEAR SIR,—In reply to the important question raised by "Nemo" in your last issue, I beg to submit the following extracts from recent books dealing more or less with this great theme.

"We are not to think of the giving of the Spirit as an isolated deposit of what, once given, is now locally in possession. The first gift is, as it were, the first point in a series of actions, of which each one may also be expressed as a gift."—Rev. H. C. G. Moule on "Ephesians."

"And when He is come He will convince the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment" (John xvi. 8). The Greek is wonderfully felicitous in that it does not represent the Spirit of God as coming once for all, but as persistently coming. He it is who, coming, shall convince. He comes as the rain from heaven, that must still come and come again; as the wind that must still blow and blow again. We are not to look back for our Pentecost. The Pentecost of the Acts is simply given to make the Church of Christ acquainted with the privileges belonging to this dispensation. It is only the first step in a ladder of Pentecosts, by which the world and the Kingdom of Christ are to be brought together. It is the specimen to accompany the promise, that we may be stirred up to plead the promise with the greatest fervency."—George Bowen, in "Love Revealed."

"God has not given the Spirit to believers, in the sense of parting with him; or as if, by once giving, he did not now need any more to give. If Paul asked very distinctly for the Ephesians, who had been sealed with the Holy Spirit, that the Father would still give them 'the Spirit of wisdom' (Eph. i. 17), we cannot be far wrong in praying as definitely for the Spirit of Power.—Rev. Andrew Murray, in "The Spirit of Christ."

"The term 'outpouring' is a figurative expression. The Spirit cannot literally be poured out; but the same figure is applied to many other things, and as we are taught that heaven is the throne and the dwelling-place of God, and as heaven is always represented as above the earth, so it is in harmony with these statements, and in accommodation to our finite capacities, that the Bible speaks of the Holy Spirit descending from above, coming to earth, being poured out, and such like. Language of this kind simply teaches us that He who is in his nature an invisible Spirit, and always present throughout the universe, does, on particular occasions, and in particular places, and in particular ways, manifest his presence and his power.

"The Prophecy of Joel ii. began to be fulfilled on the Day of Pentecost, and has been in a course of fulfilment ever since. Our Lord, when solemnly intimating his second Advent, employs the language of Joel in this prophecy, and we are warranted to conclude that, until the winding up of the present dispensation, neither this prophecy, nor many others involving the destinies of both Jews and Gentiles, will receive their literal and complete accomplishment."—Rev. D. Pitcairn in "Pentecostal Blessings."

May I add, that in addition to the words of Joel the following passages evidently warrant us in applying the phrase, "Outpouring of the Spirit," both to a revival in the Church of Christ and to an awakening among the heathen (Pro. i. 23; Isa. xxxii. 15-18, xliv. 3-5, xlv. 8; Zech. xii. 10)?

MR. CONNELLAN'S PAMPHLETS.

SIR,—Allow me to correct a slight error in your notice of these pamphlets which appeared last week. The publishers are MR. William McGee, 18, Nassau-street, and Mr. George Herbert, 117, Grafton-street, Dublin, from whom copies may be had directly or through a bookseller. "Hear the Other Side" is now sold at 3d., and "An Appeal to his Brethren" at 1d., the postage of each being ½d.

It will be interesting to your readers to know that a younger brother of Mr. Connellan's, Mr. Joseph Connellan, has recently published a deeply interesting account of his conversion, under the title, "From Bondage to Liberty," which deserves a very wide circulation. It is sold by Messrs. Mecruly & Kyle, 45, Middle Abbey-street, Dublin, price 1d.

In these days, when Rome is putting forth such arrogant pretensions, and when they are being so weakly yielded to by some in high places, pamphlets like these, written by men who know the system and who have had the strength and courage to "come out of her," are invaluable.—Yours truly, CATHOLICUS.

ANTI-INFIDEL LITERATURE CRUSADE.

DEAR SIR,—During the past two years, as an endeavour to destroy the extra efforts of infidelity, some sixteen tons of Mr. Hastings' "Will the Old Book Stand?" have been carefully and effectively circulated by kind friends throughout the world. We are still anxious and determined to continue this labour of love, for the glory of God and the destruction of error. Various letters and reports from all parts of the world urge us to go on. Friends are willing with generous aid, but being anxious that many should lend a helping hand in such a good work, we now offer an edition of 300,000 of the fiftieth edition of that valuable 32-page pamphlet, "Will the Old Book Stand?" on best tinted paper, illustrated, for 30s. per 1000, for friends' own purchase and circulation gratuitously throughout the world. This is a gift of 20s. per 1000, making in all £300 as our friends' share of this great work. Parcels of 250 may be purchased of Messrs. Marshall Bros., 10, Paternoster-row, for 7s. 6d., but we appeal to our wealthy friends to purchase very largely. Personally, I can guarantee a careful and effective circulation in India, Ceylon, Australia, and America, at the 30s. ber 1000; this offer is limited to October 31, 1890.

Thanking our generous friends for past help, we go forward in the Lord's name to do battle with the foe.—I am, yours in a labour of love, JOHN H. MITCHELL.

WORK AT ST. SERVAN.

DEAR SIR,—Having returned on a visit to Brittany, where we worked happily and successfully some years ago, we find that no one has yet come to fill our vacant place. There is an urgent need for lady workers, who would settle amongst the people, and seek to bring them out of their gross darkness into God's marvellous light. The country is wholly Roman Catholic, and the people are extremely superstitious and ignorant, but they are fully alive to, and grateful for, any efforts that are made to help them. There is good and abiding fruit from the little Mission which was first started here some eleven years ago, after the visit of the late Dr. Somerville. This Mission still continues, and helpers would be warmly welcomed by the faithful few who have carried it on in the midst of discouragement and opposition.

Within easy reach of England, by the Southampton and St. Malo route, St. Servan offers peculiar advantages to ladies who might be willing to settle and work here. Two ladies, who could share a house or apartment, would find it a pleasant place in which to live, with lovely scenery and surroundings, and where the necessaries of life are cheap and abundant.

Of course a knowledge of French, and true love for the Master and for the poor of his flock are necessary requirements for workers here. And it is in the hope of touching the hearts of some such in England that I venture to write this letter. Anyone needing further information may have it from myself at the following address, where we hope to stay for a few weeks.—I am, Sir, faithfully yours, DELTA VATES.

THE RAILWAY MISSION.

A MEETING of workers and friends of the Railway Mission present at the Keswick Convention was held in the Court House on Friday afternoon, July 25. Mr. T. A. DENNY presided, and warmly commended the work of the Mission to those present, as a field for their efforts.

Mr. R. NIXON, secretary of the Mission, told of the great need which existed for a special effort to bring the Gospel to railway men, owing to the fact that they are very often deprived by their peculiar duties from attending places of worship or meetings. The work is best done by ladies, and he appealed to those present, when they returned home, to arrange a Bible-class or meeting for the railway men.

Several ladies gave highly-interesting accounts of the work which they have been doing at various places, and of the great blessing attending it.

STRENSALL CAMP, YORK.—Through the efforts of Rev. Cæsar Caine, acting chaplain, social, temperance, and religious meetings of an undenominational character have been held every evening during July in a large marquee erected for the purpose. There are about 4000 men in camp. The attendance, which was small at first, has steadily increased. Many pledges have been taken, and it is believed that much good has been done. There has been a remarkable absence of crime. Among those who have taken part in the meetings were the Lord Mayor of York, Colonel Wilson, Rev. A. Sterling, Colonel de Wend, the Vicar of Strensall, Captain Kirwan, and Army Scripture Reader Styles.

The Book World.

A Volume of Sermons.

The Great Alternative, and other Sermons. By Rev. C. Moinet, M.A. Hodder & Stoughton. The criticisms of this book are themselves exceedingly interesting. What shall we think of a book of sermons which Mr. Spurgeon speaks of as "a great book," which at the same time Dr. Marcus Dods praises for its "solid and masculine thinking," its "sincerity, reality, conviction, knowledge, sobriety, and wisdom?" But the volume itself is far more interesting than this striking agreement in critics so dissimilar. It is a very quarry of thought, and therefore a work that reflective readers will revel in. The thought is of excellent quality, too, so fresh, sober, suggestive, and evangelical. The writer has attained to a grand system of sound doctrine, which is to him so true and harmonious that he follows truth with as much fearless boldness as severe fidelity. He shows great knowledge of human nature, while his careful treatment of the Bible is very instructive. Some of these sermons might well have been the work of one of our greatest writers; indeed it is hard to see how that on "The Character of Esau" could be much improved.

Present-day Lessons from Habakkuk. Ten Lectures by Rev. P. Barclay, M.A. 3s. Edinburgh: Macniven & Wallace. This does not pretend to be an exposition of the prophecy. The author set himself to depict the situation in Habakkuk's time, and to indicate the practical lessons which the book has for us to-day. Many will find the volume suggestive.

The Life of Abraham. 1s. By C. Anderson Scott, R.A. Edited by Professor Salmond. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark. Not only are the patriarch's life and character forcibly depicted, but a great deal of information about ancient Egypt and Canaan is given in a small space. The map forming frontispiece is very clear, and the questions at the close of each chapter are well worded.

Confidential Chats with Mothers on the healthy rearing of children. By Mrs. Bowdick. Baillière, Tindall & Cox. Originally published in Baby: the Mother's Magazine, these chats now appear in a collected form. All sorts of useful hints on bathing, clothing, diet, light and air are incisively given. A whole chapter is devoted to "thumb-sucking," which is evidently a serious infantile error.

The Bible Triumphant. Twelve Dozen Sceptical Arguments Refuted. By Mrs. H. V. Reed. 1s. Marshall Bros. This book, which Mr. H. L. Hastings has given a place in his well-known Anti-Infidel Library, continues to do good service in the cause of truth. In some cases difficulties are not met so successfully as they might have been, but on the whole the work is worthy of high commendation.

Queen Elizabeth and the Penal Laws. By Z. C. H. Collette. Protestant Alliance, 9, Strand. A masterpiece of Protestant defence and attack. Mr. Collette's brief survey of the reigns of Henry VIII., Edward VI. and Mary is admirable, and his comparison of the Marian martyrs with Elizabethan traitors very effective. Every Englishman owes Mr. Collette thanks, and his book ought to be found in every training college, school, and public library.

The Denominational Reason Why. 3s. 6d. Houlston & Sons.—This well-known volume, which has been issued in a revised and enlarged form, gives the origin, history, and tenets of the various Christian sects, ancient as well as modern, with the reasons assigned by themselves for their special forms of faith and worship. It is a compendium of information of a deeply-interesting character, and has obviously been compiled in a spirit of strict impartiality.

St. Paul: His Life and Times. By James Iverach, M.A., Professor of Apologetics and Exegesis of the Gospels, Free Church College, Aberdeen. 2s. 6d. Nisbet. A volume fully worthy its place in the "Men of the Bible" series. Whether sketching the life, or setting forth the teaching of the Apostle, the author has shown himself capable and sympathetic in a high degree. The pages afford evidence of wide reading, and are an admirable introduction to a thorough study of the Epistles of Paul. In presenting the Apostle to view as the faithful servant of Another, Professor Iverach forcibly exposes the perversity of that criticism which has contended that he was virtually the founder of Christianity.

Life Sketches. 1s. By M. L. Parker. Kingsbridge: F. Brooke. A simple account of the writer's conversion and subsequent service in the Lord's vineyard. Some of the conversions recorded are remarkable, and the Lord's repeated use of so-called "trifles" cannot but strike the most casual reader.

Philip: a Story of the First Century. By Mary C. Cutler. Nelson.—A sketch of the probable life of one who was contemporary with our Lord, and became one of his disciples. The pages display no realism inconsistent with true loyalty to the Gospel story. The descriptive filling-in shows an intimate acquaintance with the archæology of the period. The book will delight all who read it, the times immediately following the death of our Lord being delineated in a specially instructive manner.

Illustrated Books for the People. The Religious Tract Society continues to issue excellent penny books for popular reading. Twelve have been bound in a handsome volume (2s.) with coloured frontispiece, under the title of Christie's Old Organ, and other stories. The attractive contents include "Jessica's First Prayer," "Stanley's African Expeditions," "The Dairyman's Daughter," "Kenelm Winslow's Request," and "The Cottage on the Shore." All are good, and both singly and in volume form, should be in large request for village and Sunday-school libraries.

Outlines of Prophetic Truth: viewed practically and experimentally in the light of the Divine Word (Second Series), by Robert Brown. Mr. Brown is the author of many valuable works; but this concluding volume of his "Outlines" is second to none of them. He belongs to the Futurist School of Prophetic Interpreters; but every reader, of whatever school, will find in this volume a vast fund of knowledge. Scripture is carefully compared with Scripture, and the intelligent reader is placed in a position to judge for himself the legitimacy of the conclusions drawn. Holding the plenary inspiration of the Word, Mr. Brown everywhere bows to its authority. As a consequence, the book is thoroughly orthodox and evangelical, and brings out much deep, spiritual, and edifying truth. This is a book for the times, revealing, as it does, the dangers to both the Church and nation from many sources. The exposure of the designs and machinations of the Jesuits, and the note of warning sounded, Section II., pp. 360—406, are to this country, at the present hour, of vital importance. Equally important in its place is the section on "Demonology, Witchcraft, and Necromancy," the so-called modern "Spiritualism." It would be well for many who are now perverting the Word and corrupting the worship of God, if they seriously pondered the facts and reflections of pp. 290—296. Of this book we can say what Adam Clarke said of Richard Baxter's "Christian Dictionary," that it is impossible that any person can read it without having his understanding enlightened, and his heart affected by its weighty and solemn truths.

C. H. KELLY, CASTLE-STREET, CITY-ROAD.

The King's People; or, The Glorious Citizenship of Zion. By Rev. Charles North. 4s. The editor of this book says in his preface: "It is healthy in tone, evangelical in teaching, and will be profitable reading for young and old." He also says that it has a quaint beauty of its own, and when it is added that Lois and Mary appear as young ladies in the dress of 1863, while Reuben and Benjamin are in frock coats, the latter with stand-up collar and a "Hartington" tie, it will not be denied that quaintness is one of its attributes. It has a flavour of Bunyan about it, with a breezy air of truth, but we question the method which the author has adopted in working out his allegory.

Under the Palms and among the Pimento Groves. By Rev. Henry Bunting. 2s. We have read and enjoyed every word of this book, and it is a beautiful, tender story of the birth and growth of God's truth in the hearts of men and women slaves in Jamaica before the terrible crisis in 1831. No one will read the book without being strengthened in faith and love; this little story is another jewel from the rich mine of Methodist literature.

The Springtide Reciter. By Margaret Haycraft. 1s. Anything that Mrs. Haycraft writes is sure to be good, and this is one of the very best Temperance Reciters we have seen, much above the average, both in quality and treatment. We wish it success.

Coming Glories of the Church of God. Jottings of a very suggestive Bible-reading by Mrs. Yapp. (1d. Hakwins.)

Three more of Messrs. Jarrold & Sons' useful guides are:—Cambridge, Southwold, and Aldeburgh. They are well illustrated. (6d. each.)

Tempted: A Sister's Appeal to her Young Sisters. By H. E. T. 3s. 6d. per 100. Dyer Brothers, Paternoster-square. Earnest words, inculcating a wholesome dread of the beginnings of impurity of life.

The Little Book of Parochial Missions gives many valuable hints to clergymen contemplating missions in their parishes. It is from the practical pen of Rev. Philip Norton. (4d. Worcester: E. Baylis & Son, 22, The Cross.)

Messrs. Horner & Son have published a revised edition of Mr. Shuldham Henry's little book, The Disembodied State. The pamphlet Spiritualism Forbidden of God, by F. C. B. F., is now in its seventh edition. (Three halfpence.)

A Breakdown in Religion. By the late William Reid, M.A. 1d. Holness. A plea for the reality of Christianity in place of the mere semblance. With God's blessing, these pages will excite deep searchings of heart on the part of all who read them.

"Confession." A vigorous sermon by Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston, showing the unscriptural character of private confession to fellow sinners who arrogate to themselves exclusive priestly functions, has been published by A. Bachhoffner, 162, High-street, Clapham, S.W. (Price, one penny.)

A Layman's Protest against Modern Ministerial Speculation. By Frederick W. W. Howell. 1d. Birmingham: Sidney Smith, 2, Broad Street-corner. A vigorous booklet, by a Methodist who is indignant at the matter and manner of Mr. F. Ballard's pretended answer to Pastor A. G. Brown's "Devil's Mission of Amusement."

Picture Portions. Mr. W. Walters, of the Scripture Gift Association, 79, St. Paul's-churchyard, E.C., is publishing the New Testament in penny parts, beautifully printed and illustrated. The text is broken up in a manner which cannot but prove helpful to persons not accustomed to sustained reading. Book distributors will find these portions the best of all tracts.

Among the recent publications from Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling, are The Watchman Series: leaflets on Romanism, sixteen subjects in sixpenny packets; and The Woodfield Series of illustrated booklets, by H. K. Wood ("a Glasgow merchant"), also in sixpenny packets of fifty copies. Other attractive booklets are: Heirs Wanted, For What Do You Pray? "Oh that I Knew Where I Might find Him!" and Living by the Moment, printed on tinted paper, 2s. per 100.

The Temperance Cause.

The late Mr. Handel Cossham has bequeathed to the National Temperance League and Western Temperance League £500 each.

Mrs. Leavitt, writing from Africa, gives a painful account of the enormous imports of spirits to the West Coast and to the Congo. Since 1885 the trade has greatly increased.

The Voice (New York) in a recent issue gave a number of most uncompromising declaration by leading Church organisations in the United States in favour of total abstinence and entire prohibition.

The Minister of Public Instruction in New South Wales has directed that a copy of Dr. Richardson's work on "Drink and Strong Drink" shall be placed in the hands of every head teacher in the public schools.

The Committee of the National Temperance League intend to publish a series of temperance lesson books for use in schools. The preparation of these books has been placed in the hands of the League's educational lecturer, Mr. F. R. Cheshire.

The Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church of America specially condemned the example set by the Vice-President of the United States in encouraging drinking socially, and also by profiting by the sale of liquor in property he owns or controls.

HOSPITAL SUNDAY FUND.—At the Mansion House, on Monday afternoon, a meeting of the committee of the Metropolitan Hospital Sunday Fund was held for sanctioning the payments of the awards to hospitals and dispensaries recommended by the committee of distribution. The total amount available for distribution was £41,061, of which £39,101 were distributed to 113 hospitals and 56 dispensaries, and £2050 set apart for surgical appliances.

Errata.—The correspondent who sent the paragraph in our last issue relating to Rev. J. K. Robson fell into two errors. (1) It is to the Methodist New Connexion Missionary Society that he has offered his services, and not to the Wesleyan M.S.; and (2) the term is for five years, not seven. Mr. Robson has laboured five years in the Dewsbury Circuit.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 3.—Psalm LXXXVI.

David is in straits, deprived of human aid, his life endangered by a band of proud and ungodly men. And he quotes the help given him by God in former days (13). Obviously, then, this must refer to his sufferings at the hand of Absalom and his advisers.

The Psalm is divided into two strophes. The first ten verses make up the first, and the remaining ones the second. Notice the refrain in 5, 10, 15, "Thou art good." "Thou are great." "Thou art God alone." "Thou art full of compassion."

1, 2. He founds his prayer on his misery, and on the fact of his being one of God's chosen ones. "I am holy" might be rendered "I am godly" (R.V.). The Creator is the best Preserver. And He who has begotten passionate desires after Himself can best meet them and satisfy.

4. "We may expect comfort from God when we maintain communion with God. God's goodness appears in two things, in giving and forgiving. We may expect that God will meet us with his mercies when we in our prayers send forth our souls to meet Him."

11. Our thoughts are apt to wander and scatter. We therefore need so much that God would gather them up into a true unity (Phil. iii. 13). The united heart, which has but one purpose and desire to live for God is the heart which is most sure of God's way, and most full of praise (12); and that experiences most fully his delivering care (13).

15. Who can fathom the fulness of God's compassion?

16. Well is it when we come to the end of our strength and begin to appropriate God's (Phil. iv. 13).

MONDAY, AUGUST 4.—Psalm LXXXVII.

This is a song of praise for some great deliverance, and it is full from end to end with triumphant joy. It seems to have dated from the times of Hezekiah, when Babylon was still second in power to Rahab or Egypt. Rahab means haughtiness or pride, and is used by Isaiah (xxx. 7), and is only applicable to Egypt before the battle of Carchemish, which humbled its pride. Altogether, it seems clear that this Psalm celebrates the security of Jerusalem after the discomfiture of Assyria by the angel of the Lord.

1. The foundations of Zion took place in the eternal choice and determination of God. And those of the Church rest on the chief Corner-stone, our blessed Lord (Isa. xxviii. 16). "Holy" surely means "set apart" from ordinary and common use. All is holy which is set apart for God.

2. Are you quite sure that you are safe inside through faith in Jesus?

3. What glorious things have been spoken of the people of God! They are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a people for a possession (1 Pet. ii. 9); the body and bride of Christ (Eph. v. 25, &c.). To be where Jesus is, at the right hand of God—this its destiny.

4. "I will mention Rahab and Babylon as among them that know Me." In these days, when the numbers of the chosen people were much reduced, the heart of the Psalmist yearned with peculiar eagerness for the ingathering of the nations, according to ancient promise. There is also here an anticipation of the new birth, which makes different nationalities one family in Jesus Christ.

5, 6. There is a reference here to citizen-rolls (Luke ii. 3). Whole hosts of nations are even now tracing all that is best in them to the religion which emanated from Mount Zion; and the time is coming when the forces of the Gentiles shall literally return to that city, which is to be the metropolis of a redeemed and rejoicing world (Isa. lx. 11).

7. The mention of singers and dancers summons to our thought the idea of a triumphal procession like Israel after the passage of the Red Sea. "All my fresh springs," as the Prayer-Book version has it (Ps. lxxxiv. 6; Is. xii. 3). Would that we were more content to be channels through which those springs might visit the world.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 5.—Psalm LXXXVIII.

This and the following Psalm constitute a pair. They were probably written during the reign of Zedekiah, but before the captivity. The nation stood on the brink of a precipice, but the city and temple had not as yet been destroyed. Mahalath Leannoth, means the distress of oppression. It is a Psalm to give instruction to all sufferers as to how to bear the griefs which lie heavily upon them. Stier says of this Psalm: "It is the most mournful of all the plaintive Psalms, yea, so wholly plaintive, without any ground of hope, that nothing like it is found in the whole of Scripture. This fact is all the more striking, that it begins with the words, 'O Lord God of my salvation,' after which the darkness grows continually thicker to the close." Surely in its deepest meaning, this Psalm is applicable only to the Prince of Sufferers.

1. In the greatest griefs, it is much to be able to say "God of my salvation"; say it, if you don't feel it, you will come to feel it.

3. O troubled soul, others have trod your path. See the blazed trees along your path. You may be sure that this is the way to the reward.

5. "Cast away among the dead" (R.V.). Or it may be that as death frees from an earthly master, so he was almost passing out of the reach of the Divine Master.

6. If we are willing to lie in the grave with Christ, we shall share his resurrection (Phil. iii. 10).

9. There are times when prayer seems unavailing, yet must we pray more earnestly (13). So has it been ever (Matt. xv. 25).

14. God does not give his reasons. What He does, we know not now, though we shall know.

18. All forsook the Man of Sorrows and fled. He knows what loneliness means. But no ledge of rock along which He leads his own is too narrow for Him to go beside them (Ps. xxiii. 6).

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 6.—Psalm LXXXIX.

This is the other side of our experience, contrasted with that set forth in the previous Psalm. As the two sides of our earth, the one in darkness, the other illuminated. This Psalm especially records God's faithfulness (1, 2, 5, 8, 24, 33). And though there is a touch of the old melancholy, especially towards the close, yet on the whole it rings with a happier tone, and glistens with the sparkle of hope.

First, there is a remembrance of God's promise which secured the perpetual existence of David's kingdom (1-37); then a complaint that the present condition of affairs is in sad contrast to all this (38-45); last, a prayer that God would interpose (46-51).

2. Mercy is a structure never done, layer on layer, stratum on stratum, tier on tier. God's faithfulness is as sure as the heavens.

3, 4. Supply, "For Thou didst say" (2 Sam. vii.). In troublous times we must cling to God's promises.

5-14. Compare Ps. xxix. 1, 2. Full of praises, from heaven and earth; from angels, men, and nature.

15-18. The blessedness of the believer.

19-37. An exquisite description of the rise and development of David's power, which was a shadow of Christ's. As the sun and moon change not, but remain faithful to their posts in the heavens, so God's covenant is unalterable, made with Christ and all who believe in Him.

38-52. In this plea for mercy we may well join, on the behalf not only of Israel, but of the Church, not only because of the insolence of our foes, but because of the dishonour done in the name of God. But even in the midst of all this sorrow, the Psalmist is able to grasp deliverance, and so the Third Book of the Psalms ends in the light of an ascription of praise.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 7.—Psalm XC.

There is every reason to accept the superscription of this Psalm as correct. It was written by Moses at the close of the forty years' wanderings, and perhaps about the same time as his other two songs (Deut. xxxii. and xxxiii.) If so, it was old when Homer sang. The imagery is all borrowed from the desert march; the desert streams soon dry; the night-watch in the camp; the short-lived growth of the grass before it is blasted by the sirocco (5). The melancholy strain is due to the incessant funerals and the aimlessness of the desert marchings.

1. God is our Home. Let us live in Him. Satan cannot enter to drag us forth.

2. Earth, our planet; World, the universe. God is above all change, because He lives in the eternal ages. There never was a period in which Jehovah was not. More permanent than the most changeless things.

3. In opposition to the eternity of God is the transitory life of men. It seems long to us as we compare it with our days; but how short, when compared with the eternity of Him who looks on a thousand years as a brief night-watch (2 Peter iii. 8).

4. "As to a very rich man a thousand sovereigns are as one penny; so, to the eternal God, a thousand years are as one day"—Bengel.

7. Moses now ascends from the melancholy fact of the brevity of life to the melancholy cause, that it is due to the wrath of God incurred by our sins (compare Gen. ii. 17, Rom. v. 12).

8. Does not this teach us that there are sins so secret that none but God detects them? But his eyes carry the light by which they see (Rev. i. 14). What a comfort to turn to the blood of Christ which cleanseth from all sin.

9. "As a sigh" (R.V., margin). This description is true of the unsaved and rebellious, but of believers we have a better description (1 Cor. vi. 11).

11. God's wrath, which abides on those who refuse to believe, is worse than those who have feared it most have ever conceived of it.

12. We should reckon our shortening days, and work harder, as the poor sempstress whose last candle is burning low (John ix. 4).

14. "Early" in life, and in each morning, "O satisfy us in the morning with thy mercy" (R.V.).

16, 17. Thy doing, thy glory, thy beauty. All these blend in Jesus. And, as we abide in Him, his deeds are done through us, his glory shines around us, his beauty adorns us (Ps. xxvii. 4).

FRIDAY, AUGUST 8.—Psalm XCI.

This Psalm is entirely general. But it is of great service to all travellers, and to those exposed to danger and hardship. It alternates between the expressions of personal trust and exhortations to trust, hence the interchange of the pronouns, "I" and "Thou." It is attributed by the old Rabbis to Moses, and indeed corresponds to his experiences on the night of the Passover. Satan misquoted verses 11 and 12 to our Lord (4).

1. "He who sits in the covert of the Most High, spends the night under the shade of the Almighty," such is a literal translation of the Hebrew.

3. Deliverance from guile and traps, as well as from the insidious pestilence of jungle and morass.

4. The wings of God! (Deut. xxxii. 11; Matt. xxiii. 37).

5-6. In each verse we have the alternations of day and night, for there is not an hour which has not its special liabilities of harm. The soldier gets a dare-devil courage from this motto: Every bullet has its billet. The believer flinches not, because his life is hidden with Christ in God, as the young kernel in the tough rind (Col. iii. 2).

9. There must be definite appropriation on our part before there can be deliverance.

18. Do we make enough of the gentle, careful ministry of the angels? (Heb. i. 14; Luke xxii. 43). But we must be certainly in God's ways, ere we can claim angel-help.

13. This reminds one of those rapturous words of our Lord (Luke x. 19, 20), and surely refers to our spiritual foes.

15. It is worth our while to be in trouble to have such a Companion. He is never so near as then (Dan. iii. 25).

SATURDAY, AUGUST 9.—Psalm XCII.

This Psalm was intended for use in the public worship of the Sabbath, on which day, according to Lev. xxiii. 3, there was held a holy convocation. It is well fitted for its work, for on such a day men ought to find leisure to consider the works of God, and to praise Him. One theme for lasting praise is God's preservation of his Church in the midst of a hostile world.

2. Perhaps at the morning and evening sacrifice. What a theme for morning and evening worship!

4. Let us learn to joy in God Himself (Rom. xi. 33). But especially on our Sabbath, let us remember the work of the Redeemer, which has made us glad for evermore.

5, 6. God so often delays the punishment of the wicked, owing to reasons hidden from our ken, that his ways are very deep to the eye of man.

10. The wild ox or buffalo (Num. xxiii. 22; Deut. xxxiii. 17). Thou enablest me to rise up with spirit, with a sense of strength, in an attitude of attack. The fresh anointing should be sought every morning (1 John ii. 27).

14. In God's trees, the strength of grace does not fail with the strength of nature. But on the contrary, St. Paul witnesses (2 Cor. iv. 11).

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, August 10.

The Rich Man and Lazarus.—Luke xvi. 19-31.

Golden Text: Mark x. 24.

This is the last of the five parables suggested by the complaint of the Pharisees (xv. 2). Jesus had justified Himself by describing the publican as like the lost sheep, the lost coin, and the lost son, and had turned upon the Pharisees themselves when describing the elder brother, the unjust steward, and the rich man. Like the first, they had justified themselves (xv. 29, xvi. 15); like the second, they had been unfaithful stewards of the commandments of God (10), and had used their position to gratify their own covetousness (13, 14); and, like the third, they had despised the publican and allowed him to lie neglected at their gate. In this parable the Lord goes further, and solemnly denounces the doom that must inevitably fall upon them (23, 24), and, in answer to their derision (14), declares their need of repentance, and the sufficiency of Moses and the prophets to lead them to it (29-31). This closing lesson of the parable is a further description of their guilt. Though the public teachers of Moses and the prophets, they were themselves disobedient (John v. 45-47).

The parable is full of solemn and impressive teaching for us also.

The two men in this life (19-21).—The proud, covetous Pharisee is here the rich man (xx. 46, 47), while the publicans who "drew near to hear" Jesus (xv. 1) are described as Lazarus. The name means God helps, and is doubtless intended to describe the character of him who bears it. There is, therefore, another contrast besides that which appears on the surface. To the rich man "the good things" of this life are everything (25); to Lazarus, who had only evil things in this life, God is everything. Nothing is wanting in the description of the rich man's prosperity—gorgeous apparel and daily feasting (19). Nor could anything be conceived worse than the condition of Lazarus. The dogs licking his sores is not an alleviation, but an aggravation of his misery (20, 21). Do not misapply the lesson. There is often no sin in being rich. Abraham, Solomon, Joseph of Arimathea, are examples of riches being associated with piety. It is only when acquired by wrong methods, or used for merely selfish purposes, or when the heart is set upon them, that riches become wrong. Yet they always bring responsibility, which Dives was evidently not careful to discharge; and they render a life of true piety more difficult (Golden Text). There is often no virtue in being poor. Sometimes poverty is the result of vice (Prov. xxiii. 21); but poverty, rightly used is an aid to piety. As among the rich there are many truly humble men of God, so among the poor there are many proud, Pharisaical spirits that are as far from the kingdom of heaven as Dives.

The change made by death (22-26).—Both died; even the rich man has no exemption from death. All his wealth cannot purchase life. Both rich and poor meet together in this matter. No burial is mentioned in connection with Lazarus. No one claimed his body. The rich man's body was no doubt honoured with a magnificent funeral (22). But note the very solemn and significant teaching. Death does not terminate their conscious existence.—As soon as this life ceases, another begins, in which the powers and faculties exercised here are continued. To see, to hear, to feel, to speak, to remember, are true of the life beyond the grave. You may bury a man's body, or throw it to the dunghill, but you do not touch him. Even a heathen knew this. Said Phaedon to Socrates: "How shall we bury you, Socrates?" "Just as you please," said Socrates, "if you can catch me." The body is not the man, but the tent, and death no more ends the life of the man than taking down the tent ends the existence of those who have occupied it (2 Cor. v. 1-4). Death introduces at once to one of two states.—One is like that of Lazarus, who is privileged with most intimate and honourable communion; the other is like that of Dives—in torment (23, 24, 25, 28). There is no reason to try and escape from this solemn teaching. Other Scriptures confirm it (xxiii. 43; 2 Cor. v. 8; Phil. i. 23). For a moment Jesus lifts the veil—what an awaking revelation He gives! These two states are fixed.—Nothing could more solemnly declare the impossibility of salvation after death than the words Jesus puts into the mouth of Abraham (26). The words become more solemnly significant when we remember Abraham's touching intercession for Sodom (Gen. xviii.) The coming of Christ, and the resurrection of the body will make a change in both the saved and the lost. Our full redemption waits for that event (Rom. viii. 23); and the judgment of the wicked before the Great White Throne (Rev. xx.) also takes place then. But there is no possibility of passing the gulf which separates the two. How dangerous become men's speculations on this subject when our Lord has spoken thus plainly!

The urgent need of repentance now.—This is the lesson of 27-31. The rich man's concern for his brethren (27) is open to various inferences. Possibly it is prompted by recollections of his own unfaithfulness toward them, and the aggravation of his anguish which their presence would mean. The suggestion that Lazarus should go and warn them, and the idea that such a messenger would lead them to repent (27, 30), implies a complaint that such means had not been used with him, and is afterwards proved to be fallacious (John xi. 46; xii. 10, 11). The reply of Jesus—through Abraham—is that the Word of God is sufficient (29, 31). Men do not want a more solemn message, nor a more remarkable messenger, but the disposition to accept the message already sent. The present Gospel proclamation is from One who "was dead, but is alive for evermore." No other is needed for our repentance. If this fails, we are left to hopeless despair.

Obituary.

M. AUGUSTIN BOST.

This well-known Swiss pastor has just passed away at Geneva, aged 75. He was a member of a highly-respected Protestant family, the founder of the Homes at Laforce being his brother. M. Bost was widely known as the author of Biblical and ecclesiastical dictionaries.

MADAME FOULQUIER.

Christian effort in Paris could ill afford the loss of this lady, who has for years engaged in works of mercy and faith. She took a special interest in rescuing neglected children, whom she not only protected from temporal evil but pointed to the Saviour of sinners. The Methodists specially miss her counsel and support.

PASTOR TH. MARZIALS.

For some years M. Marzials has carried on Christian work in the Drôme Valley, France. Of late he has been in enfeebled health, and on July 14 fell asleep, in his eighty-first year. Mme. Marzials, who is known to Christian workers in England, has for some time had command of the Mission and its agencies, which have Barnave for their centre.

PROFESSOR LOUIS DURAND.

The Academy of Lausanne has sustained a serious loss by the death of M. Louis Durand, Professor of Theology, aged 73. As a preacher, writer, and artist, he was held in widespread esteem. He was a musician as well as a theologian, a painter as well as an authority on ecclesiastical questions. As a youth he studied under Vinet, and showed much of his spirit and power.

MR. GEORGE BLACK.

Mr. George Black, J.P., of Berwick-on-Tweed, entered into rest on July 11, in his sixty-second year. In him is lost a staunch supporter of evangelical truth, and an uncompromising opponent of the "Down-Grade" movement. The prayers of our readers are earnestly requested on behalf of an invalid widow and only son, that they may be divinely supported under their very heavy bereavement.

REV. DR. R. B. WELCH.

The Presbyterian Churches of the United States are mourning the loss of Professor Ransom Bethune Welch. After some years of pastoral work, he was called to the Chair of Rhetoric and English Literature in Union College. Here he did excellent service for about sixteen years, and until called to Auburn Theological Seminary, as Professor of Christian Theology, in 1876, Prof. Welch was indefatigable in the discharge of his Seminary duties, and thorough in his methods. He was a delegate to the Presbyterian Alliance in Belfast in 1884, and London in 1888, and also to the Centennial Conference of Foreign Missions in London, the same year. Among his more permanent writings are "Faith and Modern Thought," and "Outlines of Christian Theology."

MISS ELLEN LUCY BINNEY.

This lady, daughter of Rev. Hubert Binney, and sister of the late Bishop of Nova Scotia, died on July 10, at Margate. She will be sorely missed by all whose privilege it was to know her, poor as well as rich. Her large secret alms were revealed only to One, but it was evident to all that on principle she denied herself the commonest luxuries, and lived more simply than many with one tenth of her means, that she might have the more to impart to others, and this not in schemes of mere philanthropy, but ever on her Father's business, as a steward of his bounty, that she might draw souls to Christ. But what will be missed more than her unostentatious alms, is the sympathy of her tender and feeling heart, responding to every form of sorrow and distress which she met, while the example of her deep piety and life of humble, practical Christianity, will long be a hallowed memory in the hearts of her sorrowing friends.

MR. R. C. L. BEVAN.

This well-known banker, philanthropist, and earnest evangelical Churchman, died at his residence, Trent Park, Hertfordshire, on Tuesday evening, July 22, having attained to the good old age of eighty-one and a half years. The funeral took place on Saturday afternoon at Trent Church, which the deceased erected on his estate some years ago. For over sixty years associated with the great business in the City of London, the deceased had for some time been unable to attend personally at the bank owing to ill-health. At the time of his death he was chairman of the Committee of Bankers.

In summer-like weather, the scene in Trent Park on Saturday afternoon was one long to be remembered by those who were present. A large and representative gathering of members of various missionary and other societies waited on the green sward outside the mansion to take their appointed place in the procession to the church. The children and near relatives of the deceased came first; and next followed partners and chief employés at the bank, personal friends, tenants, agents, upper servants, representatives of Christian societies, household servants and labourers. The religious service was conducted by Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, of St. Paul's, Onslow-square, and Rev. Gustavus Bosanquet, of Clophill, Bedfordshire, who is a nephew of the deceased. No hymns were sung, and no address was given, no word being spoken at all beyond the burial service of the Church of England. The coffin, which was covered with many beautiful wreaths, bore the simple inscription: "Robert Cooper Lee Bevan, died 22nd of July, 1890, aged 81 years." Though nothing was said about the deceased at the grave, Rev. Horace Meyer was to preach a funeral sermon at Trent Church on Sunday morning.

Writing to a local paper, Rev. H. J. Browne, vicar of Christ Church, Barnet, points out that while Mr. Bevan was ever strictly uncompromising in adhering to what he knew to be right, the chief characteristic of his later years was a remarkable growth of meekness of character. "Although possessed of large wealth and influence," says Mr. Browne, "I think I never met a man of humbler or less self-laudatory spirit. Nobody can form any estimate of the numerous acts of generosity and kindness which are associated with this dear man's memory." One of the last acts of Mr. Bevan's life was to inspect the local Victoria Hospital at Barnet. All who ever had the privilege of being associated with the late banker feel that they have indeed lost a friend: but many of these will find consolation in the fact that the new master of Trent Park will follow in his honoured father's steps. As the vicar adds: "From the genuine and warm-hearted sympathy which Mr. and Mrs. Frank Bevan have so kindly and practically manifested towards the people of our town, we have nothing but bright and pleasant feelings to associate with the prospect." Many friends outside of Barnet will also rejoice in this prospect; while the good word of Scripture shall once more be verified, "The righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance."

Mr. Samuel Sims, well-known as a temperance worker amongst military men, has opened Ocean View, Clacton-on-Sea, Essex, as a temperance boarding-house.

Epileptic Home, Winton House, Pevensey Bay near Hastings.—There is an accumulated debt of £100 on this Home, which was formerly situate at Polegate. The cases received are such as many other institutions refuse. The superintendent, Mrs. A. E. Whitlock, writes:—"I earnestly pray for help; otherwise the Home must be closed."

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Bishop of Swansea on Sunday opened a new church for Welsh services in St. Mary's parish, Paddington, and preached twice in Welsh.

The Ven. the Archdeacon of London (Dr. Sinclair) attended and was the preacher at an open-air service held on Monday afternoon in St. Botolph's Churchyard, Aldersgate, City.

On Monday night, at the Memorial Hall, Islington, the Bishop of London presided over an important conference of local clergy and laity on the best means of relieving the necessitous poor.

The Dean of Norwich (says The British Weekly) is making himself very popular with all classes in his new sphere, and, as in Liverpool, is rapidly gaining the ear of the people. He has announced that all seats in the Cathedral are to be free and unappropriated, special provision being made for aged and deaf people. He has also commenced popular Sunday afternoon services for the people, at which earnest Gospel addresses are given.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. Dr. Jefferis, late of Sydney, has accepted an invitation to the Pastorate of New College Congregational Chapel.

Rev. Dr. Goodrich, the well-known Glasgow Congregational minister, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Chorlton-road Congregational Church, Manchester, vacant by the death of the late Rev. Dr. Macfadyen.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. R. Milne, assistant Free Church minister at Dundee, has accepted a call to the pastorate at South Kensington, in succession to Dr. Verner White.

Rev. John McNeill, the popular minister of Regent-square Church, who only came to London from Edinburgh about eighteen months ago, has received a pressing invitation to accept the pastorate of Westminster Congregational Chapel. Overtures having been made to this end on three separate occasions, Mr. McNeill is giving the thrice-repeated call his serious consideration, especially as this position would open to him a larger sphere for the exercise of his special gifts. Mr. McNeill is leaving the matter in abeyance until October.

BAPTIST.

A series of six pleasant Sunday afternoon services for the people were held at Regent's-park Chapel in connection with the men's Bible-class, from June 15 to July 20. The attendances averaged from 300 to 400.

The County Baptist Associations in Wales have recently held their annual meetings. "Two or three of the presidents of the associations," says a correspondent of The Baptist, "this year took for their subject the great need to cultivate a higher spiritual life in the churches. This proves that the evil of unspirituality is widespread; but this feeling after God is the breaking of the dawn. The dayspring will visit us, and the shadows will flee away."

At the annual meetings of the North Wales Baptist College, the principal, Rev. Dr. Gethin Davies, announced that Mr. Richard Cory had handed over to the trustees of the institution three large endowments: a donation of £2000 towards the endowment of the North Wales College University Chair; a donation of £1500 towards the endowments of the president's home mission scheme; and a donation of £500 towards the maintenance of evangelists on the lines of the constitution.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Those who have read accounts of the very successful Peace Congress, reported in THE CHRISTIAN and other journals, may have noticed how large a proportion of the leading spirits were Friends. The Friends' Church sent delegates, and can only feel satisfaction with the result.

William W. Davidson, of Brookfield, acceptably attended the late Quarterly Meeting of Munster province, in Limerick. Owing, however, to the absence of so many Friends on holiday, the meeting was small. The diminishing population and other causes have sadly operated in the numerical reduction of Friends in the southern province.

The Friends' Review, of July 10, describes an effort now in hand to establish a Friends' school for boys in Japan. It is certain that the wise policy of establishing select and guarded boarding schools has done much for the Society in England and America, so much so, indeed, that many parents who are not Friends are having their children educated at their schools. We can, therefore, only wish the project every success. Joseph Casand and wife are to visit America on the subject.

New England Yearly Meeting has suffered much in past years from the prevalence of an unhealthy conservatism, and, instead of progress and health, langour or decay has reigned. But The Christian Worker, of July 3, describes the recent Yearly Meeting as a turning-point in that body:—"The liberal elements in our church were enabled to prevail as never before." And whereas last year 165 dollars were raised; this year 600 dollars, "in the face of the Yearly Meeting," were subscribed for evangelistic work. There was a small increase of membership.

METHODIST.

Rev. J. G. Gregory, incumbent of Emmanuel Church, Brighton, has been preaching in the Bible Christian schoolroom in that town. His discourse was based on the words, "As ye have received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in Him"; and it was a forcible appeal to the Bible Christians to remain loyal to Christ in these difficult times.

By the death of Rev. W. L. Binks, the Wesleyan Church loses a veteran minister. Mr. Binks was originally a Roman Catholic, but early in life became a Protestant of the finest type. Mr. Binks had been a missionary in Demerara, in the West Indies, and in Mahaica, British Guiana. After nine years' toil in these fields, he returned to England. In 1855 he left for Melbourne, and ever since has been a leading and popular minister in the Australian colonies. Mr. Binks was the first President of the South Australian Conference.

Extensive mission premises, which the Committee for the extension of Methodism in Newcastle-upon-Tyne have been erecting in the midst of the great artisan population of Elswick, are now completed. They comprise a large hall, with side and end galleries, capable of seating 900 persons; lecture-hall to accommodate 450, infants' class-room, vestries, gymnasium, with cloak-rooms and lavatories; a caretaker's-house, and other offices. At the opening service Rev. F. L. Wiseman heartily commended such enterprises as this, where the knowledge that could not pass away would be brought within the reach of all.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. J. P. Thorne, vicar of St. Bede's, Hartington-road, Liverpool.—Mrs. Jane Frances Willard, relict of the late Dr. Willard, of Auburn, New York, known far and wide for her liberal support of Christian work.—Rev. J. M. Sayers, Irish Methodist minister, and late chaplain to the forces at the Curragh Camp.—Rev. Andrew Rowand, senior minister of the Free Church, Wallacetown-on-Ayr.—Rev. John Thomas, an aged supernumerary Wesleyan minister, residing at Ealing.

THE LORD'S DAY OBSERVANCE SOCIETY has addressed a respectful letter to the Queen, pleading with Her Majesty not to continue the Sunday bands at Windsor. The Society has also sent a protest to the Chief Commissioner of Works against the use of his official authority to encourage the free Sunday party at Greenwich Park and elsewhere in places managed by his department.

BRAZIL INLAND MISSION.—DEAR SIR,—Will you kindly allow me, through your paper, to thank very warmly all the readers of THE CHRISTIAN who so kindly subscribed to the above Mission. We have had a very pleasant voyage so far, and have held meetings of some kind nearly every night, in English or Portuguese. Several souls are under deep conviction, and the Lord is blessing us in many ways. Shall hope to write you from Rio. We ask the prayers of God's people.—Yours in Him, Minas Geraes, Brazil. E. H. SOPER.

MORE OF CHRIST.—Preacher and people, we need more of Christ. More of Christ would make that sad home bright, that wavering soul steadfast, that breaking heart happy, that mourning spirit glad, that burdened conscience light, that selfish nature generous, and make those who are parted in enmity stand with clasped and forgiving hands. More of Christ would smite down sectarian walls, and win outcasts to the fold. More of Christ is what we all want in our hearts and homes, in our business and politics, in our schools and universities, in our churches and pulpits.

Canon Fleming.

EXAMINATION IN CHRISTIAN EVIDENCES.—The books selected by the Christian Evidence Society for their examination next spring are as follow:—Gibson's "Rock versus Sand," Row's "Manual of Christian Evidences," Redford's "Handbook of Christian Evidence," Flint's "Theism," Arthur's "Difference between Physical and Moral Law," Redford's "Prophecy," Westcott's "Bible in the Church," and Kennedy's "Divine Book." There is no restriction of sex, age, or religious denomination. Any persons may offer themselves as candidates for examination. Copies of the regulations may now be obtained from the secretaries of the Society, 13, Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C.

Soldiers' Home, Freshwater.—A few weeks back an appeal on behalf of a Soldiers' Home, Freshwater, Isle of Wight, was made in this paper, and Major Playfair's name given by mistake for that of Colonel Walkey's as being interested in the scheme. Will any friends who may not have received answers to their letters kindly accept this apology? Information required respecting the same, and any desirous of helping forward this effort, will be gratefully acknowledged by Miss Smith, Myrtle Cottage, Freshwater, Isle of Wight.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

SWITZERLAND.—A statue has been erected at Yverdon in memory of Henri Pestalozzi, the celebrated educationist. Born at Zurich in 1746, this man spent his entire life in the instruction of children and the relief of the poor. He resided for twenty years at Yverdon, and on the occasion of the unveiling of the statue, which represents him in the attitude of interrogating two children, a thousand little ones sang a cantata in his honour.

BELGIUM. — The Belgian Christian Missionary Church has at the present time 27 churches and stations, with 64 other places regularly evangelised. There are 44 temples or hired halls, 52 Sunday-schools, 21 pastors, 5 evangelists, and 11 Scripture-readers and colporteurs. During last year 170,650 tracts were distributed in the course of work which fully deserves the support of those who desire the enlightenment of Roman Catholics in the simple truths of the Gospel.

EVANGELISATION IN FRANCE.—M. Réveillaud, in Le Signal, impresses upon French Protestants the great need of aggressive testimony, maintaining that it is high time that the subject occupied first place in the deliberations of church councils and organisations. Calling attention to the most formal of all the Master's commands, "Preach the Gospel to every creature," he says: "Until now our synods have, of necessity, been synods of reorganisation. It is needful that in future they should be the grand assize of the evangelistic work and religious life of our reorganised churches."

PARIS.—M. Boulan, formerly a chamberlain of the Pope, has associated himself with the Gallican Church, of which M. Loyson (Père Hyacinthe) is the leading spirit. The Church is under the jurisdiction of Bishop Cox, of Buffalo, New York, to whom M. Boulan is well known, owing to his having previously been "vicar apostolic" of the Roman Catholic Church in Canada.—Of 56,773 burials in Paris during last year, 10,580 took place without any religious ceremony. It is in the poorest districts that these interments are the most numerous. One contributing cause of their large number is the fact that the Roman Catholic priests make exorbitant charges for attending funerals, and another is that the atheistic societies carry forward their propaganda by giving premiums to the poor for having their dead buried with what are called "civil rites."

ZAMBESIA.—M. F. Coillard, in the Journal des Missions Evangéliques, reports interesting progress in his work at Séfula, on the Zambesi. Among his pupils is Litia, the son of King Léwanika. Thinking that the lad would not be willing to submit to discipline, M. Coillard refused for some time to take him in. Such, however, was the boy's thirst for knowledge that he said, "If you take me I will not be a prince, but a servant." Since being received, Litia has shown himself well endowed mentally, and willing to do the most menial things in order to please M. Coillard, who writes: "I commend this dear lad to the prayers of friends of our work." As for King Léwanika, it is believed that God has inclined his heart towards the Gospel. The King would, if he could, compel his people to alter their degraded way of life. He has, in fact, proposed very rigorous measures for dealing with adulterers, drunkards, and persons guilty of witchcraft. M. Coillard asks for earnest prayer to God that the King may heartily and openly embrace the Gospel.

ROMANISM IN CANADA.—Rev. A. Mackay, of Montreal, Canada, complains that when the "host" was recently carried through Montreal everyone was supposed to kneel as it passed. Some children who failed to do so were ordered to kneel by the policeman, and upon their declining to do so were pushed roughly to the ground by that functionary.

A SINGULAR SCENE was witnessed in the Royal Albert Docks on Monday, when, in celebration of a religious festival, the whole of the Mohammedan Calashes, sailors, and boys in the employ of the P. and O. Company and the British India Company, numbering several hundreds, and clad in many-coloured holiday attire, preceded by a banner and Mohammedan priests chanting hymns, marched in procession round the docks. The event is an annual one, and after the religious proceedings the remainder of the day is given up to enjoyment, the neighbouring streets being gay in white vestments, gorgeous turbans, and coloured sashes.

SOLDIERS AT THE CAPE. — Miss Hilder writes in The South African Pioneer:—This Home in Cape Town has been doing well—better since the North Staffordshire arrived. The average attendance has been good. The Bible-classes are never large, but they have been much appreciated by those attending them, and the Lord has been present to bless; so the work has been prospered by Him, and backsliders have come back and others aroused to see their danger. Will the Lord's people continue to pray for this work?—Ps. cxxii. 6. We are losing the North Staffordshire in August, orders having come out for their removal to Mauritius. May the Lord be with them there to bring many more to join the ranks of the Captain of our Salvation.

"This world was once too bright."

THIS world was once too bright—
For at my side was one
Who filled my home with light,
As from meridian sun!

So bright that home—it seemed
My Heav'n were here on earth;
Almost at times I deemed
God's Heav'n of lesser worth.

Nay—there were even days
When faith looked up on high,
And through these earth-born rays
Scarce could her Lord descry!

'Tis past—quenched is my light,
All now is darkness here!
But Heav'n above is bright—
And Thou, O Christ, art near!

Yes—I behold Thee now—
No glare of earth between;
My Light, my Sun art Thou—
In all Thy glory seen!

And at Thy side—not mine—
My loved one, too, I see,
Clad in the light divine,
That beams, dear Lord, from Thee!

Not lost—but in Thy care,
Till by and by we meet;
Enough—'Tis hard to bear,
'Tis dark! But Hope is sweet!

Ah! Lord—'twas all in love,
Thou doest only right,
My Heav'n is now above,
Not here, but there, is light!

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on the following:—Gospel tent work in connection with the Forfarshire Christian Union.——A tent mission at Milford, August 6 to 17, by Mr. W. Mapstone.——An eighteen days' tent mission, at Tidyford, Devon.

RELIGIOUS INTOLERANCE IN ARKLOW.—The Roman Catholics of this Wicklow town seem determined to show the true anti-Christian spirit. They are opposing open-air preaching with a temper as disgraceful to themselves as it is unpleasant for their Protestant neighbours. Recently on a Sunday afternoon, Rev. R. J. Hallowes, rector, and his curate, Mr. Harrison, took up their stand on ground opposite the Tinnahask schoolhouse, but they were hooted and abused in various ways. Rev. J. Harper, Methodist minister, with a number of sympathising friends, were similarly treated. A correspondent writes: "Every effort had been made to avoid giving offence, but it seems nothing short of the surrender of a legal right and religious liberty exercised in every part of the civilised world will satisfy the intolerant and tyrannical demands of the Roman Catholics of Arklow." We trust our persecuted friends will not be menaced into silence, but that, with the prayers and encouragement of fellow-labourers, they will continue with all boldness to preach the Word.

WORLD-FAMED
GALVANIC BELTS,
FOR the CURE of NERVOUS DISEASES,
HAVE RECEIVED TESTIMONIALS from over
FIFTY MEMBERS of the ROYAL COLLEGE of PHYSICIANS of LONDON, including THREE PHYSICIANS to
HER MAJESTY the QUEEN.

RECENT TESTIMONIALS.

GALVANISM v. NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

Bootle, near Liverpool, July 14, 1890.

Dear Sir,—It affords me much pleasure to inform you that I have derived much benefit from your treatment, and, although I do not want my name published, you may refer inquirers to me at any time.—Yours truly, E. B. J.

Mr. J. L. Pulvermacher, 194, Regent-street, London, W.

GALVANISM v. KIDNEY DISEASE AND NEURALGIA.

Berry-street, Wolverhampton, July 9, 1890.

Dear Sir,—My friend, for whom I purchased your Belt, was suffering from Kidney Disorder, and although the time is so short, he already feels benefit from wearing it. The following, however, he particularly wishes me to mention. He lent the Belt to a friend who had been suffering a long time from Neuralgia, and after wearing it for one night the pain has altogether ceased. This patient had tried a great many remedies without getting any relief, and I am confident it will lead to other orders.—Yours faithfully, M. Mills.

Mr. J. L. Pulvermacher, 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. EXTREME NERVOUS DEPRESSION.

Moor Allerton, Leeds, July 5, 1890.

Gentlemen,—I have great pleasure in volunteering a testimonial in favour of your galvanic appliances.

For more than ten years I have suffered from acute nervous headaches and severe nervous depression, taking away all pleasure in life and almost unfitting me for business pursuits.

Doctors of eminence have prescribed for me without avail, and a long sea voyage had not the desired result.

Last autumn I commenced to use your combined Bands and Battery, with the most satisfactory results. My headaches gradually diminished, and my nerve force and energy have returned. I consider your appliances in my case to be invaluable, and I do not hesitate to recommend them.

I prefer that you should not publish my name, but you can refer anyone to me whom you may think fit.—Yours obediently, W. J. C.

Messrs. J. L. Pulvermacher & Co., 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. LOCAL WEAKNESS.

Liverpool, June 20, 1890.

Dear Sir,—You will be pleased to hear that I am regaining my health and vigour fast, and have lost all the pain in the back. Your treatment has indeed been to me the pearl of great price, and has succeeded in stopping the waste and decay from which I was suffering. I will answer any inquirer through you, and beg to remain,

Yours truly, J. F.

Mr. J. L. Pulvermacher, 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

Cross-street, Sudbury, Suffolk, June 19, 1890.

Dear Sir,—Since I purchased your Galvanic Belt my health has greatly improved, and I do not catch cold as I used to. I am also able to undertake extra duty without fatigue, and will testify by private letter to any inquirer.

Yours very truly, R. Day.

Messrs. Pulvermacher & Co., 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

The distressing symptoms of NERVOUS EXHAUSTION, LOSS of MUSCULAR POWER, RHEUMATISM, SCIATICA, PARALYSIS, EPILEPSY, &c., are speedily removed by means of PULVERMACHER'S world-famed GALVANIC BELTS, which convey the electric current direct to the affected parts, gradually stimulating and strengthening all the nerves and muscles, and speedily arresting all symptoms of premature waste and decay.

"It is a most masterly exposure of what Popery really is; and what it can do when it has the upper hand. The perusal of this book should form part of the education of our youth. Heads of families should purchase it for their children to read. Popery could find no favour wherever Foxe's Martyrs is studied."
Christian Progress.

"We are pleased to see the 'Book of Martyrs' well to the front. It is a great thing to have such a copy of Foxe in the market at 10s. 6d. We wish Messrs. Morgan & Scott an immediate sale of the present issue, which is marvellously cheap."—The Sword and Trowel.

MR. GEORGE THOS. CONGREVE,

Coombe Lodge, Peckham, S.E.

ONE RECENT CASE WILL BE GIVEN IN THIS JOURNAL EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

(THIRTY-FOURTH SERIES.)

ADVANCED CONSUMPTION—CASE of Mr. LESSIER, 94, RUE DE DUNKERQUE, PARIS, and LETTER of a FRENCH PHYSICIAN.

This remarkable case of recovery is thus certified by an eminent French physician, Dr. THIERRY-MIEG, who writes me:—"Mr. Lessier was confined to bed with profuse sweats and expectoration, and was considered incurable. He took your medicine for a few months and got perfectly well. He regrets not having sent you an account of his final recovery before."

Mr. Lessier, of the Army and Navy Stores, consulted me a little more than two years ago. Dr. M. had pronounced the case to be phthisis. Another doctor had given him up to die. The case was strongly marked with every symptom of decline.

The patient came to stay for a time at St. Leonards. Five personal consultations took place, beside frequent letters. Gradual improvements were noted in my book as follows:—

(In four months.) "Disease quiescent"; "no bronchitis now"; "patient stronger, and has gained flesh."

Again: "Much better on the whole; only some rough breathing now in the right upper lobe."

From Paris (to which the patient returned) I had several letters reporting progress to recovery. "I have no cough now," he says. "Your medicine has also been very useful to members of my family, and your liniment is most valuable." After this twelve months elapsed, and I had forgotten the case, until Dr. M.'s letter of 5th April last (quoted above), caused me to refer to it in my patients' book.

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

PRESS NOTICES.

"'THE HERALD OF MERCY' ought to be very widely spread in the homes of the poor, where we are certain it would meet with a hearty welcome. To ministers and visitors we recommend it as one of the best works we know."

Preacher's Analyst.

"This excellent magazine is in every respect worthy of its originator and of its name. It contains a great variety of interesting and instructive articles, both in prose and verse, all illustrative of some important truth; but its principal aim seems to show the fulness and freeness of God's mercy, and the simplicity of the way of salvation. We heartily recommend it."

Wesleyan S. S. Magazine.

PRESS NOTICES.

"This 'HERALD' ought to be specially welcome. The illustrations that abound on every page will make Gospel truth attractive to the eye as well as to the heart, and the simple poetry by different writers ought to help many weary souls. We most heartily wish 'God speed' to 'The Herald of Mercy.'"—Congregational Magazine.

"Few periodicals succeed in preserving their original fervour as 'The Herald of Mercy.' The editor has gathered around him a staff of writers who are animated by the same spirit which shone so brightly in Duncan Matheson. Primarily designed for humble homes, 'The Herald' is sure of a welcome in the mansion as well as the cottage."—Christian Leader.

Tinted Covers, 6d.; Cloth Boards, 1s.

Notes from Keswick

By Rev. W. HASLAM, M.A.

Author of "From Death into Life;" "Yet Not I;" &c., &c.

HOW TO BE CLEANSED.
HOW TO BE STRONG.
HOW TO "KNOW."
HOW TO BE KEPT.
HOW TO WORK.
HOW TO BE A SOLDIER.
HOW TO GET THE VICTORY.
HOW TO BE "ONE."
HOW TO HAVE THE PEACE OF GOD.
HOW TO HAVE THE FULNESS OF JOY.

"In these papers I have endeavoured (by giving actual cases as illustrations) to show how we may, as living believers, enter into the 'life more abundant'—which is indeed the life of Christ, as distinguished from the spiritual vitality which we receive at conversion."—Introduction.

"The Christian" Bible Readings

NOTES and READINGS on the FIVE BOOKS of MOSES—

GENESIS.
EXODUS. NUMBERS.
LEVITICUS. DEUTERONOMY.

Tinted covers, 1s. Cl. limp, 1s. 6d. Cl., Bevelled bds., Gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

"The Readings are short, simple, and lucid helps to Bible study. Admirable comments for family worship and private devotion. Used well, they will give 'light on the daily path.'"—The Cambridgeshire Congregational Magazine.

"We are quite charmed with this volume; so much so that when we commenced to read it we were obliged to finish it; it was so fascinating. It is a valuable addition to the literature already published on the Old Testament. All who want to understand the Pentateuch should get this book and study it carefully."

Irish Congregational Magazine.

NEW WORK by REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

Tried by Fire:

EXPOSITIONS OF THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PETER.

Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.; Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"Delivered first as Expositions in the course of my stated ministry, and in pursuance of my constant custom, they were afterwards published week by week in the pages of The Christian; and in response to very many requests are here preserved in a permanent form.

"Written amid the multiplied engagements of a busy life, it would be impossible to estimate the benefit to heart and thought by bending over these translucent depths of sacred truth—so calm, so still, so profound, so counteractive of life's feverish haste: and it is my earnest hope that these Expositions may pass on to others some of the blessedness which their preparation has brought to myself."

Extract from Preface.

"These discourses are marked by vigorous language, by spiritual thought, and by a high and holy purpose. They are practical rather than critical; and we have no doubt the book will help to promote the Christian Life."—Methodist Times.

"Many of these expositions have already greatly interested us; and we are glad to see them reprinted. There is in them such evident sincerity of soul—such simplicity, earnestness, and beauty—as to charm the devout and thoughtful reader. Some features of the work especially strike us, such as the ease, accuracy, and freedom with which the word 'elect' is treated (page 13); the many indications of careful, exegetical reading shown in passages of great beauty, as on pages 24, 38, 48, and elsewhere. In fact, we can scarcely turn over a leaf without finding some passages of intense force and of touching tenderness."

Sunday School Chronicle.

"The papers forming this volume having recently appeared in 'THE CHRISTIAN,' have doubtless been read with interest by many of our readers, from some of whom we have received grateful testimony to the consolation and help they have proved to them while passing through seasons of severe suffering and trial. The book is written in the author's well-known thoughtful and forcible style, presenting the truth both in an expository and practical manner. We warmly commend the work."

Footsteps of Truth.

"The popularity of Mr. Meyer's Expositions is a good sign of the times. This, the latest, is one of the best, and is full of tender Christian wisdom. There are many unobtrusive signs of thought and culture throughout; but the chief charm of the book is its earnest simplicity."—British Weekly, July 11, 1890.

"It is as fine a collection of Sacred Airs as can anywhere be found. All the Hymns and the Tunes are beautiful, impressive, gracious; and the rendering of them, and the hearing them sung in private or public alike, have led many to change their whole course of life."
Oldham Chronicle.

"Of this Sacred Song Book it is scarcely needful for us to say a word. Thousands have listened and thousands have sung them, and will retain their good impressions when all 'the mists have rolled away.' "—Baptist Messenger.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the late Sir George Burns, Bart.

The Roman Catholics continue to harass Dr. Barnardo, and not without a measure of success do they claim children who have become inmates of the Stepney Homes. On Thursday last week Mr. Justice Kay directed that a boy named Murphy should be delivered into the custody of the Earl of Denbigh, to be brought up as a Romanist. The lad's parents were both Roman Catholics, but it was proved that for six years the child had been under Protestant influence, with the approval of his mother whose second husband was a Protestant. The lad was questioned by the judge, and summarily handed over to the Romanists, in order that, to use Justice Kay's words, he might be "brought up in the religion of his father."

The judge was needlessly sarcastic in his remarks upon the religious controversy involved. He said:—

> On the one side was an Earl and on the other an ex-Lord Mayor (Sir R. N. Fowler), willing to act as guardians. If it were not a question of religion, he supposed neither of them would take any interest in the matter. It was a way of promoting the Kingdom of Heaven, no doubt.

This ignoring of great principles is according to the spirit of the times. Certain it is, that Dr. Barnardo would not have been justified in handing the boy over to Lord Denbigh. The judge has done so, and with him lies the responsibility as to the boy's future. When it was stated on Dr. Barnardo's behalf that the lad desired to be educated as a Protestant the judge ridiculed the idea, saying that a child of thirteen could have no pronounced opinions upon dogmatic points; but when, later on, in conversation with the judge, the boy expressed a preference to be taken to a Roman Catholic school, Justice Kay, with remarkable inconsistency, did not hesitate to allow the lad to have "opinions on dogmatic points." It is difficult to see how the lad could in the second case have expressed a more intelligent desire than in the first.

In a recent sermon preached in London, the Bishop of Lincoln lamented that "the sacrament of the altar" had been attacked, and the expression of "true doctrine" hindered, but saw cause for congratulation in the fact that "never were more communions made nor more frequent celebrations offered." But this frequent and growing insistence upon the Lord's Supper as a sacrifice—needing to be continually offered, and therefore requiring a "priest"—the exaggeration of the benefits conferred by it, its exaltation as the great if not the only means of spiritual nourishment, the substitution of it for the work of the Holy Spirit—all these are but part of the Ritualistic plan whereby, as far as possible, the Church of England is to be assimilated to that of Rome. It practically means the setting up of the idolatrous Mass in the place of the simple ceremony and festival of loving "remembrance" instituted by our Lord. The Bishop further averred that no storm would make "the church" surrender the doctrine and practice of confession and absolution.

For this deadly, soul-destroying system of confession and absolution as propounded by the Ritualists, where is the foundation in Scripture—which must be the ultimate rule of faith and the supreme court of appeal? Certainly not in Matt. xvi. 19 when read by the light of Matt. xviii. 18. Not into the ears of any earthly priest must our sins and griefs be poured out, but rather submitted only to the eye of Christ Himself, the one great High Priest, who alone can "make reconciliation for the sins of the people," who alone can lead from pardon to purity and peace. "I said, I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord: and Thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin."

If the full manifestation of evil did not tend ofttimes to its destruction, we might be appalled by reason of the drift of high ritual, as shown in a paper on the subject in the current Contemporary Review. The writer—Rev. R. E. Bartlett—goes further in the way of Church comprehension than the evangelicals; but even he sees causes for alarm in certain "Instructions" now being circulated among the younger clergy of the Anglican Church. These instructions assume that the compilers of the Prayer-book presupposed the continuance of the Mass. We give a few of the prayers which are to be used:—

> "O most loving Lord Jesu Christ, by the merits of the most blessed Virgin Mary, Thy mother and all the saints, I entreat Thee to teach me."—"Hail, Mary, full of grace...Mother of God, pray for us."—"Receive, O Holy Trinity, this oblation which I, an unworthy sinner, offer to Thine honour, and in reverence of blessed Mary."—"This unspotted sacrifice we offer to Thee in the first place for Thy Holy Catholic Church...and also for Thy servant our Pope N., our Bishop N., our Sovereign N.," &c.

There is henceforth to be no reservation in designating the Communion "The Mass." The "Instructions" lay down elaborate rules of posture and genuflexion after the Romanist model. Certainly men must have awfully drugged their understanding before advocating such practices in the Reformed Church of England, and they make the future of the Church a very anxious problem. But what we have to do is indignantly to protest against these things as in any sense authorised by inspired Scripture, and to mourn over their deplorable effect on thoughtful Englishmen. Surely a crisis must come. As the clerical writer of the article says, "This condition of high ritual cannot be prolonged."

The great dock strike of last year, the recent disturbance among the police, the agitation in the Postal service, and the refusal of the soldiers in the Guards to obey orders, following so closely upon each other, are calculated to arouse painfully suggestive reflections, if not forebodings. All these and similar movements are but the outward and visible sign of a sinister spirit of discontent. A general feeling of restlessness is one of the characteristics of these days, and the main thought with too many of all classes seems to be to grasp as much as possible of the things of this life without regard to anything beyond. True, the above difficulties were dealt with before the smoke became a flame, but it may seriously be doubted whether the remedies applied have reached the core of the evil.

The fact is, that no readjustment of the relations between the various classes which make up society will be of any permanent avail until the individuals comprising these classes are changed in heart, and thought, and feeling; and this can only be brought about by the operation of the Gospel, pure and simple. It has been well said, "When men come into the right place in relation to God, they may be trusted, within reasonable time, to fall into the right places in relation to each other."

If the growth of the Drink Bill in these islands is so remarkably painful to all those who have the best interests of the people at heart, some consolation may be found in the fact that there is a great decrease in the New Zealand expenditure upon intoxicants. In this case the younger country is setting the parent land a noble example.

In some sections of American society, too, there is a growing feeling against the drink trade, and the General Conference of the American Methodist Episcopal Church has just decided that for a member of that Church to sign a petition for a licence shall be deemed an act not, as heretofore, of imprudence only, but of immorality.

The persecution of the Jews in Russia is developing in intensity, and some of the details which have reached us during the past few days remind one very forcibly of the cruelties of the Middle Ages. Recently the Prefects of Odessa and Mohiloff were instructed that Jews charged with arrogant behaviour should be refused trial before justices, and in pursuance of this some of the most respectable Jewish inhabitants have been beaten in public by order of the prefects. In one place a Jewish boy was terribly punished, the word "thief" being burned in his face, and his features being mangled and disfigured. Sooner or later the matter must receive the attention of other nations. There can be but little doubt that, as The Times says, the object of these edicts, which involve the ruin of the artisan, the farmer, and the professional man, and the immediate expulsion of a million persons from their homes, is the total extermination of the four millions of Jews in Russia. The effect of such an exodus upon the English working population, and the responsibility which it will entail upon the more favoured Jews, and upon the Christians of this country, have been pointed out at various times in these columns. Russia in her despotism may forget or ignore the fact that "the Most High ruleth in the kingdoms of men"; but that this truth will ultimately be brought home to her in her own overthrow, and in the deliverance of his chosen people, is revealed by the "sure word of prophecy." "Though the mills of God grind slowly, yet they grind exceeding small."

The Sydney correspondent of The Nonconformist writes of a notable triumph in that city of earnest men who had felt deeply about the desecration of the Sabbath, and had regretted their powerlessness. In theatres, music-halls, and other places of amusements, Sunday concerts, with songs neither sacred nor classic, have been held with a permit of the Colonial Secretary. Sir H. Parkes has pleaded that it was against the law of the Colonies for the Government to refuse a licence. Christian men were thus silenced, and the Sunday evenings, to the ruin of the young, were given up to entertainment. The friends of the Sabbath have, however, carried the question to the Supreme Court. To the discomfiture of theatre managers, and the annoyance of the Sydney press, Sir Henry Parkes is shown to be wrong in his interpretation of the law. There is much agitation, and valiant men may everywhere learn not to hand over, without a struggle, the interests of a community to its worst men.

A subject which may seem unimportant, but which deserves the hearty support of those who, by certain repeals and systematic efforts are labouring on behalf of British soldiers, is treated of in the current Nineteenth Century Review. Colonel A. B. McHardy, who has had experience in the erection of new barracks, contends that the great want of the soldier is some privacy. At present he has none; not for an hour out of the twenty-four is he alone. In the day he has no relief from the society of his comrades, and in the night is in the open barrack-room. The remedy of cubicles on each side of this room would be easy and not costly. During the last few years such cubicles, open at the top, and allowing adequate supervision, have been introduced with advantage into many large establishments. It may be hoped that a few philanthropic M.P.'s will consider the numerous arguments which surround this proposal and give it their support.

In some notes for the month, Mr. Spurgeon says:—

We see tokens for good, mingled with sad signs of evil. Not a few preachers of the Word are more clear and definite in their statements of truth than they used to be; and some of the modern men are less lofty in their tone. When a Down-grade preacher vacates his pulpit, we meet with abundant evidence that the people very seldom have a desire for another of his class. The hunger for the old Gospel is on the starved congregation.

In confirmation of this more hopeful view, the Wesleyan ministers are forming a Guild for Scripture study. A large number have enrolled themselves, and competent scholars and divines have been placed at the head of different sections. To men whose danger has been that of too much serving tables, nothing can be more promising than a return to Apostolic practice (Acts vi. 2-4). In addition to this a Congregational minister expresses his regret, in the columns of a contemporary, that while the Episcopal clergy shared so numerously in the blessing of the late Keswick Convention, the leaders and ministers of Nonconformity should have stood aloof. If a conviction that Down-grade preaching is a failure be followed by a getting nearer to the Lord, and by a deeper spirituality, the hopes of Mr. Spurgeon will be realised. Not otherwise.

Jesus Mirrored in His People.

By GEO. C. NEEDHAM.

My footsteps were detained on a journey by the side of a small lake closely sheltered by the thick trees which grew on its margin. The day was bright, the air still; not a ripple disturbed the water as the glittering rays fell upon its surface. The lake had become a perfect mirror. The stately trees, the blue sky, the fleecy cloud were each reflected with faithful outline and colouring. The magic mirror fascinated me as I noted each object exactly and minutely reproduced. There was no audible voice, yet my beautiful looking-glass spoke with force, and with great tenderness. Its language was symbolic, but this is the interpretation thereof: "O, believer, this should be the aim of your life—faithfully to reflect the pure and unselfish spirit of your Lord. As I face the sky and give back the very appearance of its glory, so in like manner should the disciple ever gaze upon the face of his divine Master, until the beauty of Jesus shall mirror itself in his life, and thus, by a true reflection of Him, bear witness that He is the true Light in this world of darkness."

The sweet Psalmist of Israel thus spake: "One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord!" (Ps. xxvii. 4.) And thus Paul testified: "We all with open face beholding, as in a glass, the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image, from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." (2 Cor. iii. 18.)

Beholding the glory of the Lord is a study worthy of the chiefest angels; how profoundly overpowering for the chief of sinners! And the effect of such study is grandly celestial—transformed into His glorious likeness. The Revised reading of this passage is worthy of notice: "We all with unveiled face reflecting as a mirror the glory of the Lord."

As I mused before the quiet pool, I thought if the winds were let loose upon its surface how blurred and broken would these reflections be! The sky and trees and sunlight would remain unchanged. These objects of reflection would abide, but the wind would rob the waters of their power of reflection. So also, when gusts of anger, jealousy, selfishness or worldliness, blow upon our souls and disturb the calm of our spirits, we misrepresent the gentle, loving, holy Saviour. Yet herein lies our responsibility, that we resist the devil by steadfastness in the faith, that we allow the peace of God to rule our hearts, and that communion with Christ be the fixed habit of our life. When the Christian believer yields to temptation, fosters pride, and indulges in those fleshly lusts which war against the soul, then the reflection of Christ becomes sadly marred. Alas, we are then caricatures of Him, and not perfect copies. Because of our un-Christly ways we mirror forth, not the Master, but a monster. How distorted, how mis-shapen, how ugly! Oh, let the world blame us, but not mock Him; let the scoffer accuse us, but not vilify our Lord. Oh, that terrible sentence, "Wounded in the house of His friends." Wounded, maligned, contemned, because of our unlovely reflections of His unspeakable glory.

Beloved in the Lord, children of the living God, fellow-heirs of the grace that saves us, let us ever keep in mind our earthly responsibilities as well as our heavenly relationships. Merely outward service, however earnest, will not sufficiently honour Him; we must imitate Him by walking even as He walked. No popularity or notoriety, no public office or press of business, can release us from this highest form of ministry—that we exhibit the sanctity of Jesus. If we are not reflecting and representing a meek Christ, a patient Christ, a pure Christ, a true Christ, we surely are not in the possession of His life. For the meanest saint will somehow reflect something of the Master. Even muddy pools attempt a reflection, and stagnant ponds have mirrored a bit of sky. But if mud and slime be removed, and the waters become clarified, how much fuller and more faithful will the image be. The true believer will, indeed, shadow forth the loveliness and beauty of Jesus when cleansed from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit. As he shall hereafter bear the image of the heavenly in his glorified body, so now, through a body of humiliation, the power of the Lord may be seen. Shall we not, therefore, in the consciousness of great failure, cry to our God, that He would make us more like His Son? A little pure water will reflect the boundless sky and distant firmament, and a little Christian—one whose talents are few, and whose ministry is lowly—may be empowered of God to imitate a great Saviour.

The Jewish Sanhedrim "took knowledge" of Peter and John "that they had been with Jesus." "Be ye therefore imitators of God as dear children, and walk in love even as Christ also loved us and gave Himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God, for an odour of a sweet smell." (Eph. v. 1, 2.)

PASTOR CHINIQUY, writing to Rev. W. T. McCormick, of Brighton, who urged him to visit England, expresses his willingness to undertake a lecturing tour in Great Britain if he be invited by some of the public religious bodies, who will take the responsibility of arranging meetings in the principal centres of population. His health and strength, he says, are as good as when he was last here in 1882. During the last six months he has lectured almost every day in the New England States, in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and in the great cities of Baltimore and Washington.

"THE SPEEDWELL," the splendid pile of buildings, comprising coffee palace, temperance hotel, and Gospel hall, erected at Landport, Portsmouth (opposite the town railway station), through the enterprise and generosity of Miss Robinson, "The Soldier's Friend," was opened on Friday last, August 1st—Miss Robinson's birthday—when there was a supper for workmen employed on the building and their wives. On Saturday there was a public meeting, and on Sunday special services were conducted by Messrs. Hogben and Middleton. Meetings have been arranged for the whole of the current week, with addresses by Canon Wilberforce, ministers of the town, and Lord Radstock (on Friday). On Saturday, Rev. J. Gelson Gregson begins a five days' mission.

MR. DUNCAN WRIGHT, evangelist, Dunedin, New Zealand, has been in Scotland for several months recruiting his health, after nearly sixteen years labours in that distant colony. Through God's goodness he has visited many old familiar places and conversed with not a few of the workers with whom he was intimated long ago. He has preached in different Glasgow churches, and for his old friend and pastor (Rev. Robert Howie), of Govan; also at Crieff, Ayrshire, &c. Both he and his wife, who accompanies him, have enjoyed their needed furlough. Mr. Wright's health is decidedly improved, and if all is well he will sail again for New Zealand, from the Albert Docks, London, by the Coptic, on Thursday, September 4th next. Letters, care of Messrs. Hanlin and Co., 38, Queen-street, Glasgow, will duly reach him.

THE THREE GARDENS.

BY REV. JAMES CULROSS, D.D.

THE GARDEN WHERE THEY LAID HIM.

III.—Life and Immortality brought to light only through Christ.

Jesus Christ rose from the dead. It is this fact that differentiates the Christian from the pre-Christian view, and that inspires the Christian believer with the firm assurance of immortality—an immortality not of "absorption into the Absolute," nor of Nirvana-repose, nor of "shades" or disembodied spirits, but in the completeness of all that constitutes our humanity.

His resurrection is the keystone of the arch of hope. Think where we should be if He is not risen from the dead. Suppose a number of persons imprisoned in a dark subterranean cavern: groping about, they discover a narrow passage in the rock, leading they know not whither, perhaps to a sudden precipice, perhaps to a vault of poisoned air, perhaps to liberty. The boldest of the company offers to explore it, and says: "If it leads to liberty, I will come back and tell you; if I do not return, you will know that I have perished in the attempt." He goes away, but never comes back. The others wait in suspense, and, when they find that he does not return, they resign themselves to their inevitable doom. This may serve as a parable to illustrate how it would have been, had Christ not risen. It would have been our champion going into the realms of death, and returning no more, but remaining the captive of the grave; our hope would have been quenched. If Christ is not risen, all other reported risings are fables. Our only light is gone out, and the future is left in starless darkness, while yet the longing in our hearts is inextinguishable. Nothing has happened this year, or last year, or this century, or in all the centuries of the past, to throw light on the Beyond and the Hereafter, if the rising of Christ be a fable. No scientific discovery throws even a glimmer of light into the blackness. Nay, reasoning from what we know, and taking into account all the data furnished by science, we shall only be able to say:

> Thou madest life in man and brute;
> Thou madest death—and, lo, thy foot
> Is on the skull which Thou hast made.

Not only does the doctrine of our resurrection stand or fall with the alleged fact of the rising of Jesus. There are larger issues still—the Gospel itself stands or falls with the fact. If the fact can be disproved, the foundations are destroyed. It is just as the Apostle puts it: "We are found false witnesses of God," not merely poor preachers, but false witnesses—not men under a hallucination, but liars who, according to our own showing, "shall have our portion in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone." Farther, "our preaching is vain"; it is empty talk; there is nothing in it; it is vox et preterea nihil. And "your faith is vain"; it is simple folly, and can do nothing for you. "Ye are yet in your sins"—in them hopelessly—in them as ye ever were, unredeemed, involved in their condemnation and curse. "They also who are fallen asleep in Christ are perished," lost, undone, suffering the doom of their sins, whatever that may be. And as for us, who had hoped in Christ, "we are of all men most miserable"—the misery proportioned to the vastness and blissfulness of the hope we have lost. In other words, the Christian salvation is a chimæra; and we lose the mightiest inspiration of life, that which is drawn from "the powers of the world to come," and lie open to the full force of the temptation to seek after the pleasures of the senses, according to the Epicurean maxim, "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die," or, as that ancient Jewish book, "The Wisdom of Solomon," represents the ungodly as saying, "Our time is a very shadow that passeth away; come on, therefore, let us enjoy the good things that are present; let us fill ourselves with costly wine; let no flower of the spring pass by us; let us crown ourselves with rosebuds before they be withered."

And, as for the dying, the parting is eternal. We may kiss their brow, and with tearful eyes tell our love, and open the casement to let in the balmy air, and wheel their couch so that they may look once more on the lovely world they are leaving; but, if Christ is not risen, we shall never meet them more.

But "now is Christ risen from the dead, and is become the first-fruits of them that sleep." He has been at Golgotha and has shown Himself there the Resurrection and the Life; He has entered the very Strengths of Despair and spoiled them, and planted His blood-red banner on their battlements; in the central and dismallest gloom of Death's domains He has lighted up an everlasting splendour. And even already we can raise the triumphant strain, "O Death, where is thy sting? O Grave, where is thy victory?"

Pass on for illustration to the close of the man's life who wrote these last words. A geat single-minded man, with profound depths of feeling in his heart, as tender as he is strong, with supreme conscientiousness and sense of righteousness, with imperial sweep of intellect and the humility of a child. He is in prison in the city of Rome for the word of God and the testimony of Jesus Christ. All his friends but one have left him. He is shortly to be brought to trial, and he expects to be condemned and sentenced to death, though he has done no man wrong. To be spared a few months is as much as he looks for. He shows no sign of discomposure in prospect of death; on the contrary, quiet and joyful confidence, and the expectation of being crowned. We have in possession the last letter he ever wrote—the Second Epistle to Timothy. It is full of tenderness and solemnity, with a summons in every line to heroic fidelity to Christ. He entreats Timothy to come to Him—if possible before winter. But ere then, as there is every reason to believe, the headsman's work was done. A sharp sword, a sweep, a flash, and the spirit of the martyr-apostle leaps into the presence of his Saviour.

> The tongues of dying men
> Enforce attention like deep harmony;

and specially so in the case of one like the Apostle Paul. Every word, therefore, has an interest and a weight which demand attention. Does he fear death and the grave? Listen: "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." On what does this victor's confidence rest? Jesus died; Jesus lives again; Jesus lives for evermore; Jesus saves to the uttermost; Jesus is the Judge of the living and the dead.

There are some to-day who apparently have no scruple or difficulty in setting aside the testimony of the disciples, and who seem to think it possible to retain the "Gospel" while rejecting the fact of Christ's resurrection, or at least regarding it as an "open question." Not so the great Apostle. To him the whole Gospel system and method of man's recovery from sin and death stand or fall with the fact. Both his experience, on the borders of the unseen world, and his doctrine combine to say to us: "If Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God, because we have testified of God that He raised up Christ...Your faith is vain: ye are yet in your sins. Then they also who are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." Get rid of the resurrection of Jesus, and you have not merely got rid of an historic testimony of the directest and clearest kind; but the Gospel itself is a tree without fruit, plucked up by the roots, withered and dead.

THE NEED OF THE GOSPEL IN ITALY.

The writer of the following lines has spent some time in Rome in association with the work of Mr. and Mrs. Wall. She purposes to return in the autumn, to live in one of the villages near Rome, working that and other neighbouring villages as the needed workers and helps are forthcoming. She would be glad to hear from any ladies able to support themselves, either to reside with her or otherwise, and would meantime answer inquiries, or hold drawing-room meetings in or near London in the interests of Italy.

O Italy, thou sunny land,
So queenly and so fair,
When wilt thou burst the iron bands
Of error's subtle snare?

Thy children, bowed beneath the weight
Of priestly rule and thrall,
For liberty, sweet liberty,
With pleading voices call.

Historic ruins, stately piles,
Madonnas, relics, thine;
But for God's own most precious gift
Of freedom, still they pine.

No hallowed Sabbath brings release
From sordid toil and care,
Hushing earth's weary din and noise,
And breathing thoughts of prayer.

No open Bible meets the clasp
Of hands so faint and worn
With struggling for the right to live:
They would they'd ne'er been born.

Yes! poverty and sickness wan
Swift follow in the rear,
When superstition leads the way
Throughout the circling year.

Upon a land where Satan reigns
God's smile can never rest;
Where He is honoured in his Son,
There are the people blest.

Rise up, then, Italy! and take
The Gospel offered thee—
Deliverance, too, from Romish chains:
Then, then, thou shalt be free!

GAMBLING ON ATLANTIC STEAMERS.—In the North American Review, Captain William Kennedy, late commander of the White Star steamship Germanic, contributes a bit of his personal experience of "Gambling on Atlantic steamers." Captain Kennedy states that during the summer season—from May to November—these steamere are the resort of scores of professional gamblers who especially infest the smoke-room, banishing quiet and decency therefrom, and polluting the whole atmosphere with their coarse language and objectional ways. But it is not only by professional blacklegs that gambling is carried on on shipboard. A common form of gambling among respectable passengers is to bet on the mileage the ship makes in twenty-four hours, and the excitement that accompanies it is intense. Upon being questioned by passengers as to why he permitted a practice to which he was known to be opposed, the only reply he could give was that he had authority from the company to interfere. In answer to the question, Why do the companies sanction it? he gives a simple answer. All Atlantic steamships are furnished with a supply of wines and liquors. Those who gamble generally drink—some of them largely. To abolish gambling on board would, therefore, tend to reduce the profits very appreciably. Thus for increasing their revenues, reputable commercial companies sanction and encourage a practice which is demoralising and immoral, the companion of other and worse evils, and all calculated to do infinite harm to society.

How to Meet Unbelievers.

By Rev. A. J. HARRISON, D.D.*

I understand that I have been asked to give, so far as it may seem helpful, some account of the methods and results of such Christian evidence work as I have had the leisure to do. About the results, it is hardly possible that I should say more than this: they have been such in quality as to cause me great sorrow that I have been unable to give more time to so promising a field of labour; and a greater sorrow still, that there are so few competent men wholly given to the work. As to the methods, I have naturally very strong convictions, and it seems to me that I shall best answer the purpose for which I have been invited, by stating as clearly as I can what these convictions are.

The usual classification of unbelievers is, I think, incorrect, though it must be admitted it is difficult to make one against which no objection could be urged. To "believer" I would oppose "non-believer," and the latter I divide into: (1) the disbelieving; (2) the indifferent; (3) the doubting; (4) the inquiring.

(1) As to disbelievers, in the extreme sense, the number is probably very few: even the Positivist has scarcely reached the point of holding it certain there is no God; while Agnostics who are not also Positivists do not disbelieve in the Divine existence, but only in our capacity to know (as they say), to comprehend (as they mean), the Divine attributes. It would puzzle anyone to say exactly how much or how little of Christianity Mr. Spencer or Professor Huxley believes; but it would not be difficult to show that both ought, on their own principles, to believe more than either has heretofore, so far as I know, professed.

(2) As to the indifferent: there may be a momentary surprise at their inclusion in the class of non-believers. It is true that they are not usually *dis*believers, neither are they ordinarily doubters, nor inquirers. Still they are non-believers, for it is obvious that to no man who believed in Christ could Christ be indifferent. The cause of indifference is sometimes the predominance of the merely animal temperament; sometimes the absorption in the physical struggle for life resulting in extreme poverty; sometimes the contentment with oneself and one's surroundings when one is in what are called easy circumstances.

The first of these three is notoriously difficult to deal with, and my own experience leads me to question whether the love that is not strong enough to inflict pain can deal with them at all. For them, at all events, the certainty that their animality will be punished must precede the recognition on their part of the love that inflicts the punishment only for the purpose of saving from the sin. In other words, the love that holds heaven in the one hand must hold hell in the other. As to the second of these, the emphasis ought, I think, to be reversed, and the hope continually presented that they who have nobly borne the neglect of Dives here will have the joy of Lazarus hereafter. As to the third of these, an incident will illustrate the method. A gentleman once said to me: "The truth is, I'm in to the question in which you are so profoundly interested. It is not that I either believe or disbelieve; but, honestly and without intending any irreverence, I simply do not care whether there is a God and a further life or not. I am well to do, I have good health, I am happy in my wife and children, I have many friends, I have my own ways of doing good, and I am quite content to have no religion at all." After a conversation prolonged far into the night, I rose to go to my bedroom; but, as I opened the door, a thought came to me, and, turning round, I said: "Before going, I want to ask you a question, and I also want you to promise that you won't answer it." He replied with a smile: "That's rather a curious request to make; but I consent." I then went on: "I want to get to the heart of the matter. Let us put aside all question of the churches and of Christianity. Let us say nothing about theology or religion. If you are yourself in a state of animal indifference with respect to Christ, are you content that your children should grow up in the same state of animal indifference? Good night." I then gently closed the door, and went to my own room to pray and to sleep. You will all conjecture how the question rose. But I am glad to be able to tell you certainly that that gentleman did not remain indifferent; he ultimately became a communicant, and a warden in his parish church.

(3) As to the third class: a great deal of sympathetic patience is absolutely necessary. There are some clergy who shrink from doubt because of the pain its expression inflicts on themselves, without seeing that this shrinking is really a proof of a certain kind of selfishness. There are others of a naturally intolerant disposition, who loftily hold that the reasons which satisfied them ought to satisfy everybody else, without even taking the trouble to ascertain if those reasons, whether adequate or inadequate, had ever been fairly presented to the doubter's mind. Others there are of a trusting and joyous temper, who have received Christianity without a question, and quite innocently think that it is impossible to hesitate to accept Christ except from a bad heart. And there are yet others who simply will not permit themselves to doubt, and preach down all questions with a vehement and sometimes

FEROCIOUS BIGOTRY.

And, of course, there is a large number, not wholly confined to the Roman communion, who have learned to distrust the reason and even the conscience of man, or who have reasoned themselves out of their reason, conscienced themselves out of their conscience, and regard as omnipresent and absolute the authority of their church, or, it may be, even of their party.

I am afraid, too, that there is a tendency, from which none of us is altogether free, to confuse doubt of ourselves with doubt of Christ; whereas it is at least conceivable that dislike of the parson is not always the same thing as dislike of our Lord. Now, it appears to me that the one thing to do with all doubters is to strive patiently to reach the point, which we may be sure exists, where their conscience and reason are on the side of Christ, and from that point work onward to the Christian faith as a whole.

(4) As to the fourth class: it is scarcely possible for me to speak without some emotion. As a youngster I was an eager and keenly-interested, perhaps also a bumptious and somewhat self-conceited, inquirer, desiring to know whatever might be known throughout the whole range of theology. Making all allowance for the natural depravity of the human heart, and for all the possibilities of self-deception, I yet believe that I had a perfectly honest desire to know the truth, and to go whithersoever the truth led me. I am ready to concede that I probably manifested some want of respect in my manner of asking questions, and some impatience of what appeared to me inadequate answers; nevertheless, I cannot withhold the statement of my conviction that I was treated by all the ministers of Christ whom I then met with extreme unwisdom. For from the very first I became a suspect, and therefore to no one who understands human nature will it be at all surprising that I became, if not what the clergy called me, an infidel, at least a sceptic. Doubtless there were many, even in those days, who would have treated me in wiser fashion; but I did not happen to come within their range. One thing, at all events, I have learned from my own early experience—the need of patient sympathy and gentle dealing even with those inquirers whose manner of putting their questions is the most offensive.

I do not find that the clergy generally are unwilling to treat sceptics with intellectual fairness; but neither do I find that, as a rule, they quite understand what intellectual fairness is, or realise how much unprejudiced study and patient self-discipline there must be before this indispensable quality can be solidified into a permanent property of the mind. I suppose that the number of avowed sceptics with whom they come into close contact is not sufficiently large to compel their attention to the subject, and the unavowed sceptics, who, after all, are the most numerous, are, I fear, usually and unwisely regarded as simply indifferent, which they are not; to say nothing more of the fact which we have already pointed out, that the indifferent themselves are really a species of non-believers. I find also that the clergy have for the most part very inadequate ideas as to the number of avowed sceptics in their parishes; and of unavowed sceptics—or at least doubters—in their congregations. I note, without explaining the fact, that we have not the confidence of sceptics.

But, whatever the explanation may be, the fact itself, so far as it is a fact and so long as it lasts, renders right treatment of sceptics nearly impossible. It is a common experience that doubters are very unwilling to speak out to their clergy, and some of the reasons I have heard are worth stating. One was: "If I were to speak what I feel, I should only shock the Rector, and perhaps unsettle the Curate. For such confidence the one is too old, the other is too young." Another was: "What! open my mind to the Vicar! No, indeed. He would set me down at once as an atheist, or as an infidel, who was secretly living a vicious life." Another was: "Why, he would simply tell me and there is an end of the matter. That wouldn't help me much, would it?

THE CHURCH SAYS SO;

Yet another: "Why, what is the use? He has no sympathy with the ideas from which my difficulties spring. How, then, could he understand them? He teaches almost ferociously that if I give up the historic truth of the accounts of the creation, the deluge, the standing still of the sun, the submarine expedition of Jonah, and the like, I must also give up Christ, and that I shall without doubt perish everlastingly. No, thank you, I prefer not to open my mind to the clergy."

One more was: "I do not see that any good would come from having it out with the parson. Honestly, I believe I know more about the subject than he does. My objections spring from scientific sources, and he is profoundly ignorant of science, too ignorant to be even conscious of his ignorance. But he is a good man in his way, and I won't annoy him with questions I know he cannot answer."

These are reasons given me by educated men, and I have heard the same in substance, with some characteristic additions, from working men. "For my part," said one, "I'm not going to bother the parson. He'd only say what he's paid to say, and that's no use to me." Said another: "No, I won't go to him. I know beforehand what he'd say. Besides, it's not him only I object to. The whole thing is a sham. I don't find your religious folks any better than others—they are often worse. They are not more honest or kinder, and if the newspapers are to be believed, if you want an example of a specially bad bankruptcy, it's sure to be a religious man that did it. I know there are bad men who are not religious. But, any way, they have one fault less. They don't add to their badness the meanness of pretending to be good. They are not hypocrites."

If, now, you will permit me to give in my own words my impression of the widest and deepest reason of the distrust with which we are regarded by doubters, I should say it is the conviction—I do not say the honest conviction, simply because conviction that is not honest is not conviction — that the clergy generally have never mastered the questions in debate between Christianity and Scepticism; and that even such exceptional men as Lightfoot and Westcott, great in their scholarship, greater still in their candour, prove by their writings that either they do not understand the scientific method, or, if they do, it means to them something wholly different from what it means to men of science in general.

*An Address at the Missioners' Conference, Roxeth.

It would be a great mistake to suppose that sceptics, as a rule, share the opinions of Mr. Haweis as to our ignorance and incompetency; or that of some freethinkers as to our insincerity. It is not ourselves they distrust, so much as our method. When we talk, as we often do, of some other method than that of science, our words seem to them idle talk, and when we admit, as some do, that Christianity cannot be scientifically proved to be true, we give up, in their opinion, our whole case. No one can meet them on their own ground who does not understand what that ground is.

As to whether there is another trustworthy method than that of science, I do not at present express an opinion; but I hold strongly that no candidate for the ministry ought to be accepted unless he can give adequate proof that he understands what the scientific method is, and knows, up to date, how far its fearless application will conduct a sincere inquirer on his way to Christ.

We ought to be very careful not to encourage seekers to profess more than they believe; and equally careful not to reject those who believe, at any given point in their career, less than we wish. I am afraid we are to blame here. The principle that you must grasp Christianity in its entirety or not touch it at alli s, I think, unjustifiable.

OUR LORD PLAINLY RECOGNISED

the fact that there were certain things in His teaching which even His Apostles could not receive at the then stage of their culture. It is my profound conviction that our forgetfulness of this has greatly contributed to the increase of unbelief, and that our remembrance of it, if embodied in our conduct, would do more than anything else to bring sceptics back to Christ. So long as what are termed the damnatory clauses of the creed called Athanasian are interpreted as condemning to everlasting perdition a man who is literally unable to accept or retain the catholic faith in its entirety, it seems to me that we are compelled to wield the sword of the Spirit with hands that are chained. Accept as much of Christianity as you honestly can, and not a word more; but do not fancy without trial that because you cannot receive Christianity in what seems its entirety you cannot receive it at all.

In a town in the north of England there was seven years ago a man of considerable intellectual power and of great earnestness, who was, or believed himself to be, an atheist, and who held the position of secretary of the local secular society. He opposed me with keen intelligence, and with, to me at all events, obvious honesty. I requested permission to write to him, which he courteously granted. In the correspondence which followed I took the position I have taken in this article, that one should accept just as much of Christianity as he honestly can, and no more. I suggested to him a plan which I have found useful more than once. Obtain two copies of the New Testament. Take one of them and begin with the four Gospels. Read very slowly and deliberately, striking out with your pencil every passage you cannot honestly accept. Now put this copy away, and wait for a time until you can digest the result. When I heard that this had been done, I wrote to him again, and found as I expected, that he had struck out everywhere the physically supernatural element, without its occurring to him to touch the morally supernatural.

I then asked him to take his other copy and to mark in pencil every passage which he could accept. It makes a difference practically infinite which of the two objects a man has in view. For if the emphasis is on the things to be cast away, the things to be retained are scarcely thought of, and are, therefore, in effect thrown away also. In his second reading he passed over the physically, but accepted the morally supernatural. On examining the conclusions at which he had arrived, he began to ask himself why he had accepted the greater and refused the less. After prolonged meditation he saw that whether or not the miracles accredited Christ, Christ accredited the miracles. He is to-day a Christian. I think the other method—all or nothing—would have left him an atheist still.

Nevertheless, any attempt to pare down the Christian faith in order to make it easier for opponents to become Christians would be disastrous in the extreme. As a matter of course we ought to cut away all that we are sure is not true, and all, whether true or not, that does not properly belong to Christianity; but we must not add to or take from Christianity itself so much as a single hair's breadth. To say that the sincere seeker is not able as yet to take in the whole is the opposite to saying that Christianity is to be reduced until it suits his present capacity. To encourage a man on a mountain path to climb as high as he can is a very different thing from levelling the mountain to the point he has reached. In all this I have taken for granted if we can only get the right sort of missioners. Formal debates are occasionally useful, but not often, mainly because it is rarely possible to bring on the platform disputants who are intellectually and morally qualified for the task, and still more rarely to find audiences able to appreciate at their right value the arguments adduced on either side. My own experience on the whole is in favour of allowing questions to be asked at the close of lectures, provided the lecturer knows how to keep an audience well in hand, and to answer not only the questions, but the difficulties out of which the questions arise. I am strongly in favour too of evidential sermons preceding missions, provided the preacher, in addition to being otherwise qualified, remembers that the fortressed safety of the pulpit from which he speaks put him under an additional obligation of honour to treat with scrupulous fairness the position and motives of opponents. It is, perhaps, unnecessary for a controversialist like myself to deny that he has faith in controversy, or, what is much the truer way of putting it, that faith in truth presents it in controversial as well as in other forms. Only the controversy must be of the very noblest type, identified with, a part of, God's controversy with man—the one warfare in which we must always be good soldiers, because we are soldiers of the good, in which, unlike all other conflicts, the one supreme object is not to destroy, but to save the very enemies with whom we fight.

BURIAL REFORM.—At the recent annual meeting of the Church of England Burial, Funeral and Mourning Reform Association, Bishop Barry said that the Society directed its efforts against costly and insanitary burial, and also undue ceremonial. The hon. secretary stated that the Government had acceded to the application of the Society for returns respecting the cemeteries of Leeds, Sheffield, and other large towns similar to those issued respecting the London cemeteries. It was resolved to petition Parliament for an inquiry into the dangers attendant upon the excessive over-crowding in the London cemeteries.

DESTITUTE CHILDREN IN DUBLIN.—The work which Miss L. H. Carr superintends is steadily expanding. The Home in Eccles-street is full, having sixty juvenile inmates, many of them rescued from surroundings of great misery and sin. Recently another house has been taken, and therein it is proposed to place the boys, some of whom are nearly twelve years old. Miss Carr writes:—"Our hearts go out in longing after the thousands around us, and ache as we have to turn them away because there is no room." The new Home will hold about forty, and it is hoped that it will prove a very useful addition. Friends are invited to help in furnishing, as well as in other ways. Miss Carr's address is 71, Eccles-street, Dublin.

THE IKWEZI LAMACI MISSION.

In a recent letter, Mrs. Aitchison reports cheering progress in this South African sphere. The rain-doctor chief Umlotza is steadfast in his desire for a school, and it is hoped ere long to open one in his territory. The chief Impokwa is a constant scholar at the Weza school, and does not seem to be losing caste among his people in consequence. At Ikwezi the workers have received much encouragement. Mrs. Aitchison writes:—"Some months ago a young man came to my Bible-class, but could only take his place amongst those who were being taught orally. He wished very much to be able to read the Bible, but was under an engagement to saw in the Government forest some distance away so could not attend school; but I said, Always come on Sundays,' and he has scarcely failed once since. He can now read the Zulu Testament, spelling out a text during the week. He is now learning English, also to write; this is the outcome of the Sabbath-school. Is not this perseverance? This young man, too, not only has helped himself, but brought a youth, who is now a boarder.

"The Khluku school does very well indeed. A few more people are settling near, so we hope the attendance will be larger. The services there have shown some life in them lately, the people waking up; and they have had many prayer meetings for those who are seeking. A worthy heathen doctor and his two wives desire to come out on the Lord's side. This last week they were here, having a long talk with my husband. We have often prayed for this man, for if he does come boldly out he is one that will have much influence. A little matter about him came to our glad ears the other day. He went to a Griqua woman to give her medicines. He took out his various compounds, spread them around, then knelt down and called upon the Lord to direct him in administering to meet her disease. He prayed with great feeling, and acknowledged God before all other things. That he has done this openly is a great step forward, and rejoices us much. Pray for him and his wives and family. One of his boys was with us for some time. We would often find him comparing and translating Zulu and English texts. It is encouraging, too, to see the desire creeping up amongst the boarders to search the Scriptures. As I repeatedly say, 'I want you all to learn to read quickly, so that you may for yourselves search and see if this thing be true.'"

The work at Harding also goes forward. Mrs. Aitchison says:—"When we first knew the place, it was without any spiritual agency. Now it is our privilege to know that, through prayer and practical energy, there are services each Sabbath at three places for three nationalities; and we have every reason to believe that much blessing is resting upon those who assemble from time to time. A number of Griquas have lately been received into Church-fellowship. A touching scene occurred not long since amongst these people—Griquas. A number had assembled for a wedding at the home of the bride, when one young man, who was one of the number of recent converts, was suddenly taken ill. He called the guests, and told them he was dying, adding how precious the name of Jesus was to him now, what peace it was that he had professed that name, and he exhorted them all not to delay, but to accept Christ. This young man passed away most peacefully, bearing loving testimony to his newly-found Saviour."

A PLEASANT OCCUPATION.—Miss H. C. Brown, Trelawney-road, Falmouth, is issuing a series of cards with outlines of Scripture counsels, commands, and invitations. To work them in with silk and wool, according to instructions given with each packet (1s. 2d. post free), cannot but prove an interesting occupation for young people. We commend the cards to the attention of our readers.

The Gospel in Corea.

One of the most remarkable works of grace known in modern missions is that among the Coreans, which goes far to foreshadow the time when "a nation shall be born in a day." Without having heard or seen a missionary, thousands of people have learned of Christ, and turned from vain things to the service of the living and true God. These converts are the fruit of the circulation of copies of the New Testament, translated into Corean by Rev. John Ross, late missionary of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland, in Manchuria.

The story is well told in the June issue of The Missionary Record of the United Presbyterian Church. With the design of seeing what could be done to introduce the Gospel into Corea, about eighteen years ago Mr. Ross visited the Corean Gate, a village about thirty miles from the frontier, and there saw many of the Corean people. They resemble Europeans more than do other Asiatics, but, so stern are the laws prohibiting intercourse with foreigners, that the people gave evasive answers to Mr. Ross's questions for information respecting their social life, laws, language, &c. It was by a singular providence that Mr. Ross at last secured the services of a native willing to teach him the language. Without delay portions of Holy Writ were translated into Corean. The importance of this measure is clear from the fact that out of a population, said to be 30,000,000, and which is certainly not less than half that number, nearly every woman can read. If she cannot, she can learn to do so in two or three hours, for the alphabet is so strictly phonetic that any book can be easily read, and it is impossible to mispronounce that which is written.

The Corean who helped the Chinese Christian compositors, joyously accepted the Gospel which he set up in type. Almost a simpleton in intellect, this man was superseded later on by a bright, intelligent man; on returning to his native valleys, however, he took to distribute as a colporteur among his friends. The valleys were those on the Manchurian side of the frontier, but largely peopled by Coreans. This was in 1882. In about six months he returned, saying that his books were all sold, and that a number of people who had read them wanted to be baptized. Mr. Ross hardly credited this, but gave the man fresh bundles of books. Ere long he returned again with the same story, and his tale was soon to receive curious corroboration.

About this time a revolution took place in Corea. A progressive party was in favour of the country being thrown open to foreigners, and they raised a revolt, as the result of which some of the conservative party were killed, some imprisoned, and others driven into exile. A number of these latter went to Moukden, where Mr. Ross was residing, and told strange stories of what they had seen in the valleys. They had found men who read foreign books, and worshipped the God of heaven. Half a dozen of these refugees afterwards became Christians. In consequence of this information, Messrs. Ross and Webster resolved to go and see for themselves. Arriving, in severe weather, at an inn at the head of the first valley where the Coreans lived, they were welcomed with every demonstration of joy by the friends of the colporteur. Mr. Ross and his companion became the guests of the chief farmer of the place, and found the house full of people who had become believers. Thirty men, all farmers and heads of families, came forward desiring baptism; and after careful examination some of them were without delay baptized. At another place, twelve miles distant, a similar scene was enacted; and in a second valley another group presented themselves, and were dealt with. In a third valley about one hundred men and lads turned up, among them some farm servants. The danger of a snowstorm compelled a halt, but the missionaries were told that there were twenty-eight valleys, in every one of which there were similar

GROUPS OF BELIEVERS.

Next spring Messrs. Ross and Webster returned to complete this work, but learned to their regret that in the interval a fierce persecution had broken out against the Christians. This was the work of the Chinese landlords, who, in their ignorance of the Gospel, suspected some plot among the Coreans, which they desired to put down. They hired a rabble, who attacked the Christians, cut and slashed them, and destroyed their property. It seemed unkind to subject the converts to further suspicion, and so the missionaries withdrew till something could be done to remove these prejudices. They have not been back, but the work has not ceased. The converts are eager for teaching, and were willing, if the missionaries would stay, to build chapels. The colporteur continues travelling up and down, and has penetrated even into Russian territory. From other valleys have come recently requests for baptism from large numbers who have become believers; while travellers speak of thousands of families, both on the Corean and on the Manchurian side, in which there is daily family worship, and where God's Word is read.

From the valleys we look to the capital of Corea. One of the refugees who had gone to Moukden, a young man of good family, and with great force of character, was baptized. It was his desire to go home and give his friends the Gospel. Mr. Ross kept him with him two months for instruction, then gave him books, &c., and sent him back to the capital. The Corean upper classes are educated persons, who know Chinese, and would disdain a book written in the vulgar tongue. Among the books sent, accordingly, were a number written in the Chinese classical style. Next year a letter was received from this young man, stating that thirteen of his friends wished to receive baptism and be formed into a Christian church. The year following another letter brought the tidings that there were seventy-nine persons ready for baptism. Mr. Ross, however, could not go so far. Two years afterwards Corea threw open four ports to foreign countries. The American Presbyterians then sent two men to carry on mission work.

By and by Mr. Ross went to the Corean capital, to make some inquiries as to whether the printed New Testament was understood there. He found that a congregation had been formed, and learned that if a station were opened, over 300 men were prepared to join. As an illustration of the work, it is said that on the agent of a Presbyterian Mission from Canada going to a certain village, he found that

THE PEOPLE WERE ALL CHRISTIANS

—converts of another man who had been instructed at Moukden. Mr. Ross strongly holds the opinion that though Corea has been the last seaboard nation to be reached, it is likely to be the first to receive Christianity.

The work in Manchuria continues to make rapid progress. Rev. James Webster, after visiting the out stations of Moukden, writes:—"Everything I saw and heard encourages one in the hope that throughout this extensive field the darkness of ages is passing away, and the day dawn has already risen. The difficulty is not to obtain an entrance, but it is an utter impossibility to enter in at the doors that are open; and it is a hard thing to turn a deaf ear to the appeals which one constantly receives. Scarcely a day passed but I was urgently pressed to 'stay a little longer, as there are many anxious to hear.' 'The pastor is always in such a hurry when he comes our way,' remarked another, with a sort of grudge in his tone. Doors open on every hand, fields ripe for the harvest, and no one ready to thrust in the sickle! Let the Church but do her duty, and the Christianisation of this great country is assured. Think what changes seventeen years have wrought! 'The little one has become a thousand!' Rouse ye, 'and the small one will become a great nation.'"

AMONG ITALIAN WORKMEN.

Many Italian workmen are employed this summer in Davos, on the railway. As is the case in other parts of Switzerland, this sort of work is all done by Italian navvies, men and boys, who, leaving their homes early in spring, come to this country to work till autumn, when they return to Italy. Far from home, and exposed to many evil influences, they sorely need that earnest friendly hands should be stretched out to help them. Their wages are low, and they lodge almost anywhere, several often crowding together in one room.

In June a temporary coffee and reading-room, roughly built of wood, was opened, and we hope to keep it open till the end of October. An Italian evangelist has been put in charge; he sells milk and café-au-lait at ½d. per cup, and bread at cost price. Newspapers and books are provided, and the latter may be borrowed and taken away. The men are also allowed to write letters there, and a few simple games are provided. The evangelist has a class for boys on Sunday morning, and in the afternoon all are welcome to an informal Gospel meeting. The Italians have a natural aptitude for singing, and Sankey's hymns, translated into Italian, are taken up with great vigour. We wish to keep the Mission, as far as possible, unsectarian, preaching Christ, and leading the men to love and trust in Him. The whole expenses, for the summer, will be about £70 or £80. Any information respecting the Mission may be obtained from the Secretary, In der Wiese, Davos Dörfli, Switzerland. Help towards the work may be sent to Mr. T. W. Stoughton (Hodder & Stoughton), Lynton Villa, Beulah-hill, Upper Norwood.

A CURIOUS STORY comes to us on the authority of a Churchman who cannot be accused of nourishing any morbid suspicion of Rome. Visiting, with a friend, a south county vicar, he found a locum tenens on the spot, to whom the care of the parish was about to be resigned for some weeks. But in this locum tenens both he and his friend believed they identified a Jesuit whom they had often met and heard preach in Rome. What is still more curious, the locum tenens declared his engagement off and departed in some haste. Yet he seems to have held several charges in England, and his references were quite satisfactory. We offer no comment, but merely reproduce the story. —The Record.

THE NEW HEBRIDES.—Rev. Peter Milne, missionary of the Otago Church in Nguna, New Hebrides, thus speaks of the progress during the fifty years since John Williams was killed on Erromanga:—The chief who killed Mr. Williams died a heathen, but his two sons are now church members, and one of them laid the foundation-stone of a church lately. The next missionaries were the Gordons, three in number, all of whom were killed by the ignorant natives. Following them came Rev. H. A. Robertson, of Novia Scotia, who is now carrying on the work. At present there are thirty-three schools at Erromanga, and the large majority of the people of that island are professedly Christian, and are supporting their teachers either in whole or in part. On the island of Tanna three languages are spoken, although it is small, and as a consequence the Gospel has not been spread to any extent on it. On Nguna there is a population of about 800 persons, and there are ten schools with an attendance of 400. Last year 576 persons were baptized, of whom 433 were adults. Seven years ago there were only forty church members in this district, and now there are over 800. At that time there were only three schools; now there are twenty-six, with an aggregate attendance of 1500. Of the six islands in the Nguna district four are wholly Christian, and they are now beginning to turn out teachers of their own kind.

A VISIT TO MISS DE BROEN.

On Sunday afternoon the Iron Room of Miss de Broen's Mission at Belleville, Paris, was well filled by an attentive audience, chiefly working men and women from that quarter. After one or two hymns and prayer, a Gospel address was given by the evangelist, Mr. Hoste, brother of the well-known missionary in China. We were encouraged by a visit from Colonel Morton, superintendent of Mildmay, who, being in Paris, came to see what the Lord was doing in our midst. In clear, pointed words he put before the listeners the way of salvation, and told how Divine grace had found and rescued him. In the evening there was also a Gospel service, conducted in French by another evangelist.

Monday and Tuesday were the last days of the Medical Mission, before it closed for a few weeks, to allow the tired doctor and his assistants a too brief holiday. Long ere the time appointed for opening the gate leading to the Iron Room (nine a.m.), a patient crowd of sufferers was assembled without. Some, indeed, had arrived there from distant quarters four hours previous. In the entrance stood two ladies giving out tickets. Soon 230 were comfortably seated in the room. When the meeting was opened by a hymn and prayer, Miss de Broen spoke to their hearts as only one long accustomed to feel the moral and spiritual pulse of the people can. An earnest address followed by a French evangelist, who has himself been led out of the darkness of Roman Catholicism into the light and liberty of the Gospel.

A strange audience, composed of Roman Catholics and infidels, men and women over whom, naturally, law and order would have no control, now subdued by suffering. Yet never did I witness such a soul-thirst in human faces as in those upturned to me as I endeavoured to speak a little of the Word of Life, before the sale of Testaments, which were readily bought for two-pence each. When it is remembered that the patients not only came from the immediate neighbourhood, but from towns and villages far distant from Paris, it will be seen how widely disseminated is the Word of God. The utterance of one may express the feelings of many. "I never knew before that Christ died for me!" or of another, threatened with bodily loss of sight, "The light that has shone into my soul is better than the light around!" One woman, who lived at a great distance, on being offered enough medicine for three weeks, exclaimed: "No, I will not take it; for I want to return to hear the good things!" An evening meeting was addressed by a converted Jew.

A consumptive patient, who has lately passed away to be with the Lord, on the first visit to the Dispensary, was told that his case was a serious one. He had been impressed by the Gospel address just heard, and the doctor spoke to him of the Saviour. He was visited afterwards, and led as a sinner to seek pardon and trust wholly in Christ. Later on he wrote:—"Happy the day when God guided my steps to the Dispensary, where I went seeking the healing of my body, but found the healing of my soul." His testimony was clear, and his wife and a neighbour spoke to the remarkable change in him. In much suffering he said to the visitor: "I feel very ill, but if you knew the peace I have in my heart. If I was not reconciled to God, I should long ago have found a way to die more quickly." Almost his last words were: "There is nothing to fear—nothing to dread. The struggle is a little long, but heaven is near." We trust a work of grace has begun in the heart of the poor widow, who is becoming blind from optic atrophy.

A deformed girl, brought up a Roman Catholic, but who had reasoned herself out of all belief in God, came to the Dispensary, and was spoken to about spiritual things. When visited afterwards, she seemed to have quite lost the impression, but was eventually brought to Christ. Of a poor woman, who came to see her, she asked: "Why don't you pray to God?" "What has your God done for you?" was the taunting reply. "He has given me peace, even in suffering," she meekly said. On the fly-leaf of the Bible, given her by the visitor, she wrote: "Souvenir of a friend without whom I should never have known the Saviour. I thank God with all my heart that I was ill, and led to the Iron Room. There I learnt that my soul needed healing far more than my body. I pray God to bless my friend, and that through her, his word may be heard by many others." The Bible was found open, with Heb. xiii. 8 marked: "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever."

And shall such a work suffer for want of funds, and Protestant England regard it not? Here are "modern miracles" indeed; the blind see, the dead are raised. Weekly meetings and other branches of the work will be continued during the holidays.

A LADY'S WORK IN SYRIA.

An interesting testimony was recently given at the Central Noon Prayer-meeting, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., by Miss Proctor, an Irish lady.

She was first moved to visit Syria by love for that land, on account of its association with the Patriarchs, but, above all, because it was the scene of the life of our Lord. When in her journeying she saw the condition of the women and children, she was led, ten years ago, to settle and work there on her own resources, and she has never repented the decision. The population in Syria is mixed, consisting of Moslems, Druses, and professing Christians. In the village of Shwifat, two hour's journey from Beyrout, in which Miss Proctor settled, the inhabitants are principally Druses. Tradition says they have dwelt there ever since the children of Israel came up out of Egypt. The men are bigoted; but the women are docile. The work began in a small way, by the establishing of a day school. The school has now attracted a large number of children, and God has raised up around his servant several faithful native teachers, who, in addition to giving school instructions, work earnestly to win their pupils to Christ.

Miss Proctor narrated several incidents. One woman, who was deeply impressed, used to gather into her house her neighbours. On one occasion a blind woman came in with others. Miss Proctor read the incident of blind Bartimæus, and spoke of spiritual as well as natural blindness. The poor blind woman, in the midst of the reading and exposition, suddenly broke out, with hands uplifted, in earnest entreaty: "Lord Jesus, Thou Son of David, have mercy on me." Before long, as the result of patient teaching, the changed face and the changed life showed clearly that she saw Him spiritually. She was not long spared; but during her few remaining days she witnessed brightly for her Saviour.

These Druses are fond of the English. They were accused some years since of being concerned in the massacre which was perpetrated in this district; and it was English intervention that saved them from death and devastation at the hands of the Turks. When the Prince of Wales's son recently made a tour through Syria, hundreds of these Druses lined the road to show their respect for the English nation.

As in other lands the children are much used in carrying the Gospel to their parents. One father told Miss Proctor that his little boy had said to him, "Father, Jesus Christ is greater than your prophet. He opened the eyes of the blind and raised the dead." The child still attends the school, and the father seems glad that he should do so. Miss Proctor has a boarding-school for the higher education of girls. The great difficulties in connection with that work are that the parents take away the girls while they are still very young, and that the custom of the country is for the girls to marry while very young. When Miss Proctor left there were sixteen girls in the boarding-school. Four were leaving at the end of the term, and there was every reason to believe that each had given her heart to God.

There is no doctor in the village, but Miss Proctor uses the medical knowledge which she had taken pains to acquire before leaving England. Four hundred women and children were treated by her last year. She had reason to know that not only had they experienced much physical blessing and relief, but also that what they had heard, while being treated, had in many cases been blessed. Serious cases are remitted to Dr. Post at the German Hospital, and Dr. Vandyck at the Greek Hospital in Beyrout, both of whom had manifested great kindness and interest.

The condition of the women is very distressing. Wives may be legally divorced for the most trivial causes. Sickness or inability to work are valid causes; many are then cast adrift to suffer and to die. Miss Proctor's work has so grown in her hands that she has come home to seek an English lady companion, with means of her own. Such a one will find ample opportunities of work and a very hearty welcome.

SAILORS' REST, CONSTANTINOPLE.

About five years ago Miss Green Armytage opened a Rest for British and foreign seamen at Constantinople; God has owned her work, and many a tempted and sin-burdened sailor has found this place to be a harbour of rest unto his soul.

Sin and wickedness abound at Constantinople, and many a sailor, who on coming ashore only intends to have "a look round," as he calls it, finds himself drawn into the dens of sin and iniquity, and, before he is aware of his danger, he is drugged and led astray.

The Rest, which is situated close to the British shipping offices, is open from early morning till nine p.m., and bright and attractive Gospel meetings, with plenty of singing, are conducted every evening.

A young engineer belonging to a shipwrecked crew came to Constantinople. Though avoiding the Rest at first, he got to love it, and came most regularly every evening. He was at first unwilling to yield himself to the Lord; but, before leaving Constantinople, he said in one of the meetings: "It is indeed an ill wind that blows no one any good. I am glad it brought me to Constantinople, and, although my ship went down, God has saved my soul from eternal shipwreck." This is only one instance out of many that might be cited.

Every now and then the letters of those who have left show us that the Rest is not forgotten by them, but has proved of great blessing.

MILITIA TRAINING AT RICHMOND.—While the 4th battalion of the Princess of Wales's Own Yorkshire Regiment was in training, the infant schoolroom in Dundas-street, Richmond, was opened each evening for reading and recreation. Gospel and temperance meetings were held, also gatherings for prayer, praise, and Bible study. Considerably over a hundred men signed the pledge, and the police were heard to say that the militiamen were more orderly and quiet than in any previous year. The Scripture reader, who daily visited the tents, befriended the men in various ways. At the close of the training, fifty men who had used the reading-room sat down to a social tea, which was followed by an evangelistic address by Major Phayre. At an after-meeting six men stood up to be prayed for, and, it is hoped, found peace through believing.

DR. BAEDEKER IN SIBERIA.

Writing from Krasnojarsk, Siberia, Dr. Baedeker says:

My progress has been much retarded through the exceptionally late season. Whilst in Europe we rejoiced in an unusually early spring, the country beyond the Ural mountains lay still under the spell of snow and ice. The first steamboats from Tjumen to Tomsk were lying icebound for eight to ten days. I have thus been delayed at Ekaterinburg, Tjumen, Tobolsk, and Tomsk, yet this delay has not been unprofitable, as I have been able to see more of the internal management of prisons and their inmates than I should have seen in passing hastily. With the exception of Perm and Tjumen I have not seen so much overcrowding of prisons as I saw last year; on the whole I can record improvement. The retarded navigation caused an accumulation of prisoners at Tjumen for the time, but this has now been relieved. There was no overcrowding at Tomsk this time, nor in any of the intermediate stations. The transports from Europe bring from six to eight hundred prisoners every week, and two transports of three to four hundred are sent on further every week. Thus influx and efflux are keeping pace so far. In Tobolsk and in Tomsk great improvements have been effected in some of the prisons through the efforts of local authorities by repairing the buildings and giving useful and remunerative employment to the prisoners; but this cannot be done when prisoners are constantly on the move, and are transported from steppe to steppe until they reach their respective destinations.

The life of utter idleness has a sadly demoralising effect on them, and men who have tramped from prison to prison for years, being fed and clothed at the expense of the Government, are not able to settle down to any employment when the time of their release has come. The effect of this is most pernicious, and sooner or later again to the prison, and thus their numbers are constantly increased. One meets on the road very many exiles who are on their way to their former homes, many of them are re-arrested and again sent to Siberia for longer terms, yet they again make their escape and often are re-captured on their way. They live by begging, and there are many who six to ten times have crossed and recrossed the Siberian boundary, thus swelling the ranks of exiles at the expense of Government.

I am allowed great liberty in speaking to the prisoners, both in their wards and in the open air, and I find amongst them many eager listeners, and not a few whose expressed desire is to turn to the Lord with all their hearts. The New Testaments I give them are greatly prized, and some men who had received the Book last year showed it to me again with joy and gratitude. One man at Tomsk had received last year the four Gospels, he begged now to have it exchanged for a whole New Testament. He had learnt to read more perfectly since last year, when he could only spell a few words. We were allowed to take away with us a young man of sixteen, the only son of a widow living in Irkutsk. He had through some misfortune, not through his own fault, lost his documents, and was now in prison waiting to be sent off by a transport. These transports are three months on the road from Tomsk to Irkutsk, and all this time the poor lad would have had to spend in the company of criminals of all sorts, and the association with evil never leaves a young man unstained. We have taken him to give him back to his mother. One meets with many of sin and sorrow. The sufferings of women and children following their husbands into exile are beyond description.

This town of Krasnojarsk is the centre of commerce between the northern and southern parts of the Yeniseisk Government, as well as between Tomsk and Irkutsk; it is situated on the banks of the noble stream Yennisey, and has steamboat communication with Yenniseisk and the farther North, and Minusinsk and the South. It is a fine town, clean and well built, and there are some very wealthy merchants, whose stores have the appearance of exhibitions of all kinds of goods. Many political exiles are sent here and ordered to live in some of the neighbouring villages.

My route lies from here vid Kansk and Nijney Udinsk to Irkutsk and thence to Werchney Udinsk, Chita, Nertschinsk, Kara, &c., God willing, as far as Saghalien. "Hitherto the Lord has helped us." Praise Him! There are open doors in Siberia for speaking the glorious Gospel. Pray for us, and pray the Lord of the harvest that He may send labourers into this harvest field. The hour-glass of my time is running out, and younger men should press forward into the work, "while the days are going by."

Letters are not likely to reach me, except through my home address: Weston-super-Mare.—Yours in the fellowship of the Master's call,

F. W. Baedeker.

AN ITALIAN VILLAGE BECOMES PROTESTANT.

On a Sunday in July I was present at a most interesting ceremony which took place at Monte Orfano, a village on one of the hills overlooking the lovely Lake Maggiore.

For the last twenty years the villagers have had no priest, and for eight years the priest of a neighbouring village who was appointed to say mass there every Sunday has neglected them. Feeling that "they could not live without religion" they began to make inquiries, and read the Bibles which they had bought some years before from a zealous colporteur of the British and Foreign Bible Society, who has since been called to his rest.

These mountaineers are a sturdy race of quarrymen and stonecutters, who, having made their determination, are resolved to carry out what they consider to be right. Some of them have been in Swiss Protestant cantons, and a few have Bibles. The village mayor and the proprietor of the quarry have from time to time had conversations with the Rev. Alberigo Bossi, pastor at Intra and Pallanza; and the schoolmistress, having attended the night-school at Intra, advised these men to come to Signor Bossi.

In consequence of this, an unexpected deputation called upon him, asking him to become their pastor, and to take the service at Monte Orfano as frequently as he could.

Accordingly on Sunday, the 13th, after the service and Sunday-school at Intra, Signor Bossi, with family and friends, drove to the foot of Monte Orfano, where they were met by five of the principal men of the place, with the son of the owner of the quarry. They led us up the steep mountain path, and, when nearing the village, guns were fired off to hail our approach. Then the Mayor met us with the village band, and conducted us with all due formality to the room where they have been accustomed to receive the priest. Here they offered us refreshment, and then conducted us to the church, where the installation took place. A lectern with a Bible upon it was placed within the "altar rails," and the Pastor read and preached from it. The Mayor was in a place of honour a little behind the Pastor; and the choir, led by the Pastor's energetic wife, was composed of members of the congregation at Intra, and villagers from Quarna, who have suffered much persecution for Christ's sake; they had walked for in order to show their sympathy. The old church was crowded, and many stood outside, hundreds having come from neighbouring villages to hear the Evangelical service.

Signor Bossi gave an earnest sermon, taking for his text John ix. 27, "Will ye also be His disciples?" He told his hearers what a disciple of Christ should be; and, without entering into controversy, explained the Evangelical belief, and closed the service with heartfelt prayer that God would bless and guide these mountaineers in this decisive step. He asked the heads of families to unite and amongst them elect a Church council.

It is interesting that the church should thus return to its original use, as it was built for the early Christians, who fled for refuge to Monte Orfano in the time of the persecutions of Diocletian in the fourth century. It is cruciform, built of granite, and of ancient Roman architecture.

As the inhabitants had only ascertained on the Saturday that they could legally use the church for the Protestant service, there had been no time to remove the candlesticks, &c., from the "altar," nor the "miraculous" image of the Virgin. All will be carefully taken down and sent to the priest. We do not like our Bibles burnt, and therefore feel we must not insult what they consider sacred.

It was touching to hear the fathers say, "We could not bear to see our little ones growing up without religion."

We would ask for prayer that God's blessing may rest upon this village and others round the lake where the Gospel light is beginning to penetrate. I could tell of Azio, Cuvio, Quarna, &c., of the church schools, orphanage for boys and girls, boys' club, mothers' meeting, &c., at Intra, but my letter is already too long.

We are praying for six earnest lady workers, who would at their own expense reside in three central villages, evangelising in the district round, all being under the supervision of the Intra pastor. The climate is extremely healthy, living moderate, and workers would not be lonely, as they would be within easy reach of the pastor and his family. The language is not difficult, and workers are more needed than in the towns. We also need a lady who would act as mother to the orphans. Any lady feeling that God is calling her to this work, or anyone disposed to help with contributions to any branch, kindly communicate with me. (Miss) Jane Cox.

THE BIBLE AND GOSPEL VAN, worked by Messrs. Wharton, Perrott, Bailey, and Fox, after attracting large numbers of people nightly to hear the Gospel in the towns of the Staffordshire potteries, has proceeded on its way to Leek and Buxton.

THE LEPERS OF INDIA.—We have just heard of the baptism of twenty-six more lepers at Purulia (Chota Nagpore), and of the triumphant death of a Christian leper, who was baptized only last year at the same place. This makes 118 adult lepers received into the Christian Church since the commencement of the Purulia Asylum about two years ago. By the last mail to hand we hear of five lepers received into the Church of Christ at Neyoor, Travancore, and this news is accompanied by an earnest request to build a permanent leper asylum at Neyoor, and to purchase a site immediately which is to be had for £20. The calls to start new work in India and Burmah are very many and very urgent—some ten places in all.

ABOUT TWO LITTLE GIRLS.

By William Luff.

I want to tell you two stories, both quite true, about two little girls who led people to Jesus.

One lived in a village where I once stayed, and her father had been a very wicked man. When a little boy, his mother prayed with him; but he did not like prayer, and so ran away from home and got to London: but his mother still loved him and walked all the way to London after him. It was a long way, but not so far as Jesus came to seek us runaway boys and girls. He came all the way from heaven to earth.

When this boy grew up, he had a wife who used to like to go to chapel, and she would take the little girl of whom I want to tell you. But the father did not go: he went poaching; that means, he and other men used to go into the private woods and parks and catch the pheasants, partridges, and rabbits. Of course this was stealing.

One night the gamekeeper came to them, and this man was near being caught.

"Strike him down," cried his companions, and the old devil echoed the words, "Strike him down." He might have done so; but God kept him from this, or he would have added murder to theft.

One day his little girl came close to him and said, "Father, why do mother and I go to chapel and you do not go?"

He could not answer that question. Why should they sing God's praise, and he not? Why should they hear God's Word, and he not? Why should they pray, and he not? Ought not God to be as much to him as to his wife and child? He thought it over, and the Holy Spirit used that simple question to show him his sin.

After a while he went out, and in a lone lane he knelt down and cried to God to save him. When he told his story, he said, "I there saw that Jesus died for me."

Have you ever believed that Jesus died for you, that he was wounded for your transgressions? If so, try and tell someone else, father, mother, brother, or sister, and God may let you lead them to Jesus.

Now for my second story, which was told me by the lady who had the little girl in her class.

Though young she loved Jesus, and tried to serve Him. One day she had to go by train, when an old woman got in with a heavy burden, which my young friend took.

"Thank you, dear; it has been a great load to me. I am getting old, and cannot now do as I did when your age."

Here was an opportunity of speaking a word, so the little Christian ventured to ask her if she knew how to cast her burdens upon the Lord.

This quite offended the old dame, to think of a bit of a thing like her being so impudent as to ask such a question. "What do you know about casting your burden upon the Lord?" she asked.

Then the dear girl told how she once had a burden of sin, but that Jesus said, "Come unto me all ye that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Said she,

"I came to Jesus as I was,
Weary, and worn, and sad:
I found in Him a resting place,
And He hath made me glad."

Have you come to Jesus thus, or do you not want to hear about it, like the old lady?

They parted: but the girl prayed for the poor woman and a few weeks after they met again. It was in the street, and the woman was the first to speak this time, as she held out a trembling hand, and said,

"Oh, my dear, I have learned what it is to cast my burden upon the Lord."

She then told how the words had followed her: how sorry she felt that she had been so angry.

"I asked God to let me see you again, dear, and He has." So they both rejoiced together.

Are you a little Christian, one of Jesus Christ's young servants? If so, bring every burden to Him, and then He will help you to serve Him, perhaps at home, perhaps in the railway train.

SOWING THE SEED IN GERMANY.

Having just returned from a short tour in Germany, I should like to draw the attention of Christian people to a very real though quiet work going on at Leipzig in the large hospital there. One solitary Christian lady is engaged day after day, and year after year, in sowing the good seed of the kingdom among the sick and suffering ones there. The demand for religious books and tracts is very great, but as there are about 150 wards to be visited, the supply is not always equal to the demand. I went through one of these crowded wards with that devoted Christian lady who has given her life to the work, and took with me a large supply of Gospels and books, but the number of recipients was so great that I had only got about halfway down the ward when all my books were gone! One poor dying man, seeing us giving away the blessed little messengers of peace, made a great effort to get up in his bed, and stretched out his long, bare, skeleton arm to beg for one, and I did rejoice that I was able to give it.

Should any Christian wish to give German Gospels or tracts, or money to buy them, to help on this good work, will he or she kindly send the contribution to Mrs. Macrae, 45, Moray-place, Edinburgh. It will be at once forwarded to the lady at Leipzig, who, I am sure, will be deeply grateful for any help of this kind.

"MORE GOSPEL AND LESS RUM."—Here is a significant message, sent by a native chief of the Congo region who had been taught by missionaries to read and write to the secretary of a Missionary Society:—"Great and Good Chief of the Tribe of Christ, greeting: The humblest of your servants kisses the hem of your garment, and begs you to send to his fellow-servants more Gospel and less rum. In the bonds of Christ, Ugalla."

YOUNG MEN AT WINNIPEG.

The Young Men's Christian Association of Winnipeg, Manitoba, was organised in 1879, and since then has proved a blessing to thousands of young men, especially from the Old Country. One half of the names on the visitors' register are from England; so that, though 5000 miles from England, it is doing a large work among English young men. Hundreds, strangers in the country, call every year at the headquarters of the Association, use the comfortable rooms, seek information or advice from the secretary (who has been ten years at the work in Winnipeg) or assistant, and in not a few cases, through the meetings or the personal work of a member, Christ is accepted as a Saviour.

The value of such an institution in a town into which so many strangers find their way, with its rooms open every day in the year, its secretaries always on hand to welcome and advise with strangers, its membership affording Christian companionship, its employment bureau (through which, last year, employment was found for 182), its boarding-house register, its well-supplied reading-room, cheerful and home-like parlour, library, practical "talks" or lectures, social evenings, educational classes, Bible-classes, Gospel meetings, &c.—the practical value of such an institution, we say, can hardly be overestimated.

It is a safeguard to young men at a time and under circumstances when, separated from the restraining and elevating influences of home, they most need sympathy and help. The daily average attendance at the rooms for the quarter ending June 30 was 140. The work is at present greatly hindered for want of suitable accommodation, the present rooms being insufficient both in size and equipment.

The Association has recently purchased a splendid site upon which to erect a suitable building. As the outlay will be large, any of our readers whose interest may be directed to Winnipeg are invited to communicate with Mr. R. J. Whitla (president), or Mr. C. M. Copeland (general secretary).

THE DRINK FIEND IN EGYPT.

Dear Sir,—I am very anxious to make known to Christian friends, through the valuable medium of your paper, the much to be regretted fact that the use of intoxicating drink in this country is greatly on the increase.

I often visit the parents of our pupils; and some little time ago, as I was paying one of these visits, the nurse, who had taken the children out for a walk, came in, she and the children looking very frightened. It appeared they had just seen a black woman being taken to the police-station, and had heard from the policeman that the prisoner, who was a nurse in a family, had helped herself liberally to arrachie—a spirit resembling brandy. The woman had evidently been brought from a tribe of cannibals, and after the drink her savage nature returned, and the poor little child entrusted to her care was the victim.

The following Sunday Dr. Azoury preached a sermon on the evils of drink, and as most of the hearers were acquainted with the story of the slave, we have no doubt the sermon did much good. On hearing this dreadful story, and knowing of many disagreeable occurrences in Moslem houses in consequence of drink, where formerly intoxicating liquors were looked on with horror, I thought of putting this matter before our Christian friends, in the hope that some might feel themselves called upon to come out here as workers, or to send others to preach on temperance in this country.

Yours truly, Fereedy Shakoor.

British Mission, Cairo, July 21.

Farming Abroad.—Dear Sir,—With reference to your paragraph in a recent issue, will you allow us to say that the party starting on August 21 will sail in our Company's R.M.S. Vancouver. We shall be pleased to furnish any information as to the ocean and rail journey to any intending passengers who will correspond with us.

"OLD ASBURY," NEW YORK CITY.

This name now stands for a cluster of mission enterprises in the American London. After eight years' labour in Calcutta and Bombay, when I first came into touch with The Christian and its mi ssion-loving readers, I came to New York to undertake work for the great unchurched masses who throng the lower wards of the city. More densely populated than London, and more brutal in its heathenism than Calcutta or Pekin, I know of no field more needy.

Old churches are dying, old methods losing their drawing power, and vast districts are lapsing deeper and deeper into heathenism. I am one among a number of toilers in this pit. Like London, New York can furnish the best and the worst of people. Unfortunately, the best are finding homes up-town, or across the rivers which hem in Manhattan Island.

I first established a number of missions like McAll's in character, with a flavour of Miss De Broen's methods intermingled. We opened three Gospel halls—one among the Irish Roman Catholics, another among sailors and longshoremen near the Battery, the third among Catholics and Jews on the East River. A coffee tavern, reading-room, Kindergarten, and two dispensaries were opened. A deacons' home was also established.

This year I have concentrated my work about a large old church, located on the gilt edge of the slum, and in the midst of a vast population. The smaller missions, with the exception of one, are being carried on under Stephen Merritt's management. A revolution has been wrought in the old church. For twenty-five years barely existing, it is now the scene of intense and incessant activities. Three large congregations gather each Sunday. Outdoor meetings are held almost every evening, noonday prayer-meeting held daily except Sunday. Let me give you a list of our enterprises: (1) Revival service all the year round; (2) medical mission; (3) information and employment bureau; (4) boys' brigade; (5) deacons' home; (6) flower and ice mission; (7) street preaching; (8) union mass meetings, Sunday afternoons.

We have, Sunday afternoon and evening, an orchestra in attendance. Best of all, souls are saved every week. The street preaching is a great success. This means of evangelising the masses is not so much in vogue in New York as it is in England. We are convinced of its importance. The medical mission is a great blessing. I want, in closing, to invite attention to our information bureau. Hundreds who come from Christian homes are lost to the Church every year through lack of friends and opportune greeting when they reach the metropolis,

Our aim is to assist strangers to find Christian homes and Church surroundings, and, as far as we can, to find employment. We wish to be in communication with Christians in Europe, Britain, Ireland, Canada, and the States, who may direct people to us. We shall when necessary meet incoming strangers—if young ladies—and do all in our power to counteract the evil influences which always lie in wait for the unwary.

I trust friends within the circle of The Christian's influence will use us if they know of any persons coming to New York whom we might help.

This work, though under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church, is purely undenominational. Numbers are yearly lost in New York for the want of just the work we are attempting. We solicit the co-operation of Christians in parts of the world, for all the world seems now to look toward New York.

Our work, in all its many-sided details, depends upon the voluntary gifts of friends for its support. J. S. Stone.

The Opium Iniquity.

AN APPEAL TO MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT.

To Sir Joseph W. Pease, M.P., and about forty other Christian Members of Parliament.
House of Commons, London.

We, the undersigned, for ourselves, and in the name of the Chinese Christians of the different missions in Shanghai, have the honour to present the following petition, asking for it your consideration.

Last spring, when the various bodies of Christians met in due course for prayer, it was stated for our information that nearly ten thousand men in India, viz., British, American, and German ministers who labour there, native ministers, and foreign and native laymen have availed themselves of the opportunity, which is to be had this year, when the agreement between Great Britain and China regarding opium expires, to petition the Tsung-li Yamên to memorialise the Emperor that steps may be taken with your honourable country to discontinue the trade. The Christians, on hearing it, were filled with joy, and with one voice said, "The day of salvation for China has indeed come."

Alas! the perniciousness of opium is truly great, injuring the body as well as the mind, injuring not only the smokers but also their descendants. "Were all the bamboos of the Southern mountain used," they would seem insufficient to record all its evils; and thus it is that our country looks upon it as being in the same category as fornication and gambling, and that those who speak of the vices of the times invariably mention these three together as the chief; and that in one of the temples, where the lower world is represented, there can be seen the souls of the opium-smoker and the gambler standing before the judge, with the appearance of beggars, having not a thread to cover themselves with except two tiles hung in front and back.

In former times we heard that certain gentlemen in England had formed an Anti-Opium League, and also that the question of prohibiting its importation into China has been brought forward in Parliament. We then rejoiced, presuming that the evil would soon be remedied; but, contrary to our expectations, no practical results have yet been arrived at. Now, this time, seeing that the petitioners are so great in number, and among them are Christians of even opium-producing India, we believe that the heavenly Lord must have again in his compassion granted usanother pportunity, in order that the desired end at this day may be accomplished.

We venture to say that efforts on your country's part to bring about this prohibition ought not to cease, because although your people have not forced our countrymen to smoke it, yet since it comes from your dependency, they cannot be free of the responsibility of bringing the evil upon us, and cannot but feel a certain degree of regret.

We have heard that some people in the West say that opium is beneficial, but these must be blind to the fact that there is not one of those who do or do not use it, or of those who have used it and afterwards reformed, who does not know its banefulness. Those who use it curse the first pipe, and lament that it is too late for repentance; some laying the blame upon fate; others reproaching the friends who had enticed them to it, and still others reproaching those who sell it. Those who have never used it, and those who have reformed—and the latter are but two per cent. of those who try to do so—establish opium-cure homes, or present opium-cure pills, or invent miracles of cure by the gods. If opium were really beneficial why should these things be so?

Again, others say, if China thinks it an evil, why does she cultivate the plant within her own borders. The answer is that it has been a matter of necessity, because certain officials in our country said that since it was impossible to prevent the foreign drug from entering, it was well to memorailise the throne to permit its growth in our own country, in order to stop the outflow of silver. This is indeed not what a powerful country would do, but our country is not powerful. Knowing the reason of its cultivation, we are convinced that, if England takes steps to stop the trade, ours will stop its growth here.

We Christians in China know full well that Englishmen respond to that attribute of God which views all with equal benevolence, respect international intercourse, and cherish in their hearts the sentiment of, "Give not unto others what one does not desire for himself," and consequently that they will not cast aside, as if unheard, this matter, which is full of woe to our people.

In 1833 the Great Sovereign and the Parliament of your country issued an edict commanding the emancipation of slaves in all the dependencies and colonies, and granted £20,000,000 to compensate the owners, thereby declaring the principle that England would not, for the sake of gain, do or continue a business that wrongs fellow-beings. This benevolent action has won the profound respect of all nations. Now, since opium is a bane, we are sure also that she will not, for the small revenue derived from India, insist on importing it to our country.

Conduct which is beneficial to others is in the end beneficial to our own selves, and that which is hurtful to others is in the end hurtful to our own selves. Although India raises opium primarily to sell it to our country, yet there are already some in that country who use it, and there is fear that the number will increase, on account of which your Government will have soon "upon its hand a prickling thorn." This is what we mean by "that which is hurtful to others is in the end hurtful to our own selves."

In our humble opinion, although the stopping of opium cultivation may slightly affect India, it will not affect the general welfare of your empire, because when our people do not spend money on opium they would have a surplus to buy your other goods. Viewing the matter, then, in all its aspects, while the prohibition is not injurious to your empire's general welfare, it is certainly beneficial to our country, and it cannot but ward off a future danger to India.

Since at this time the ministers of the West are seizing the opportunity to make an effort "to turn back the mad water-flow already falling," and "in a morning's time to abolish the long-existing evil," we join our voices with theirs in presenting this petition, praying that you will consider our heartfelt words, and take steps to end the trade for ever. By so doing, you will respond to the life-loving attribute of God above. The evil comes from England, and to England we look for deliverance therefrom.

Our persons are humble and our words are feeble, but we will pray to God to aid England and China to remove this evil, and thereby to bring a blessing to our people.

The above is most respectfully submitted. We avail ourselves of the opportunity to present our respects, for which we need prepare no additional letter.

Shanghai, Kuang Hsü, 16th Year, 2nd Moon.....Day.
March.....1890.

THE NEW ZEALAND DRINK BILL (which is annually drawn out by Mr. C. M. Gray, of Christchurch) shows that during the year ending March 31, 1890, the sum of £1,996,286 was spent in intoxicating liquors. This means an average of £3 0s. 4d. per head of population, as against an average of £3 2s. 10½d. for the previous year. Mr. Gray exclaims: "Another cheering reduction! The thing is becoming pleasantly monotonous. For seven years in succession the Drink Bill of this Colony has shown a continuous diminution."

Rev. W. F. MOULTON, D.D.,

President of the Wesleyan Conference.

THE Wesleyan Methodists have this year done honour to one who is a worthy successor of the ablest of the men who have passed the presidential chair of the Conference. It has long been understood that whenever Dr. Moulton should feel himself free to accept the post his brethren would elect him President, as they did with great enthusiasm a fortnight ago in the city of Bristol. The Methodist Recorder briefly and correctly describes him thus:—

As a Biblical scholar of the highest attainments and distinguished eminence, a member of the New Testament Revision Company, an able commentator on Scripture, and now for many years past the successful Head Master of the Leys School, Dr. Moulton has rendered invaluable service, not only to Methodism but to the whole Church of Christ.

William Fiddian Moulton was born at Leek, in North Staffordshire, in 1835, and comes of a good Methodist stock. His father was a minister, as also was his grandfather. After careful training in a home circle characterised by sound culture as well as eminent piety, the youth was sent, at the age of eleven, to Woodhouse Grove School, where he laid the foundation of learning, and benefited by counsels and advantages which he has ever since rejoiced to acknowledge. In 1850 he proceeded to Wesley College, Sheffield, where he enjoyed the warm friendship of the respected Governor's son, now Mr. S. D. Waddy, Q.C., M.P. After a three years' course he engaged in tuition at Taunton, and graduated at the London University, M.A. in 1856. He obtained the gold medal in mathematics and natural philosophy, and took prizes for Hebrew and Greek and Christian evidences, gaining a mark of "special distinction" never obtained before or since. He was then a young man of twenty-one.

Having been received a member of the Wesleyan Methodist Society, Mr. Moulton was, in 1858, appointed classical tutor at the Wesleyan Theological College, Richmond, where he was held in high esteem and affection by successive bodies of students. After sixteen years' hard work, he was designated Head Master of the new institution at Cambridge—the Leys School. In 1872, after he had been fourteen years in the ministry, he was elected a member of the Legal Hundred of the Connexion. Only in three instances previously had members been elected to this honourable position so early in their ministerial career, but the attainments and services of the man fully justified the distinction. The Leys School was founded to provide for the higher education of the sons of Methodists, and under Dr. Moulton's administration it has admirably met the important purpose for which it was established. Methodist members of Cambridge University have found in him a ready helper and wise counsellor. In 1877 the Senate conferred upon him honoris causâ the degree of Master of Arts; three years previously he had received the honorary degree of D.D. from the University of Edinburgh.

Dr. Moulton has made substantial contributions to literature. He is, perhaps, best known as the translator of Winer's celebrated Grammar of New Testament Greek. He not only translated the work from the German, but so enriched it throughout that critics have rightly concluded that there is no scholar more capable than Dr. Moulton to produce an independent work likely to supersede that of Winer. It is understood that Dr. Moulton is engaged upon the marginal references for the Revised New Testament.

It is by dint of sterling worth that Dr. Moulton has come to be honoured by Methodists everywhere. He is not such a bookworm as to be wanting in interest as to the practical and spiritual work of the Connexion. Living in comparative retirement, he has been a careful observer of the movements which have engaged the heads and hearts of the great body of Christian people. On the occasion of his election to the presidential chair he made a speech in which, after testifying his affection for Methodism, he said:—

The world is changing around us; there are modifications in the form in which men present truth, inasmuch as there are modifications in the form of error. Our Church is, I trust, seeking more and more to be faithful to all the responsibilities of a church. What is called the "Forward Movement"—and I have the greatest sympathy with the "Forward Movement"—does not consist in the adoption of new principles, but illustrates what I have thought to be characteristic of Methodism—unity in variety. We have one principle, but never refuse to adopt any form of work in which we have reason to believe that we can glorify God and benefit man. We are all here present before God. Man looks upon us, but there is a greater than man, who looks upon us to see whether our result and practice answer to the Faith which we have professed. What limit is there to that which we may hope if each one of us thus stands related to the Living God—to the Saviour of mankind?

There is true Methodist fervour as well as unquestioned academic culture in Dr. Moulton. The Methodist Times says he has many of the gifts of the statesman as well as of the scholar and professor. Therefore we may confidently hope that his year of office will be in all the highest senses a very successful one, and that at the close our Methodist friends will be able to rejoice with their Scholar-President over extended goodwill throughout their societies and decided evangelistic advance at home and abroad.

As a preacher, Dr. Moulton has, since his appointment to the Leys, been little known. But while at Richmond he frequently preached in London, and his careful and eminently helpful expositions were gratefully welcomed by all students of the Holy Scriptures. The School has been a signal success, there being more than 160 boys in residence, drawn from all the evangelical churches. They hold the Principal in high esteem, and deservedly so, for he seeks their spiritual as well as moral and physical good. The late Edwin Bainbridge thus gave expression to this in a letter to his sister:—"You have no idea what a grand old chap the Doctor is: if we find any difficulties in our Christian life, we have just to go to him, and he will do his best to help us out of them, and nearly goes wild with joy." We pray God's blessing upon the Doctor in the discharge of all his varied and onerous duties.

The Keswick Convention.

FRIDAY.

The summaries we have already given of the addresses at the Convention have afforded some idea of the line of teaching throughout. The important pronouncement on this morning by Rev. H. W. Webb Peploe, we are giving verbatim, but are obliged to postpone it until next week. We must content ourselves with briefer mention of other addressrs.

Rev. H. C. G. MOULE gave a most weighty and practical utterance at the forenoon meeting on "the promise for all places and all times," "Lo, I am with you alway even unto the end of the world" (Matt. xxviii. 20). We shall soon be going away, he said, to take up the common duties of life; how immensely more is life a test than an excitement. Circumstances do sometimes excite and uplift, but a thousand times oftener they are round us to test us. Woe be to us, therefore, if we are relying upon circumstances to be our strength amidst themselves. Let us take as a concentrated summing up of all our hopes and desires the words of Paul when he said his earnest expectation was that "Christ may be magnified in my body whether by life or by death."

First let us aim that Christ shall be magnified by its being made plain that to be filled with His Spirit means that it makes us faithful in that which is least. Perhaps we are going back to some duties that we have been getting very tired of, and wondering whether God could not give us something more remarkable or pleasant or interesting to do. But just as long as that old path is still His will we are going to it with an intense desire that in its details we should be so thorough, and should think nothing too small to be remembered as duty so that Christ shall be magnified in our body. Shall we begin with the word "patience" for one of our watchwords in this magnifying of the Lord? Another watchword is "love"—a word that seems to include almost everything. Some have called it the shortest spelling of the word "holiness," and it is not far amiss. Shall we not magnify Him by somehow learning, as Paul says, to do all our doings in love (1 Cor. xvi. 14), in sympathy, in surrender not only to the rights of others but to the wishes and pleasures of others, to the greater credit of others, and in a readiness to enter deeply into the sorrows of others' hearts.

We have been listening to many words from many minds, on many sides of the one glorious truth. In gathering up one or two of the thoughts, let me use the word "simplicity" as a watchword now. It is good to have our theories clear. Sometimes it helps us in action to have a well-defined grasp of the reasons why; but do not let the reasons why complicate the simplicity of the action. Christ says: "I am the Way." It is all in Him, and in Him is all. There is no need, no temptation, no trial, for which all the store and treasure are not laid up in Christ. Remember that He is never below the brim for anything we really need. Though it is true that in Jesus Christ we have all, from another point of view we are always to be taking the position of the poor beggar. There are two words in the Greek language for poor. One applies to a man who works because he is poor, and the other to a man who begs because he is poor. The Lord Jesus, when He says, "Blessed are the poor in spirit," uses the mendicant word.

As to consecration, I would not say a word against surrender and yielding to God; may He give me to know more of it every day. But I do want to caution you against thinking that there is any virtue, or beauty, or recommendation of ourselves in consecration. What is consecration? It is giving up stolen property. It is pointing the Master, with tears, to what we have taken away from Him, that He may take it back. There is no moral beauty about that, any more than there is moral beauty in a man stretching out his hand, in starvation, to take a rich man's gift.

Let us take away, as a closing word, "Prepared unto every good work." How is it that we so often fail when we need not? Do not let us ever sit down with a sort of doleful content under failure. We fail because we are not prepared. Oh, what blessed successes, what humble magnification of Christ, and what effacement of self there would have been if we had been so prepared. As we turn a corner in life how often we find ourselves unprepared for what is almost sure to happen. Then as we go along the daily path we meet with little frets and stings, little bits of dust in the eyes, and so on. As we go round the corner or meet the daily care, shall we take the Lord Jesus Christ with us? With his companionship we shall be prepared for every experience. In Him we shall have the wealth of the Indies. To Him be all the glory. Let us say to Him: "Lord, so far as it is possible, let us be effaced, whilst thou art magnified in us."

Rev. E. H. Hopkins followed with a clear and concise statement as to the relation between soul condition and conduct. If we keep ourselves in the perpetual stream of God's supply of power we shall find his service easy. At the last evening meeting Rev. J. G. Gregson, in the first address of the evening, contended that the life of holiness should be a perpetual Pentecost. The man who is filled with the Spirit will not be led into any unscriptural extravagance, but it will be made manifest to all men that he is led of the Spirit. The closing address was by Rev. C. A. Fox, who based his exhortation on Solomon's building of the temple, and showed by the analogy of the narrative the character of those whom God employs for his work, their preparation, and their motives, and the spirit of joyous consecration in which the work is done. In the closing after-meeting almost the whole of the vast assembly stood up in recognition of having experienced an access of spiritual blessing at the Convention.

MINISTERS' MEETINGS.

Two largely attended Ministers' Meetings were held in the Drill Hall on Tuesday and Thursday. These meetings were marked by great solemnity, and were evidently felt to be of deep practical import. The first was presided over by the Rev. H. C. G. Moule, who gave a short opening address from 2 Tim., i. 9, 12, 14. He remarked that behind all their speaking, explaining, warning, as ministers, there was meant to lie the deep rest of a personal experience and knowledge of Him of whom they spake—and that would be experienced in proportion as they entered into the depth of the meaning of the words, "I know Him" in the glory of his person and the perfectness of his work—alike a finished work and a continuing work. The Chief Shepherd is able to keep my deposit humbly put over into his lands—and in a sense left entirely there—left there from the point of view that we have given up the thought of self-keeping. As ministers going more solemnly than ever to recollect that we must walk by the Spirit, the blessed Paraclete, the Revealer of Christ, the Imparter of the power of Christ, the Bond of oneness between us and Christ.

Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe dealt with a question propounded to him. What are we seeking definitely to teach? He said there had been a side of truth connected with the great all-important truth of Sanctification, which had not been for a long time emphasized as it ought to be in the Church of this land. While we lean upon God, the Holy Ghost is the agent by whom the progressive work in ourselves is to be carried on. There has not been sufficient emphasis given to the personality of the Lord Jesus Christ as the great Sanctifier or Source of Sanctification. Instead of the old teaching in which I had been brought up—that I was to struggle and the Holy Ghost was to aid me, I learned that Christ was to come in and take possession of me absolutely, that Christ was to be Lord and Master, and as Lord and Master He was responsible for his servants; and that he should keep me moment by moment magnifying Himself through the weakness of the vessel. Up to that time I expected defeat, and if there was victory or deliverance I was greatly astonished; but from that moment I may humbly say I calmly and perpetually expected deliverance—not merely the aid of the Holy Ghost, but the very presence of Christ by the Holy Ghost to act upon me and even through me.

The Second Ministers' Meeting was held in the Drill Hall, on Thursday forenoon. Rev. Evan Hopkins presided, and gave an address founded on Heb. xiii. 20 and 21, which, he said, expresses a prayer put up on behalf of those who are already Christians. Spiritual adjustment precedes spiritual enduement. We may be Christians in a state of spiritual dislocation. The meaning of the passage "God make you perfect," is, God put you into joint in every good work to do his will. Now while Sanctification is progressive, the conditions essential to progressive Sanctification may be brought about immediately. We have an illustration in the case of a man walking in the right road, or rather not walking, limping, crawling, going to a certain town. He is making painful efforts to make progress. You ask him where he is going. He says "Thank God, I am in the right way." You ask him "How is it you are not walking?" He says "I have dislocated my ankle and it is out of joint." You say "The first thing you have to do is to be put into joint in order to walk and make progress." He says "I know that, but I hope by making progress to get into joint." Now the being put into joint is an immediate thing, the making progress a gradual thing. So many Christians are practically out of joint. They need spiritual adjustment as to their minds, conscience, affections, will. We must bring all to the Word of God to get all adjusted and brought into harmony with God, and that there be no controversy between our soul and God.

Rev. H. C. G. Moule gave a short address rom 2 Tim. ii. 21. He said a vessel is some-hing to carry and to be carried, and we cannot ake too simply and too deeply into our being hat we are "vessels of the Lord." If we bear bout our own name, we grossly misuse our-elves. The vessel is absolutely nothing, ex-ept as a piece of property belonging to the Master. We are pieces of property for another o own, and for another to carry about, up nd down, for the uses of the house where He places us, in what room He chooses, and for what purposes He wills, vessels unto honour —the blessed honour of being nothing in our-elves, but something for the Master's use, and well usable by Him—separated entirely to Him. We must be detached that we may be ready for the Master to use. We have to purge ourselves; is there anything to lay at his feet? pride, vanity, love of reputation, greediness of applause, any unwillingness to be criticised, to be spoken against, to be left in a corner, to be left out, to be put down, to be done without—any prejudice, any unkind feeling, anything against the spirit of love and purity? We must prostrate ourselves in separation of heart and soul and will from these things, that we may be for God's purposes, God's ends, and in God's way, vessels yielded to the Master, that the Master will be glad to use to the honour of his name.

LADIES' MEETINGS.

The Lecture Hall was daily crowded by the time the meetings began. A great spirit of expectation was felt all through, yet those appointed to lead never felt more entirely emptied. For months before, every day had been "lived towards" these meetings, and much preparation made, both of Scripture and spirit. But at the time they all agreed that they were utterly thrown on the momentary provision of the Holy Spirit, and that they had possession of nothing which could do themselves any credit before others. But the writer, amongst others, can testify that the words given were living water, freshly poured out, and made very real to those present by the felt power and presence of the Lord the Spirit.

There was a daily meeting at 11.30, and two for young ladies alone on Tuesday and Thursday. These last were in charge of Mrs. Tottenham, and the numbers present showed how blessedly God is stirring amongst the younger ones, leading them out to be wholly for Him in a way which the older ones joyfully recognise as another sign of his nearing return, and as a proof of his faithfulness against our distrust. Young ones spoke to the young ones at these meetings, and they were greatly blessed. A third was held on the Saturday, which was a time of great impression. The general subject dwelt on was, The Claim, "Thou art mine; and the Response, "I am Thine."

At the daily meetings Mrs. Bannister and Miss Nugent were again in charge, but both never more strongly felt as "nothing"—only instruments in his mighty hand. Miss Nugent opened with prayer, and then read Haggai ii. Mrs. Bannister then gave a most heart-convicting address on the further enduing of the Holy Ghost which is possible, and provided for each one who has accepted the Lord Jesus as the Atonement. It was one of the marked addresses of the week, both in power and hold on the hearers, for every heart seemed unusually drawn towards the Lord's Pentecostal pledges, and ready to bend under his conditions. She strongly urged the search through the Word for every verse on the subject, saying how great the blessing had been to herself.

On the next day, the requests for prayer began to flow in, and, after presenting them, Lady Carbery spoke on "The Daughters of Zion," with the warnings and promises addressed to them, beginning with Isa. lxii. 11, and ending with the restoration in Isa. lii. 1. Miss Nugent followed with a few words on Haggai ii., with ts special appropriateness of it being a message given on the exact date of the Keswick assembling this year—the one and twentieth day of the seventh month. She remarked that Haggai was a man without biography, absolutely unknown, except that "the word of the Lord came" to him, and how many an unknown, uneventful life might become dignified by this honour.

The next day there was a very deeply moving address from Mrs. Bannister. She spoke of the Holy Ghost having been poured forth, therefore all our part was to let Him in. The various emblems under which He is spoken of as fire, water, &c., are all things which force their way in wherever there is the least opening One of the chief openings is a surrendered will. She then spoke on the general pervading of the life which would follow the surrender to the Holy Spirit, speaking not only of the brilliant and conspicuous results, as it were, but of the bending to the discipline of common things, down to very humble details. She ended with the solemn warning of Amos iv. 7. Then followed a time of much prayer and yielding and real response from one after another; and then was sung, kneeling, "All my doubts I give to Jesus."

The meeting ended by Miss Nugent speaking on the first altar of the Bible, and how it followed the ark, for there must be conscious safety before there can be surrender. What Noah sacrificed were of the very things then required to carry out God's command of replenishing the earth, even the clean beasts. He did not think them too valuable to yield. And what flowed from that surrender? Even a promise of blessing, and commission to be fruitful and multiply. So the whole earth to this day has the benefit of that one man's sacrifice. And the Lord Himself had something from it, for He smelled a savour of rest. Then how can we withhold from Him what will give us blessing for ourselves, and power to bless others, and Him rest?

The last day was a joyous one. The leaders took little part except in guiding, as testimony after testimony was given, short, distinct, and spontaneous. One specially touched all hearts, from Miss Blanche Pigott, as she rallied all in a few fervent words to glory in his cross. Miss Nugent gave as parting words, "Yield and Yes," which were his receipt for maintaining a surrendered life in its joy; and also "Exult," from the two sentences in the Revised Version of Zeph. iii. 11 and Isa. xiii. 3. The former: "I will take away...them that exult in THY majesty," making room for the new exultation —"I have called...them that exult in MY majesty."

So the latter dispersed, with the deep impression that the altar of sacrifice, so often and so strikingly alluded to through the whole Convention, was not a place of tears and loss, but his opportunity for his fire to glow, and his pledge of fruitfulness to be given.

TESTIMONY MEETING.

The testimony meeting of Friday afternoon was marked by the customary flow of individual witness bearing. Those who testified were of all ages, of both sexes, and of the most varied conditions of experience. Some told of very peculiar leading by God in having attended the Convention, or of special difficulties by which they had been beset. All were full of praise for the blessing received, and of holy resolve to expend in God's service the strength He had given them to realise as theirs in Christ. There was a good sprinkling of ministers of the Gospel among those who gave testimony. One touching incident happened when, after a minister had borne witness to the reception of blessing, a lady rose and said, with broken utterance, that she had been praying for a blessing on this minister and the town from which he came, and now her prayer had been answered. Quite a number of the testifiers declared that the Tuesday night was the time when they had experienced the gracious dealings of God with them; that was the meeting at which Mr. Webb Peploe spoke of giving over to death all that God would have us to give over, that His life might shine forth through us. There was a reality and sincerity of tone about the testimonies that could not be mistaken.

At the praise meeting on Saturday morning, the hour was filled up by a constant stream of texts from the platform first, and then the body of the tent, expressive of the varied feelings and desires of those who uttered them.

THE MISSIONARY MEETING.

Last week we gave the address by Rev. G. C. Grubb, descriptive of his mission tour, which was the first item in the great missionary gathering on the closing morning of the Convention. After him came a brief word of testimony from one of Mr. Grubb's companions. He said his journey had proved very humbling to himself, and revealed to him that he had been harbouring much unbelief. He believed the Church was only at the beginning of a new era, and that she would see the works of Christ done over again. May the result of this Convention be that multitudes shall be driven into the harvest-field to win souls for God. He had only been a few months a missionary, but during that time he had been beset by temptations he never knew of before. He could scarcely explain it, but he seemed to have lost joy and power, though his heart was peaceful and he enjoyed Divine communion day and night. The Lord had shown him at this Convention, that if we wish to live in perpetual joy and victory, we must entrust Him with our eyes, so that we shall not look at self, but shall keep our eyes fixed on Jesus, trusting that He will work through us. Thank God we have got a Leader, and we have but to follow Him. Mr. Campbell advised those who are engaged in business-life, and who feel a call to missionary work, not to be in haste in relinquishing their occupation, but to wait on God for distinct and definite guidance.

Mr. MILLARD

then spoke. He was another of Mr. Grubb's companions, and his testimony at last year's Convention must be still fresh in the minds of all who heard it. He said that after that Convention his plans with respect to going to China with Mr. Skeffington were altered, as the Lord had not made it plain that they were to go. The path of blessing is the path where He distinctly leads. As we go out into the world to face temptation we may know of a truth that Jesus Christ Himself will stand between us and the temptation. In their journey round the world Jesus had been with them all the time, and had shown them many of their mistakes. Mr. Millard gave a wonderfully interesting leaf out of the volume of his missionary experience, respecting God's dealings with one particular family in New Zealand. We give his account pretty fully, and think it will be enjoyed by our readers, young and old alike:—

One morning in one place we visited, Mr. Grubb said to me, "You ought to take a children's service here." I said I was quite willing, if it were God's will. We had between 800 and 900 children each afternoon. There were a lady and gentlemen in the place with one little boy. During the address one afternoon I was telling the children how, in the mornings, our first thought often is about our doll, or our newspaper, or our household affairs. But our waking thought ought to be to say something to Jesus. This boy, five years old, had a little arrow sent into his heart that afternoon. His mother said to me afterwards: "My little boy seems to have got a blessing." "Indeed," I said. "He is accustomed to come into our room every morning, and say 'Good morning.' This morning he came to our room in his sleeping clothes, and, as we were half asleep we heard him say, "Good morning, Jesus: good morning, father and mother." What a blessing I learned for my own soul then, as I thought of the little fellow of five saying, "Good morning, Jesus." The parents came to the mission, but the father was very reluctant to come. One day his wife went home and said, "Mr. Millard prayed for you." "The very idea! Do you mean to say that they prayed for me in the meeting?" "Yes, they did; you were not mentioned by name, but it was you that was meant." "Well, I'm blowed!" A little while after, this gentleman came to me, and said, "Will you come and stay at my house?" "With pleasure." I packed up my things, and went to stay there two or three nights. I arrived about six o'clock, and he immediately began flooding me with conversation about horses and dogs, and stables, and boats, and everything I did not want to hear about. I was very thankful when he said it was time to go to bed. As we were parting for the night he said, "Would you like to get a ride in the morning?" I said that I was fond of riding, and would be very glad. At six o'clock the following morning two horses were brought and away we went. Presently he said to me: "That horse you are riding will not go over wooden bridges." "That is rather awkward," I said, "if we have to cross many." "Yes, we do." We went on and we had to cross some water, but his horse refused to jump. He got very angry and said some things which of course the horse did not understand. He said to me the only thing to be done was to cross one of those wooden bridges; but he assured me my horse would not go. I said it was all right. He said he had been paying a trainer so much a month to train the horse to go over these bridges, but he would not go. I told him that if it was absolutely necessary we should go over a bridge, as the Lord had made the horse, the Lord could make him go across the bridge. We galloped on about half a mile till we came to a bridge, and then the horse stopped. As I sat there, I lifted up my heart to God, and in a little while the horse went on and walked straight across the bridge. And he has crossed bridges ever since. The gentleman was astonished, and he wrote to the trainer to say he did not require his services any longer as he had got a better trainer.

A little while after, the boy was suddenly taken ill with fever. His thermometer went up to 105, and the mother was in a great state of excitement. She scarcely knew what she was doing, and went rushing about the house. They sent to a place two miles away to get ice. As the little fellow was lying there with throbbing head, his mother tried to comfort him by saying the ice was coming directly. The ice was a long time in coming, and the boy turned in his bed and said: "Mother, can't Jesus make me better?" She did not know what to say, but, as she told me afterwards, she got down on her knees, buried her face in her hands, and said, "O Lord Jesus, make little Tommy quite well." He jumped up in bed and said: "Jesus has made me perfectly well." Then he said: "Mother, I am so tired," and fell asleep in her arms. She laid him down, and when her husband came home he found Tommy lying in bed fast asleep. He did not waken till the middle of the night. When his father asked him how he was, he replied, "Jesus made me better." That was made a great blessing to the mother. She called some of her friends together, and there, in her drawing-room, as we knelt together, one young man and two ladies claimed the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour and Keeper by the filling of the Holy Ghost. They are now testifying as to what God is able to do.

A BUSINESS STATEMENT.

Mr. Robert Wilson at this stage read the financial report of the Keswick Mission, which showed that in 1888 £908 were subscribed, and £633 in 1889, amounting in all to £1,541. In 1889 there was expended in various ways £871, and since then over £160, leaving a balance of £1040 to the credit of the fund. Of this £270 is for special work in Syria. It was intended last year to send two missionaries to China. The trustees, however, considered it better at the time to unite these brethren with Mr. Grubb's mission. But we think (said Mr. Wilson) we should not go exclusively on one line, and if any friends have funds that they wish to appropriate to a particular country their wishes will be attended to. Our brother, Mr. Millard, is hoping to go to China with someone else, after a time, if arrangements can be made. Mr. Haslam also purposes to go on a mission to India through the Keswick Mission fund. His intention is to arrive in Bombay about the middle of November, to stay there for a short time and then go to Calcutta, and afterwards take such work as the Lord provides for him, returning after a stay of about six months. He would be glad to hear of any young man who would be useful as a helper and who would desire to be associated with Mr. Haslam, especially if he is able to go at his own charges; but that is not absolutely essential. The mission in Syria is likely to take about £50 per annum out of the fund. Last year there was a sum of £200 given here for other missionary societies, and the amounts were duly distributed; a similar sum was contributed the year before. If we wish this work to be extended we must look to the Lord not only to give the men but the means. I do not at all fear but the means will be provided. Let us ask the Lord's grace and help for these our dear brethren, and that many more may be moved to go forth in whatever direction He wills. We thank God that He has so definitely blessed Mr. Grubb and those with him; I do not think he has been overburdened with instructions from those of us at home. It is expected that after Mr. Millard goes to China a mission centre may be formed there which those who desire to engage in work may unite themselves, as soon as suitable arrangements are made.

[During the Convention about £620 were given or promised—£450 for the Keswick Mission, and £170 for various others.]

At the close of Mr. Wilson's statement, Mr. Eugene Stock took charge of the meeting. In the first place he called on Rev. J. Wilkinson, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, and that ardent advocate of Jewish missions gave a very interesting address of ten minutes or so, showing in outline God's purpose with respect to Israel, and the bearing of it on the evangelization of the world. He also gave a few details with respect to the distribution of Hebrew New Testaments among the sons of Abraham. He said that very recently God had put him in possession of means for providing an additional 200,000 Testaments. By the distribution of these he hoped that a revolution would be effected among God's ancient people in every part of the world.

THE LATE MR. BOWKER.

At this point in the meeting, Mr. Wilson referred shortly to his late co-convener, Mr. H. F. Bowker, who had "fallen asleep" since the last Convention. While there is no occasion to mourn for him, as he is now at rest in the presence of the Master, we remember thankfully the loving-kindness he showed to so many in connection with this Convention. He has been missed by many. It is right to say that his two unmarried daughters have been left without means of support. Mr. Wilson said that Mr. Hopkins and himself had been receiving sums from various friends on their behalf. Though he did not wish to represent it as a case for charity, yet there was an opportunity for any friends showing their esteem towards Mr. Bowker by contributing to the fund to be invested for his daughters.

MR. EUGENE STOCK,

after some announcements, referred to the fact that two years ago a little slip of paper was sent to the platform, in which the writer said he wished to consecrate to the Lord his savings for the year, £10, for missionary purposes in connection with Keswick. That was the beginning of this blessed movement in connection with the Convention. Some mistakes had been made in print about the donor of the £10. He is now in the mission field, but his identity is only known to Mr. Stock. This Keswick Convention is now being reproduced in different parts of the foreign field. Touching letters have been received from India, China and Japan about Christian brethren and sisters of all societies and denominations meeting to commune and to seek the blessing of the Lord. Mr. Stock read an extract of a letter received from a missionary who had been present at this Convention stating that as a thank-offering for mercies experienced he and his wife wished to consecrate all their property to the missionary service, so that they could go out without any charge on the funds of the Church Missionary Society. Then the speaker read the following poem, which is published in leaflet form by the Church Missionary Society, Church Missionary House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.:

THE LAST HOUR.

"Little children, it is the last hour" (R.V.)
1 John ii. 18.

The sunset burns across the sky;
Upon the air its warning cry
The curfew tolls, from tower to tower;
O children, 'tis the last, last hour!

The work that centuries might have done
Must crowd the hour of setting sun,
And through all lands the saving name
We must in fervent haste proclaim.

Ere yet the vintage shout begin,
O labourers, press in! press in!
And fill unto its utmost coasts
The vineyard of the Lord of Hosts.

It is a vineyard of red wine,
Wherein shall purple clusters shine;
The branches of his own right hand
Shall overspread Immanuel's land.

The fields are white to harvest. Weep,
O tardy workers, as ye reap,
For wasted hours that might have won
Rich harvests ere the set of sun.

We hear his footsteps on the way!
O work while it is called to-day,
Constrained by love, endued with power,
O children, in this last, last hour.

Clara Thwaites.

Short, but very telling, addresses followed from five missionary ladies; two representing India, two on behalf on behalf of China, and one from Ceylon.

MISS DAWE, BENGAL,

dwelt very impresssively on the great spiritual needs of India's women. Those who go to that foreign field, she said, can realise something of the meaning of our Saviour's compassion for the perishing multitudes. The people there are dying every day without God, and without hope. Would that the hearts of many ladies who had attended the Convention, might be so touched with compassion for their Indian sisters, that they will give their lives for those shut up in the dark and dreary zenanas. Doors of opportunity are open on all hands, and those now at work are overwhelmed with calls for Christian labour. Many villages are without a single witness to the message of salvation. What can we say to the Master when we meet Him, if we do not obey His call? Surely we dare not stay at home, unless God has put some special hindrance in the way of our going. It is a great privilege to go; if our Christian sisters only knew the joy of labouring for the Master among His heathen, they would all want to arise and go.

MISS MATTHEWS, LUCKNOW, gave interesting details about work there among women and children. The mission schools are much owned of God, and among the children are many earnest little Christians. Some touching cases of Christian witness-bearing from the young were given. Some of these boys and girls have to endure much opposition and even cruel persecutions from parents and friends, but they are kept faithful in their testimony to Christ. Miss Matthews was very pathetic in her appeal to Christian parents in England to allow their daughters to go into the foreign field. She said she knew of at least four young ladies present at the Convention who wanted to go, but their parents would not consent. She also knew of a case where the parents were willing but the daughter was not. In India there is only one lady missionary for every 217,000 of the women there.

MISS CAMPBELL, FROM CHINA, said she was at Keswick three years ago. Since then God had led her to the mission field in China, and now he had sent her back again for a time. She would say to her Christian sisters that God had need of them in China. The circumstances of going to China now are so altered that it is about as easy to go there as to Scotland or Ireland or France. How can we stay at home when the needs are so great abroad? Let all God's redeemed ones ask Him what He wants them to do with their lives. We have been asking God here to bless us; let us now ask Him to make us a blessing.

Miss Campbell told how the call for a thousand new missionaries for China within the next five years (she thought it ought to be two years) fell into the hands of some German friends in Bremen, and as God had greatly revived his work among them, they concluded that Germany ought to send out fifty new workers. But they would not wait for all Germany, so the little town of Bremen has resolved to send out ten on its own account and at its own cost. The greater number of this party are now in London learning the English language before starting for China.

MISS CLARA BRADSHAW was the second representative of China. She pressed earnestly home the fact that only Christian women can minister to the spiritual needs of women in China, as male missionaries have not access to the homes in the same degree. The Revised version of a verse in Job xxii says: "Lay thou thy treasure in the dust," and the next verse says: "The Almighty shall be thy treasure." She would pray that the parents and children in the tent might prove the truth of that. The southern province of Fu-Kien, in which she was at work, has ten millions of people; could not an army go out from Keswick and take possession of the province for Jesus? God is saying to us: "Who will go?" Shall not our answer be in the words of Mr. Grubb: "I know of nobody but myself"?

MRS. IRELAND JONES

told of a very interesting and successful new work in the villages of Ceylon, and made a most earnest appeal as her sisters had done, for fresh workers to devote their lives to this foreign service, in view of the many and wonderful openings everywhere.

DR. GRATTAN GUINNESS

emphasised the fact that Jesus has redeemed the world and gone to heaven, leaving us to evangelise it. Redemption is His, evangelisation ours. God has reconciled us to Himself by Jesus Christ, and has given to us the ministry of reconciliation. God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation. The work was His; He has put the word into our lips. He has redeemed the world, and two-thirds of humanity do not know that they have been redeemed, because they have not been told. What is to be the outcome of these meetings? A man said, "I prayed for the Holy Ghost, and believe I got it"—but the world won't believe it except they see it. The Spirit came as tongues of fire, so that we might go and speak in all lands the wonderful works of God.

"REDEEMED AND DON'T KNOW IT."

Let those words ring in our ears—250 millions in India, 250 millions in Africa, 250 millions in China, redeemed and don't know it. Shanghai Conference has just been held, and has sent a cry for a thousand missionaries in five years. My dear daughter sends letters written in tears—almost tears of blood. How welcome you would be there! You don't know the joy that waits you. I have had much to do with missionaries, and I have never seen one who found it hard to go the second time. When you go and see you cannot keep away.

In Africa there is the Congo region opened to the knowledge of the world—5,000 miles of navigable water and no Mohammedans to block the way. An intelligent and simple people, not all cannibals; they never eat the missionary people. Our Balolo Mission wants reinforcing, and if you are filled with the Spirit, you are the sort to go. In North Africa a little mission was opened a few years ago, within three days of London. The whole field is open and workers are wanted.

I can but, in my daughter's name, put my hand in yours, and say, "China wants you—a civilized land, and ladies travel largely without molestation." I am impressed with the minuteness of our land, but let it send the life-blood to the extremities; don't keep it. Go and be witnessess to ME. When he comes, oh the joy and the glorification for evermore.

MR. REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

When Jesus wept over the city, it was not on account of the gross sins of ungodly men, but because it did not know the time of its visitation. England, backed by America and Germany, is to occupy the world. I came, a few years ago, to Keswick, not to get blessing to my own soul, but to cry to my brothers on behalf of the perishing world, and I got blessing to my own soul as well. Keswick is not denominational. All are of one accord. It is not money we want, but the firstfruit of the Spirit—love.

Only ninety years ago the devil suggested that Sunday-school teachers should be paid. It was soon found that Sunday-school teaching must be voluntary work. Now the devil would like us to think the world must be evangelized by paid missionaries. They may be as devoted as you like, but the world will never be evangelized by them alone. I am a lawyer, and lawyers are accustomed to go by precedent. Is there any precedent in this case? The Apostles remained in Jerusalem when the persecution came, and five thousand men and five thousand women fled to save their necks; the Lord was with them, and they went everywhere preaching the word. What a fool a general would be if he thought the battle was to be won by the officers. He expects every man to do his duty.

Our men are scattering to Africa to occupy themselves in all kinds of business, and these poor blacks will have a proper sample of us. If Christians go full of the Holy Ghost, they will teach them the way of life. So disgusted have the people in Roman Catholic countries become by the representations of Christianity they have seen, that they must be reached not by ministers and clergymen—they must see men working with their own hands and brains and living the Gospel. Am I saying anything against our brothers being sustained? No; let us pray for them to be sustained, and that the people of God may give generously to sustain those who are in the mission field.

"Oh, to be nothing, nothing," was sung with bowed heads, with a pause after each verse, that any whom the Lord was definitely calling to work among Jews or Gentiles, and who would dedicate themselves to the work, might hold up their hands. About 300 responded to this appeal.

The correspondent of The Record says:—

On Sunday the engagements were very numerous. There were three Communions at St. John's Church, all of them very largely attended. In the morning Mr. Moule preached a striking sermon on "Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us, therefore let us keep the feast," dwelling on the happiness of the spiritual life which has started from the one atonement. Mr. Meyer and Mr. Gregson were advertised to preach in the Congregationalist and Wesleyan Chapels respectively; but the former had to migrate to the Tent to accommodate the crowds that followed him, and thither also resorted very many who failed to get inside St. John's, although every corner of the church was filled up with rows of forms brought in for the occasion. In the afternoon Mr. Stock addressed children in the church; other speakers held a children's meeting in the Tent; Mr. Meyer spoke to missionary candidates in the Lecture-hall, and Mr. Wilkinson had a large open-air gathering on Friar's Crag. In the evening there were various services and meetings. The preacher at St. John's was Mr. Grubb, whose sermon was a really exquisite little Bible-lesson, almost a Sunday-school lesson (if ever there was a Sunday-school lesson so simple). He put aside all eloquence or art of any kind, and for twenty minutes, without a superfluous word, he just expounded the four "Come ands" of Christ, viz.: "Come and see," "Come and drink," "Come and dine," "Come and rest."

On Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of the present week there were prayer-meetings in the Tent at seven a.m., and what are widely known as the Friar's Crag missionary meetings in the evening. But only one of these was on Friar's Crag. Several hundreds gathered there on Monday, and sat or stood upon the steep slope for an hour and a half; but on Tuesday heavy rain drove them to the Tent, and there they again met on Wednesday. The numbers must have been quite double what they were in previous years. Mr. Stock presided as usual. Many short speeches were made by missionaries and others, and many brief petitions offered in response to special requests. The lady speakers on these occasions are generally the chief attraction. On Monday delightful little addresses were given by Miss Geldard, an elderly lady from the South of France, and Miss Davies, of the I.F.N.S., Bombay; and Miss Goodwin, as an independent witness, gave an account of her visits to the Zenana Missions in North India. On Tuesday, three ladies sailing this autumn (C.M.S. and C.I.M.) spoke a few words each beautifully, but I will not mention their names here.

I will conclude by saying that there is reason to hope that very important steps towards more active work in preaching the Gospel throughout the world may, if God bless the plans privately considered, prove to be one outcome of this year's Keswick Convention.

APPEAL TO THE CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The following letter, drawn up by some leading supporters of the Church Missionary Society, assembled for Conference on the prospects of missions, was read in committee on Tuesday week:—

Keswick, July 25, 1890.

TO THE SECRETARY AND COMMITTEE OF THE C. M. S.

DEAR FRIENDS,—We whose names are appended, and who are attending the Keswick Convention, have been conferring privately on the prospects of missions in view of the needs of the heathen, and of the marvellous openings which God is providing at this time. We feel that a large part of the world has yet to be evangelised. India's needs are pressing; China is asking (through the Missionary Conference lately held at Shanghai) for 1000 missionaries; Africa is rapidly opening, Stanley's travels having brought to light numerous tribes which know absolutely nothing of Christ, while mercantile companies are being formed which will open up and secure new routes. These things constitute a call to the Church Missionary Society to put forth fresh efforts, and, perhaps, to adopt new methods.

The case, when viewed in all lights, is so startling that it justifies an advance on a large scale, under the directing hand of God. We respectfully urge that an appeal should be put forth by the Church Missionary Society for no less than a thousand additional workers, who will be needed to go into the various fields within the next few years, irrespective of what may be done by other societies.

Such an appeal would stir the heart of Christian England and its dependencies, and would call forth much sympathy and definite prayer, whilst the result would undoubtedly be that offers of personal service and of pecuniary support would be correspondingly liberal. God is able to find the right agents, to send them forth, and to supply the needful means; and if (as we believe) his time has come, it is for us to go forward.

Further, we venture to urge: (1) That evangelists should be sent into the mission field in groups, each group being associated under a leader: (2) that the services of lay workers should be used much more than hitherto; (3) that mechanics and working men and women whose hearts God has touched should form parts of these groups; (4) that we should thus have means, and should take steps for providing industrial training, which is now largely recognised as an important factor in educational work, especially in Africa; (5) that special provision be made for the training of the new classes of workers now proposed; (6) that some means be devised whereby contributions might be appropriated to special objects.

Whilst making the suggestions, we are far from desiring that the standard of spiritual life and teaching should be lowered. On the contrary, we urge that no one should be accepted for any department of the work who has not given proof of a desire to seek souls, and of a power to win them to Christ.

We feel that the committee and secretaries are already hard pressed and heavily burdened, and that these proposals might involve the necessity of special committees and of additions to the staff. We are ready to testify our sense of the urgency of the case by attending such conferences and committees as may be found desirable with a view to giving effect to the suggestions now offered.

We are conscious that we are asking great things, but we venture to do so under the conviction that we are only expressing what others feel as well as ourselves God's Holy Spirit is bringing home to many hearts the bitter cry of the heathen world. Prayers are ascending to the Lord of the harvest, and lives are being dedicated to his service. It is our earnest desire that the Society, which God has so signally blessed in the past, should be early in the fields which are opening before us, and if it is God's will that these new ventures of faith should be entered upon, and that these new methods should be adopted, thousands of grateful, longing hearts will support the committee at every step by pleading at the throne of grace, and the Lord Himself will shower down the wisdom and strength which will be needed by secretaries, committee, and workers to accomplish his own design; and so his name shall be known upon earth, and his saving health amongst all nations. Commending the whole matter to your prayerful attention,

We remain your attached friends,

(Signed)

THE COMMITTEE'S RESPONSE.

After prayer and discussion, the following resolution was adopted by the Committee: "Resolved, that this Committeee have read with the deepest interest the letter from friends of the Society assembled at Keswick, and hail its suggestions, some of which they have already confirmed in principle, and are gradually carrying out, as evidence that the Lord is stirring the hearts of his servants at home to a truer realisation of the vast responsibilities which rest upon the Church of Christ, in view of the rapid opening up of the world for evangelistic effort. They desire the secretaries to convey to the signatories the thanks of the Committee for their counsel, and an assurance that their letter shall have full and prayerful consideration. They further instruct that the letter be forthwith printed, and widely circulated amongst the supporters of the Society, with a view to its full consideration after the approaching recess; and they earnestly pray that God the Holy Spirit will guide their deliberations, and enable them to take such steps as shall tend to deepen and quicken the sense of personal responsibility for the evangelisation of the heathen and Mohammedan world."

Sir,—Will you allow me, through your columns, to ask any ministers present at the ministers' communion at St. John's Church on Thursday, July 24, who did not leave their names, either at the time, or at the ministers' meeting afterwards, kindly to send their names to me, as below? There were 174 present, of whom the names of 154 have been received. I have promised the vicar, Rev. J. Hoare, to get as complete a list as possible.

Yours faithfully,
Arthur W. Phelps.

Letters to the Editor.

WHAT CONSTITUTES SUCCESS?

Dear Sir,—Many very important questions have been asked from time to time in your Correspondence Columns, all of which have been read with a considerable amount of interest. Especially has it been so when the question has dealt with the salvation of souls. Of course in a land like China, with over a thousand workers, there must of necessity be varied opinions upon the subject, "What constitutes success in the Lord's vineyard?"

I am free to say there are a large number of missionaries who feel that a small or large church gathered together, either at home or abroad, does not always mean success; neither does the absence of converts necessarily mean failure.

Let it be fully understood, however, that it is the Lord's will most assuredly to use every member of his own body as channels for blessing in some form or another. We (who have been born again) are members of the one body; and some are used as hands, others as feet, and so on, just as the Lord Himself willeth.

Seeing this is so, it becomes extremely difficult to judge another brother's work. Saintly men of the old time, like Brainerd and Carey, were years without seeing any fruit; but they afterward yielded a rich and abundant harvest, which shall never be perfectly estimated this side of the glory. Now, it happens there are not a few who imagine that real success in missionary work and Christian enterprise generally depends largely upon the number of souls converted and gathered into a regular organised church.

A missionary friend of mine a devoted worker in China, said the other day to me, that he thought it must be fault and failing in the worker if no souls were converted.

Now, if this be so, many of our missionary brethren and sisters in the land of Sinim have been wasting much of their Master's time. Whilst toiling and working amongst the millions of China, many devoted children of God have worked for two, three, and even four years without receiving any members into the visible Church.

Day after day, year in and year out, they have fearlessly toiled, preaching the word, selling the Scriptures, distributing tracts, and pleading with men and women to trust only in Jesus. Besides all this, they have borne joyfully the spoiling of their goods, and many times their lives have been in real danger; but for Christ's sake they have gone on working, watching, waiting. And yet, no souls! only, perhaps, a few earnest inquirers after years of devoted service.

Are we to style this failure? Surely not, because we know not what shall prosper, either this or that.

I am convinced we will need to wait until the great "harvest home" by and by, when the mighty roll-call shall be read out, and then, methinks, some startling revelations will be made about what was and what was not success in the lands in which we laboured.

It would be very helpful and exceeding interesting to have the views of your readers upon this subject.

Be it understood I am not an advocate of "careless indifference" touching this all-important question, for I take it our one aim and sole purpose must ever be to win precious souls. Nothing short of this will do. Yet, is it not a fact that the mighty Spirit of God works in various ways, and through various agencies and methods, in order to accomplish his Divine mission? If so, then some shall be sappers and minners in the great battle against sin and error; others shall be scouts and outposts; others, again, shall be in the forward marches, whilst a remnant shall abide by the stuff, &c. But after the battle is over the great Commander-in-Chief (our precious Head) shall gather the army together, at which time the captains, officers, and men of the rank and file shall rejoice together in having by Divine grace been privileged to occupy various departments in one common cause to defeat one great foe, and to exalt one risen Lord.

I shall be very pleased to receive any replies, and will do my best to give any information (in my power) about the work in China to those who may be specially interested.

Let us one and all remember Jer. xxxiii. 3.

Yours heartily, John A. Stooke.

RITUALISM IN BRIGHTON.

Sir,—To the startling proofs given in The Christian for July 25 of the advance of Ritualism in the diocese of Rochester, allow me to add a painful proof of a similar development in the diocese of Chichester. I will on this occasion confine myself to Brighton. Many of your readers will, I hope, feel a sense of tingling shame when I tell them that in several—I shall be correct in saying six or seven—of the churches in that town the flag of Rome is daringly flaunted. When you enter these buildings, you see at once two indubitable marks of Rome—the high altar, with its accompanying side altars, or altar, and that series of pictures used for devotion called the "Stations of the Cross." In two of these churches I saw crucifixes, and in all of them I have good reason to believe habitual sacramental confession to a priest takes place. In two of them the sacristan informed me that confessions were made, these confessions being received in one of the two churches in the vestry, in the other in a dark side chapel, where a wooden partition, with grating, is erected to separate the Father Confessor from the kneeling penitent.

One of the Brighton Ritualistic incumbents, Rev. Hardy Little, has lately given the greatest offence to the Protestant inhabitants by defending confession from the pulpit, boasting of his membership with the Society of the Holy Cross, and publicly commending, though in somewhat qualified terms, that very shameful book which was exposed in Parliament in 1877, the "Priest in Absolution."

The Brighton Protestants have condemned the confessional, and the rules for conducting it, contained in the volume referred to, in two great meetings held in the Dome at the Pavilion, in both of which gatherings admirable addresses were delivered by Mr. Walter Walsh. I regret to say only three of the evangelical incumbents of Brighton, Messrs. Gregory, McCormick, and Hewitt, supported the meetings.

Resolutions and memorials have gone up to the Bishop on the subject; but, I regret to say, no public censure, such as is loudly called for, has gone forth from the Palace at Chichester.

My object in sending this is to awaken many slumbering Protestants to a sense of the danger that threatens Gospel truth from the progress of an insidious enemy which is nestled in the very bosom of Protestantism itself, and to evoke the earnest prayers of your readers for a blessing on the efforts of our Brighton and other friends throughout the country in resisting a terrible evil, which our bishops will not rebuke or extirpate, and which beyond doubt some of them encourage and support.

THE PASSION PLAY.

Dear Sir,—As one is constantly hearing arguments in favour of the Passion Play from those who either have gone, or are going to witness it, at Ober-Ammergau, a few thoughts on the subject may be helpful, especially to young believers. We hear that the Roman Catholic peasants who act the sacred scenes are simple and ignorant people; that they are actuated by earnest religious feelings; that their object is to make people admire the love of Christ in having borne the cross for us; that the lives of the actors are pure and that they try in some measure to live up to the holy characters they impersonate.

These and many similar arguments are very delusive, because of the religious halo which admirers of the play cast over it; but they most surely fade away before the light of Divine truth. If the religion of these actors is an ignorant one, Christians have no excuse for encouraging it by their presence and approval; the sin of ignorance as well as all other sins was dealt with by God, and could only be forgiven by the shedding of blood (Num. xv. 25—30); and in Acts iii. 15—18 we find Peter, after declaring to the Jews that they had "killed the Prince of Life," adding, "I wot that through ignorance ye did it;" what then must be the ignorance of those who imitate the God-man in his most awful hours of agony on the accursed tree?

If God in his mercy still "overlooks" the times of this ignorance, surely the Christian's duty is twofold; first to follow our Lord's example and pray, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do"; secondly, as did Paul to the mistaken Athenians, "declare to them Him whom they ignorantly worship." We are told that Peter desired to be crucified head downwards, rather than share the honour of the same death as his master. If there were more of this spirit of humility in the present day, it would be difficult to find anyone willing to play the part undertaken by Josef Mayer.

Should it be granted that the first object of the actors is so to display our Lord's sufferings that the audience may be convinced of his dying love they can know but little of the look of faith in which alone is salvation. The "lifting up" of which our Lord speaks in John xii. 32, was the one great and final redemptive work at Calvary, and through faith in that alone are men still drawn to Him; faith, which is the essence of the Gospel, is the direct opposite of sight (2 Cor. v. 7, Heb. xi. 1).

The ardour and the morality of the lives of the actors are but slender arguments in favour of any religious spectacle and remind one of many scenes prompted by zeal in a false religion. One would be sorry, for instance, to see the massacre of St. Bartholomew and the horrors of the Inquisition enacted as a play; how much more should we shun to gaze with curious eyes at the representation of our blessed Lord's sufferings and death on the cross.

Well might the sun in darkness hide,
And shut his glories in,
When Christ, th' Incarnate Maker died
For man, his creature's sin.

While the Lord is "adding to the Church daily such as should be saved" through the preaching of the cross, let us beware of being carried away by false emotions and vain doctrines, and seek more earnestly for the teaching of the Holy Spirit, who shall "guide us into all truth."

—Yours truly, R. E. K.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.—Rev. W. J. Mayers has recently held meetings on behalf of these Homes at Keswick, Workington, Whitehaven, and Windermere. The addresses were listened to by large and sympathetic audiences, who not only seemed specially interested in the series of large pictures of the Homes and rescued children, which Mr. Mayers exhibited, but showed their interest by practically aiding the funds of the Homes. Applications for lectures and addresses by Mr. Mayers may be made to him at 18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

DEAN LEFROY ON SECTARIANISM.—The Dean of Norwich, in the course of a forcible sermon in Norwich Cathedral, dealt severely with sectarian narrow-mindedness. Some men, he said, imagined that because they were Churchmen they would be saved, and that all who were not Churchmen would be lost; while other men imagined that because they were Nonconformists they would be saved, and that all who were not Nonconformists would be lost. "Away," cried the Dean, "with all your narrowness! Away with all your folly! God is wider than any of your systems; the love of Christ is grander than all; and, while we have grand privileges, let no man suppose that because he belongs to this Church or to that he will be saved. The Church of Rome proclaimed, in the Creed of Pope Pius IV., that no man could be saved who was outside her pale. Away with such monstrosities!" If ever there was a system which waylays and beguiles, it was Romanism. It was Romanism that asked men to put their trust in priests and in Popes, in saints and in angels, in Masses for the living and in Masses for the dead. But these could not save; nothing but Christ could do that.

Obituary.

REV. J. C. THURSTON.

THIS faithful servant of the Lord passed away at Croydon, on Wednesday, July 30, in his 79th year. He was first called as pastor to the Baptist Church at Harwich, afterwards at Halstead, and lastly at Croydon, where he faithfully preached the Gospel for thirty-one years. During the past six months he has been in failing health. About three weeks before he passed away, he was seized with paralysis of the tongue, and he longed to be with his Saviour.

REV. JOHN KELLY.

We regret to announce the death of Rev. John Kelly, who for nearly ten years was editor-in-chief of tracts to the Religious Tract Society. Born in the neighbourhood of Newcastle in 1834, he was educated at Glasgow and Bonn Universities, receiving theological training at the Free Church College, Edinburgh. His ministerial work was done in connection with the Presbyterian Church of England, at Tiverton, in the Channel Islands, at Hebburn, and at Streatham. In his work for the Religious Tract Society, he exercised a great and good influence, initiating and conducting with conspicuous success the "Present Day Tracts," the "New Biographical Tracts," and the "Seek Me Early" series. The "Present Day Tracts" have had a very wide circulation among thoughtful readers, and are recognised as a great power for good in the defence and the spread of Christian truth at home and abroad. Mr. Kelly was a specialist in the field of German hymnology, and published two volumes of German hymn translations, both containing many gems for the worship of the Church. His other books sprang out of these studies. In "Louisa of Prussia and other Sketches" he has given some most fascinating sketches of noble womanhood, and his last considerable work was the "Life and Work of Bogatsky," the author of the great classic, the "Golden Treasury." Mr. Kelly died at Braemar, whither he had gone to recruit his health.

MR. RICHARD HEDGES.

At the age of 58, after many years of patient suffering, this humble Christian brother passed away on Wednesday, July 23, at Wood Green, where he had resided for over thirty years.

Like Mephibosheth, he was lame on both his feet, but truly also he "dwelt in Jerusalem, and did eat continually at the King's table." Although unable to leave his room, he would invite others to visit him, and in this way he was a great power for good. When a beggar called at his house he would see and relieve him, and seldom let him depart without talking of the love of Jesus. In this way he was the means of an old man's conversion not long ago.

Little children loved him, and delighted to be with him, and his room was for many years the haven of tempest-tossed, wavering, and timid souls; weary ones through him received comfort in affliction, and were led to stronger faith and trust in God. His influence thus was most blessed and far-reaching.

For many years he had a large card in his window, bearing the texts—"All have sinned." "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." "Am I saved?"

His natural politeness was very marked. A lady remarked at the grave that he was a member of a true "county" family, and belonged to the real aristocracy—that of heaven. Though so great a sufferer, he spoke of life as a great privilege. Heaven to him would not date from the moment he first entered the gates of the City; for he always seemed as though he were already living the resurrection life, and would unconsciously lead his visitor to the same heavenly heights, away from self to the Lord Jesus. The believer's standing in Him was his constant theme, and he would enlarge on "all things working together for good to them that love God." I had known and loved him for thirty years. M.

ANOTHER YOUNG MISSIONARY of the Church Missionary Society in East Africa has been called home. A telegram received from Zanzibar announces that Rev. Joseph W. H. Hill, B.A., died on Sunday, July 20, from fever. No details have come to hand. Mr. Hill was one of the last party of missionaries who went out with Bishop Tucker, in May.

THE JEW-HUNT IN RUSSIA.

THE Hebrew people in the land of the Czar are threatened with renewed persecution. It is a painful fact that Russia stands before the world to-day in a most unpleasant light. In Siberia she sanctions atrocities such as have seldom been surpassed in barbarity; in the Baltic Provinces she afflicts adherents of the Protestant faith, and expels foreign evangelical missionaries from the Empire; she has long oppressed the millions of Jews scattered throughout her dominions, and now she is deliberately tightening the screw.

The new repressive edicts are savage in the extreme. After they have been proclaimed, no Jew will be allowed to live in country places, even if his health requires him to leave crowded streets. He will not be permitted to hire land from a Christian, or to keep an inn. All Jews who have settled in villages since 1882 must leave them and take up their abode in towns, where, it seems to be assumed, they will be under stricter supervision. The law of 1865, passed in happier times, authorised the settlement of Jewish artisans in the interior of Russia. This law is to be repealed, and two hundred thousand innocent persons are to be driven from their homes into the overcrowded Ghettos of the Russian cities. But it is not in every Russian city even that Jews have the right to live, and half a million are sojourning without formal permission. They will be expelled, as also will half a millon more who settled in the rural districts before 1882. No Jew is to live within seventy miles of the frontier, and even the Jews in Poland will be brought for the first time under the operation of the May Laws. Jews are to be excluded from the High Schools and Universities. They are not to become lawyers, or engineers, nor to be employed in any department of the Government. From the Post Offices, the Telegraph Offices, and the Railways they have been already dismissed.

The Times truthfully describes the new policy of oppression as "another chapter, and one of the darkest, in the never-ending story of wrongful violence to the Jewish people, surpassing in cruelty all that has been done by Russia to her unhappy subjects of that race." Inquiring for what purpose, and under the cloak of what excuse these cruelties are to be practised, the same paper says:—

"No solid reason can be given. There is scarcely an attempt to disguise the fact that the repressive edicts are sops to popular prejudice and ignorance, to the permanent antagonism of the lazy, the thriftless, the intemperate, against the sober, intelligent, and industrious. A Russian statesman would find it difficult to deny that these measures, ruinous to so many meritorious or inoffensive citizens, must be disastrous to the Empire also. Remembering the little effects of the protests made in 1882 against the license then granted to repine and riot, we cannot be hopeful that the indignation of Western Europe against these latter barbarous anachronisms will mitigate the present policy. But of this we are sure—that protest will be made and repeated in a hundred languages; and wherever Russian influence penetrates, it will be preceded by the story of cruelties penetrated, to all appearances, in cold blood, deliberately and senselessly. To every land—to ours in particular—will flee the victims of this tyranny, and each of them will be a missionary of discontent and disaffection against an Empire the rulers of which often marvel that discontent and disaffection should exist."

MR. WILLIAM FORBES has been giving addresses at Margate, Birchington, Westgate, Stedham, and Reigate, in chapels, halls, and open air.

Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Panes desire us to state that they have severed their connection with the Bethel Santhal Mission. Their future address will be care of Miss Hollyer, Mission Bungalow, Mihijam, E.J.R., India.

The Book World.

Light in the Dark Continent.

Daybreak in North Africa: an account of work for Christ begun in Morocco, Algeria, Tunis, and Tripoli. By Mrs. F. T. Haig. 1s. Partridge. Friends of the North Africa Mission will read with growing interest this lucid statement of evangelistic progress. To those unacquainted with the operations of the Mission, the book will unfold a story full of true missionary life, and commend to Christian sympathy a cause deserving of generous support. The author—the wife of General Haig—has thrown heart and soul into this worthy ministry, and we trust much blessing will result from her earnest endeavour to send forward the Mission whose work she describes. The history of mission work in North Africa is briefly stated, and intimations are given of the sad spiritual need of the various races scattered throughout the countries. Extracts from the diaries of the missionaries, ladies as well as gentlemen, and a number of illustrations, add animation to the already intensely real statement of earnest yearning and devoted endeavour on behalf of the long neglected people of North Africa.

The "Evangelical" Prophet.

Biblical Commentary on the Prophecies of Isaiah. By Franz Delitzsch, D.D. Translated from the fourth German edition. Vol. I. 10s. 6d. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark. This is an important addition to the eminently useful "Foreign Theological Library." It is not a mere revision of former editions of the learned author's commentary on the Evangelical Prophet. In large measure it is a fresh treatment of the subject, and in some respects its changes are what many will regard as doubtful improvements. Professor S. R. Driver supplies an introduction, sketching the deeply interesting life and work of Delitzsch. He would obviously have been more gratified if his Leipzig friend had made further concessions to modern criticism; but time may yet discredit criticism, as it has already shown it wanting in the assured stability claimed for it by some of its devotees. Finding little pleasure in maintaining negative positions, Delitzsch only held with hesitancy the critical views of which in some quarters he has so readily been described as an active advocate. The value of his commentary does not lie in occasional speculative passages, but in its thoroughness alike in pointing out verbal niceties and in opening up the prophecies as a whole. The book is for students, and such of them as would carefully examine the text and teaching of Isaiah will do well to secure it, for it is at once learned in substance and spiritual in tone.

The Expositor's Bible.

The Gospel according to St. Luke. By Rev. Henry Burton, M.A. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. The valuable series known as "The Expositor's Bible," is greatly enriched by the addition of this, its latest volume. It is one of the choicest comments on the Gospel of St. Luke we have seen. Full of thought, original and devout, it is suggestive and instructive in the highest degree, while the soundness of its teaching on the vital questions involved in Gospel truth is unmistakable. It is refreshing in these days of negation and hypothesis to find an author writing in terms at once definite and clear, on fundamental themes such as the Divine Sonship of Christ, the character of his atonement, and the High Priestly power of his risen life. On the subject of human destiny in the world to come, the author is no less pronounced, as, for instance, when he says "the larger hope as they are pleased to call it, as far as this Gospel is concerned, is a beautiful, but illusive dream;" and again, "Our Gospel teaches that death does not alter character, that character makes destiny, and that destiny once determined is unalterable and eternal." In dealing with the parables he has succeeded in imparting much freshness of thought to the exposition of some of those most often commented on. The suggestion that the parable we call the parable of the Prodigal Son "might with equal propriety be called the parable of the bereaved Father, (that name being repeated in one form or another no less than twelve times) illustrates the spirit in which these precious portions of Holy Writ are treated. One could wish that in treating specially of the "Kingdom of God," the expositor had seen his way to unfolding its glories as connected with the coming of the King rather than simply speaking of its spiritual power as a work of grace in the heart, and dismissing its temporal aspects as the "Dream of Prophecy." Having regard, however, to what the book contains rather than to points it omits to deal with, we can but heartily commend it to our readers, and assure them of a real feast in its perusal.

The Structure of the Psalms.

A Key to the Psalms: being a Tabular Arrangement by which the Psalms are exhibited to the eye according to a general Rule of Composition prevailing in the Holy Scriptures. By the late Rev. Thomas Boys, M.A. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and an Appendix on the Structure of the Psalms as a whole, by Rev. E. W. Bullinger, D.D. 5s. Published by the Editor, 7, St. St. Paul's Churchyard, E.C. The peculiar construction of some of the Psalms in the details of words and lines has engaged the careful attention of scholars at various times; less success has, however, attended endeavours to group the lines into paragraphs or stanzas. Mr. Boys has made it clear beyond question that the Psalms were composed on a method lacking nothing of perfection. There is great variety in style, but everywhere such form and arrangement as proclaim the Divine Inspirer. With wonderful exactness Mr. Boys has indicated correspondences and resemblances appearing in varied order throughout the Psalms; and, as these have to do with the subject matter, and not the manner merely, the outstanding characteristics can be discerned in translations as well as in the original. This "key" is based on the Authorised Version, and we are sure no one will give it attentive study without being much profited thereby. With this book at hand, devotional reading of the Psalms will be attended with new light and joy. Dr. Bullinger has clearly bestowed much care upon the editing, and has enriched the work in various ways. Rev. Sydney Thelwell, B.A., contributes an interesting memoir of the author.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Health at Home Tracts. By Alfred Schofield, M.D. 1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. Twelve useful tracts bound in a volume, the whole forming a goodly body of information on very important subjects. "Clothes," "Cooking," and "Babies" are three tracts containing counsels which many households would be the happier for heeding. The book deserves a wide circulation.

The Missionary Controversy: Discussion, Evidence, and Report, 1890. 2s. Wesleyan Methodist Book Room. This volume has been published by order of the General Committee of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society, that its supporters and the public generally may be able to judge for themselves both what were the charges laid against the Indian missionaries, and the result of the inquiry. We trust good may come out of the discussion, and that the work of God may be promoted as a result of the inquiry.

Eternal Life: Notes of Expository Sermons on the Epistles of St. John. By Rev. J. M. Gibbon. 4s. 6d. R. D. Dickinson. Originally preached in Stamford-hill Congregational Church, these discourses, over twenty in number, abound with counsels and appeals which deserve widespread attention. Mr. Gibbon is alternately incisive and pathetic; and, though we are not always at one with him in matters of interpretation, we acknowledge the remarkable force of his teaching and the freshness of his style.

A History of Presbyterianism in Dublin and the South and West of Ireland. By Clarke H. Irwin, M.A., Minister at Bray. 6s. Hodder & Stoughton. This work puts in a permanent form many interesting facts regarding Presbyterianism outside Ulster. It has involved much independent research, and will serve a useful purpose as a contribution to the ecclesiastical history of Ireland. The treatment shows great regard for detail, the names of ministers and prominent church officers being given throughout.

The Religious Tract Society has added to its shilling large type illustrated books for adults A Battle with the Waves: or the Herring Boat, a capital story by Miss C. J. Hamilton; and Help From the Hills: Thoughts on the Mountains of the Bible, a series of stimulating expository chapters. The monthly volumes for the Young (1s.) are very attractive. Recent issues include: Heedless Hetty, the story of a thoughtless maid, by Annette Lyster; and Sandy Jim, or the Message of a Rose, by Henrietta S. Streatfeild. The latter is not only a good story, but a forcible statement of the simple Gospel.

In our notice last week of Mr. Robert Brown's "Outlines of Prophetic Truth" (second series), the publisher's name was omitted. The book is published by Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co., London, price 12s.

The Choice, and other Poems. By M. L. Parker. J. Taylor, Kingsbridge. In these verses there is much of earnestness, piety, and some imaginativeness, but nothing of special power or originality. God can indeed benefit souls by very unlikely means, but it is well for Christians before rushing into print to ask with what instrument they can do most for Him. David's pebbles were not only picked with much care, but aimed with singular dexterity.

Public Libraries. By T. Greenwood, F.R.G.S. Third Edition. 2s. 6d. Simpkin, Marshall & Co. A most useful, complete, and interesting book. To hear that we have in England 208 public libraries is a dry fact, but Mr. Greenwood embellishes this central fact with a vast amount of interesting matter, valuable statistics, and copious illustrations. In four years no less than seventy-five public libraries have been opened. Those desiring to know how such institutions can best be started and carried on, cannot have a more competent guide than the author of this book.

In a Country Manse; Reminiscences of Life and Work. By Rev. J. W. Taylor, D.D., Flisk. Nelson & Sons. Dwellers in cities are apt to think of country spheres and scenes as more poetic than practical, more suggestive of ease and ignorance than of busy toil and cultured thought. This volume will serve to dispel the illusion, showing as it does that great lights are by no means confined to great cities, and that amid the comparative obscurity of rural life some of the truest and most devoted servants of Christ may be sought and found. Dr. Taylor's reminiscences are of value and interest as illustrations of important passages in the history of the Church of Scotland, as well as from their more personal character, while the accompanying essays on various subjects rank high for their spiritual teaching and practical bearing on questions of widespread concern. Pre-eminently Scotch in its proclivities and ideas, the book will delight English readers by its naïveté and genuineness of belief.

Through the Isle of Wight is an interesting sketch of "The Garden of England," written by Rev. Charles Bullock, B.D., in the hope of assisting some holiday folk to answer the question "Where shall we go this year?" The pages are eminently readable and admirably illustrated. (3d. "Home Words" Office.)

Storing for God. By John Moir, M.D. Nelson. Two papers, reprinted from The Free Church Monthly, setting forth the Bible plan for Christian giving. The author maintains that the Mosaic injunction of one tenth of the income being given unto the Lord has never yet been repealed. He argues strongly for system in church finance.

PERTH CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE. — The twenty-eighth annual meeting will be held in the City Hall, September 9 to 11. The subject chosen is:—"The Grace of God the Father, as seen in the Gift of his Son, and in his Delight in and Union with the Son in all the parts of his Redemptive Work; also, the Grace of the Father in its present operation in the world, and in its future triumphs on earth and in heaven." At the open conferences in the afternoons, the subjects will be "Work among young men and lads," "Our fellow countrymen in India and the Colonies." Evangelistic addresses will be delivered every evening. Several meetings for ladies have been arranged. Information regarding lodgings (and programmes) may be had from Mr. John Christie, 32, St. John-street, Perth.

GREENWICH.—There is, I am sure, a good opening for evangelistic effort in this neighbourhood. I have for some years looked at Greenwich Theatre as a first-rate spot where the Banner of the Cross could be unfurled with profit. I am not financially in a position to undertake it; but if some of the Lord's stewards would take it for the coming winter work, I should be pleased to assist, and could enlist the help of several spiritually-minded young men as stewards, &c. The cost, I suppose, inclusive of gas, &c., would be about 50s. per Sunday; part of this would, no doubt, be met by those who would attend. Many out of the thousands that are attracted by the band into the park (which we are trying to stop), would, during the winter, be attracted to the Theatre. I should be pleased to correspond with anyone upon the subject. W. K. Pinnock.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 10.—Psalm XCIII.

IT is thought that this Psalm dates from the Assyrian invasion, and that it is the might of these terrible foes which is here compared to the breakers of the sea. But it well befits all times of anxiety and opposition, and it is interesting to remember that this, with the six following Psalms, has always been applied by the Jews to the days of the Messiah. Surely then we may apply them to the Lord Jesus.

1. "The Lord reigneth" was the form of official proclamation of a new reign (2 Sam. xv. 10; 1 Kings i. 11, 13). This is also the war-cry of the Church in answer to the defiance of her foes. Calvin says: "All acknowledge with the mouth what the prophet here teaches, but how few place this shield in front of the might of the world, so that they fear nothing, be it ever so terrible." Thus might we oppose all attacks of our spiritual foes, and find ourselves ever victorious. What a magnificent apparel—majesty and strength!

3. The sea is the usual symbol of the tumultuous masses of the nations. In this splendid reiteration, we can almost hear the successive dash of the breakers with foam and fury around the throne of God, which stands out in permanent establishment and eternity (2). We are irresistibly reminded of Canute's throne, which had to be drawn back and back from before the incoming tide.

4. "As thunder is louder than the loudest noise of the sea, so is Jehovah infinitely more mighty and glorious than the sea, and the world-power which it symbolises." The miracle of Jesus in quieting the storm has symbolic and far-reaching meaning. What! do you fear one man, when this God is yours? (Isa li. 12).

5. God's testimonies (Ps. xix. 7; xxv. 10). Their sureness is emphasised here, because the Psalmist would remind us that among their other contents is the sure promise that our foes shall not prevail.

"Holiness" is here used in the sense of separation from every impious hand, a condition which God's honour requires Him to maintain. And is there not a pledge here that He will maintain intact the separateness of the temple of the heart? (1 Cor. vi. 19).

MONDAY, AUGUST 11.—Psalm XCIV.

This Psalm belongs to the same era as the foregoing one. The mention made of the throne of iniquity (20) seems to indicate that the Chaldean empire had already arisen, and taken up a threatening attitude against the people of God. Still there is no mention made as yet of the destruction of the temple, and the leading into captivity, and therefore, perhaps, the land had not been overrun by the invader.

Luther says: "This Psalm is a prayer of all the pious children of God, and of spiritual people, against their persecutors, so that it may be used by all such from the beginning to the end of the world."

1. God's vengeance includes the vindication of the eternal law of righteousness, and also of his down-trodden people. We seem to hear already the cry of the martyred saints, "How long, O Lord, holy and true!" (Rev. vi. 10). This confident anticipation of God's ultimate decision on the behalf of his down-trodden people is very characteristic of these Psalms.

5. We are God's heritage, as He is ours. Alas! that after so much culture we return such a poor revenue (Deut. xxxii. 9).

7. Wicked men are ostrich-like (Ps. x. 11, lix. 7).

12. What a schooling is this, and what a teacher! The discipline is rather severe, but the pupils turn out well, and derive lasting blessedness and rest. Better chastisement than adversity (13).

14. God cannot be surprised by anything He discovers in us. He knew all when He began to love us. The tenacity of his love to his chosen people is a strong encouragement to all the seed (Mal. ii. 16; John x. 28).

16. This verse is answered by the next two.

19. My thoughts—thy comforts. Turn from anxious care to the bosom of thy God, till thy soul begins to sing with holy delight.

23. We may very well possess our souls in patience, not disturbed by the plottings of our foes; their time is short, their end sure. But oh the pity that they should incur such a fate at the hands of the God of love!

TUESDAY, AUGUST 12.—Psalm XCV.

Few of the Psalms have entered so deeply into the worship of the Church as this. It abounds in bold metaphors and comparisons, calculated to awaken praise as well as heart-searching. The two halves of the Psalm, consisting of five verses each, are united by a middle verse (6), which summons to worship.

1. God is a Rock by virtue of his steadfastness and unchangeableness.

2. His presence never casts a shadow, but prompts to joy. Live in the perpetual recollection of it, if you would have perennial gladness (Ps. xvi. 11).

4, 5. Depths and heights; sea and land are full of God. However high we climb or low we descend, in whatever conditions we find ourselves, there is always certain evidence of God and a theme for praise.

6. When the heart is full it brims over in some outward act of devotion.

7. His pasture, i.e., which He has prepared; his hand, i.e., with which He counts, and guides, and defends. Ah! remember how the Shepherd's hand was pierced, and still bears a scar.

8. Quoted, Heb. iii. 7. For the day of Meribah and Massah we must turn to Exod. xvii. 7.

11. "My rest" is surely that into which God entered at creation. It has been the chosen object of search for all mankind. But it certainly was not exhausted or fulfilled in the rest of Canaan; for here, though the people had been settled in the land for centuries, God speaks of their missing his rest. Obviously, then, they had not yet entered it; and it remains for all who believe in the true Joshua, Jesus our Lord (Heb. iv. 9, 10).

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 13.—Psalm XCVI.

This Psalm and the preceding one form a pair. It is to be also found in 1 Chron. xvi. It was probably re-edited at the time when the former Psalm was composed. Note the thrice-repeated command, "Sing, sing, sing" (1, 2), which corresponds to the thrice-repeated, "Give, give, give" (7, 8); and with the triple call for joy from heaven, sea, and field (11, 12).

1. We should always praise God with fresh emotions, if not with different words. The new song is ever in front of us (Rev. v. 9, 10).

2. "Shew forth," not only with our lips, but with our lives.

5. "Idols," i.e., "things of nought" (R.V. marg.). See 1 Cor. viii. 4-6.

The heavens are constantly quoted as a challenge to our poor conceptions of God (Job xxvi.; Isa. xl.).

6. Honour and majesty are his inseparable attendants, and wherever He is (for here is his sanctuary) there are strength and beauty. These may also be ours as his gift (9), and to give them back to Him (7).

7, 8. Compare Ps. xxix. 1, 2. What better offering is there than thyself? (Rom. xii. 1).

10. The reign of the Lord in heart or universe must ever be a theme for song. His righteous equity shall yet roll back the curse, and hush the groans of a travailing universe (Rom. viii. 14-22). "Tell it out."

THURSDAY, AUGUST 14.—Psalm XCVII.

The reign of Christ affects all material things. Alas! that men are so slow to acknowledge it (1-6); the votaries of false gods are bewildered (7); but the people of God are glad, and are encouraged to endure, steadfast to the end (8-12).

1. How different is the Psalmist's exultation at God's reign to the fear which many have when asked to yield Him the supreme empire of their hearts. And yet the strain of Hallelujah is only upraised, when it can be said in heart and universe, "The Lord God Omnipotent reigneth" (Rev. xix. 6).

2. Clouds and darkness are often around God still (Deut. iv. 11); but we can trust Him, because we know that all He does is based on righteousness and truth.

4, 5. Compare Hab. iii. 6.

7. This is quoted in the Epistle to the Hebrews, as an address to Angels (Heb. i. 6), a circumstance which is doubtless owing to the quotation being made from the Septuagint. And the fact of this Psalm being there applied to our Lord is a striking evidence of his equality and oneness with Jehovah; and warrants us in inserting his name in all these Psalms. "The Lord Jesus reigneth."

8-12. The kingdom of Jesus, like the pillar of fire, has the dark side for Egyptians, and a bright one toward the Israel of God.

10. The character, safety, and deliverance of the child of God. Herein the great Apostle rejoiced (2 Tim. iv. 18).

11. Coal is sown light in the natural world; and so tears, griefs, trials are the seeds from which the saints shall reap crops of future blessedness. But the harvest day is not yet (Heb. xii. 11; Jas. v. 7).

12. The holiness of God, which was once against us, is now on our side, and is the theme of our praise (1 John i. 9).

FRIDAY, AUGUST 15.—Psalm XCVIII.

The reign of Jehovah-Jesus is again the chosen theme. First, the glory of the King (1-3); and then the gladness of his subjects (4-9).

1-3. Here are themes that should evoke praise from stones. The salvation wrought by his holy arm—the arm which yielded itself to the cross (Isa. lxiii. 5). The revelation which He has made of that salvation. The righteousness with which He vindicates the cause of the oppressed. The faithfulness which cannot forget or run back from his covenant (Luke i. 72).

4. Earth, which has shared the Fall of man, shall share his restoration (Isa. xxxii. 15). There may be here some reference to the new heavens and earth which we are told to expect (2 Pet iii. 13).

8. Isa. lv. 12.

9. When our Lord rode into Jerusalem, it was amid the exultation of his followers (Luke xix. 37). Let us open our hearts to admit Him as He rides into them in triumph, and all our being shall thrill with joy and praise.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 16.—Psalm XCIX.

This is the last of these precious Psalms which dwell so rapturously on the reign of Jesus. It falls into three strophes, each of which ends with an ejaculation of the holiness of God (3, 5, 9).

1-3. The majesty of God. But great and awful though He be, we fear Him not; for "He sitteth on the cherubim," a phrase which always recalls the blood-besprinkled mercy-seat, God in Christ reconciling the world. Though the reign of Christ is closely associated with the temporal restoration of Israel, yet in the meanwhile it is set up in the hearts of believers (Luke xvii. 21; 2 Cor. x. 5).

4, 5. A demand for homage. The more we abase ourselves before God, the more we exalt Him, and we have good reason to do so, whether we consider the attributes of his character, or the distance between his holiness and our sin.

6-9. An enforcement from the examples of the past. There never were three such men, and each was a marvellous illustration of the power of prayer and praise. Let us follow in their footsteps, cultivating the meekness of Moses, the holy nearness of the Aaronic priesthood, and the prayers which were so great a characteristic of Samuel (1 Sam. vii. 13; viii. 6, 10, 21).

8. Let us beware of sin; it may be forgiven, yet we may have to reap its bitter results. Moses was forgiven, but he did not enter the Promised Land; so was David, but the sword never left his house.

9. Oh the holiness of God! Let us not rest until it has been brought into our hearts by the Holy Ghost, so that we may be holy in quality, if not in degree, as God is holy (1 Pet. i. 16).

SOUL-WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—Text for August 10 (1 John v. 14, 15):—"And this is the confidence that we have in Him, that, if we ask anything according to his will, He heareth us: And if we know that He hear us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of Him."

BRUSSELS.—A correspondent, who recently visited Brussels, writes to suggest the advisability of Christian meetings in Continental towns being advertised at the hotels, particularly the English hotels. He adds: "In my belief there is a grand open door at Brussels for earnest aggressive Christian effort, and a crying need for it. The people who stand in hundreds to listen to the music of a band would stand to listen to the singing of a well-trained Christian choir, and an opportunity would thereby be given for the distribution of Gospel leaflets and invitations to evangelistic meetings. There may be restrictions of which I am ignorant respecting street singing and speaking; there was no restriction, however, of the numerous little processions which perambulated the streets last Sunday with music, and dancing, and rowdyism."

Sunday Afternoon, August 17.

THE TEN LEPERS.—LUKE xvii. 11-19.

GOLDEN TEXT: Verse 17.

EXPLANATORY.—"To Jerusalem" (11). The journey was commenced ix. 51. "Through the midst of Samaria and Galilee" does not mean through the two countries, but along the confines of both. The Saviour journeyed from west to east toward Perea, where some of the incidents afterwards recorded took place. Compare xviii. 15 with Matt. xix. 1, 13. "Lepers" (12).—Leprosy is a frightful disease, very common in Palestine. For the leprosy and its cleansing see Lev. xiii. "The Mosaic law took special notice of leprosy....The object in view was to protect the healthy portion of the community, to pronounce on the harmless character of any eruption which resembled leprosy, and to readmit into the community those who had been cured. No remedy was known for the disease itself; the leper was declared unclean, and excluded from intercourse with all other persons. He had to wear the prescribed mourning garment (Lev. xiii. 45), but was permitted to associate with other lepers."—Lange. "Ten Lepers."—Their common need united them (2 Kings vii. 3). "Afar off." See Lev. xiii. 46; Num. v. 2. "Samaritan" (16).—The Jews called them strangers (18). See John iv. 9. His national barrier did not prevent his uniting with Jews who suffered from the same disease. "Whole" (19).—Probably not only confirming the cure, but adding to it the salvation of the soul.

EXPOSITION.

I. The miracle (11-14).—It is not only a literal miracle, but a picture of a greater miracle, Jesus is able still to perform. Note (1) the disease.—Leprosy is often connected with sin—Miriam (Num. xii. 1-10) and Gehazi (2 Kings v. 24-27). It was a most striking type of sin—hence the priest (Lev. xiii., xiv.) rather than the physician had to do with it. Like leprosy, sin is loathsome. Do not judge its character by its appearance. It conceals its true character as a whited sepulchre conceals the corruption that lies beneath. In God's view sin is as loathsome as leprosy is to us. Incurable.—No remedy was known for this disease, and none is known for sin (Jer. xiii. 23). Ignores all distinctions.—Samaritans and Jews are on the same level, if thus diseased. All human distinctions are worthless in the sight of God (Rom. iii. 19, 22). Separates from God's people.—The banishment of the leper (Lev. xiii. 46) was but a picture of that which is described in Matt. xxv. 32 and Rev. xxi. 27. It attacked men in various degrees and forms; but the man with the single leprous spot was as surely a leper as the man who had become loathsome to look upon. Where there is no vice, nor crime, nor gross outward sin, there are disobedience, evil temper, pride, deceit. The leprous spot is on every scholar.

(2) The cry (13).—It was a cry of need.—Be like these lepers in recognising your deeper need. Sin in the soul is worse than leprosy in the body. How sad to have such a disease and not desire to be healed! It was a cry of faith.—They could not have known much of Jesus, but they were ready to trust Him up to the measure of their knowledge. They could only cry "Unclean" when they came near to others (Lev. xiii. 45); but they could cry for mercy from Jesus. You know more; learn to make similar use of your knowledge. To know that Jesus can save only condemns you, if your knowledge does not lead you to faith in Him. It was urgent.—They felt this to be their opportunity, and were not likely to have another. Were they not wise to use it so urgently? Imitate them in this. "To-day" is your opportunity.

(3) The cure (14).—Jesus "saw" and felt compassion for them. No person diseased in body or in soul ever appealed to Him in vain. The method of cure was peculiar, and was calculated to display his power. He did not touch them (v. 13), nor even call them nearer to Him. Learn his power still to heal the leprosy of sin. He thus tested their faith. It needed strengthening, and to test it was the only way to strengthen it. They were leprous when He issued his command. Unbelief would have looked first to see whether there was any reason to go to the priest. Faith obeys, and finds healing. Just in the same way Jesus saves. We accept his word, and yield ourselves to it. All who respond to his call come forth from death to life (John v. 25). Note, also, how Jesus honoured the Divine ordinance. He fearlessly exposed and denounced the sins of the priests, but while that covenant stood He would honour their office. Learn to pay most reverent heed to all God's appointments.

II. The grateful Samaritan (15-19).—Learn (1) Jesus saves me for the glory of God (15, 18).—For this He healed the lepers, and the Samaritan gladly recognised it. We are not saved merely for our own sakes, but that we may fulfil the true end of our being. "Man's chief end is to glorify God." See how this was before the Saviour in all that He did (John xiv. 13; xvii. 4; Eph. i, 6, 12, 14). Rejoice that his glory and our highest welfare are so intimately connected. (2) The contrast, his healed ones often present.—One returned, and he the most unlikely of all, while nine went to their homes selfishly to enjoy their restoration. Is that the proportion still? If every scholar professedly saved in our Sunday-schools were to imitate this Samaritan, our churches would be filled with earnest consecrated workers. (3) How Jesus marks this contrast.—His question (17) is a sad one, and shows how He feels the ingratitude of those whom he has blessed. Let us not be among the number. What sad answers could be given to the question "Where are the nine?" Some back in the world of sin; others in a backsliding condition, others too busy getting rich to do anything for the Saviour who died for them. Such are a disappointment to their teachers (Gal. iii. 1), and to the Lord Himself. If He has saved you, He looks for you among those who glorify Him, and if you are absent He misses you. On the other hand, the gratitude of the Samaritan delights Him. To minister to the gladness of the Man of Sorrows—what could we wish for more than that? Yet we can do it. And in thus gratefully receiving what He has given, we are prepared to receive more. He makes "whole"—saves with a full salvation—those who yield themselves to a life for his glory.

DEFINITIONS OF CHRISTIANS.

The Scripture gives four names to Christians, taken from the four cardinal graces so essential to man's salvation:—Saints, for their holiness; believers, for their faith; brethren, for their love: disciples, for their knowledge.—Fuller.

LIFE'S DISCIPLINE.

If none were sick and none were sad,
What service could we render?
I think if we were always glad,
We scarcely could be tender;
Did our beloved never need
Our patient ministration,
Earth would grow cold, and miss indeed
Its sweetest consolation.
If sorrow never claimed our heart,
And every wish was granted,
Patience would die and hope depart—
Life would be disenchanted.
Anon.

THE UPWARD WAY.

When God intends to fill a soul, He first makes it empty; when He intends to enrich a soul, He first makes it poor; when He intends to exalt a soul, He first makes it humble; when He intends to save a soul, He first makes it sensible of its own miseries and nothingness.—Flavel.

SACRIFICE.

God has given his best to us in his beloved Son: and if we give our best to Him, He will give us more than compound interest for every penny. Let us be worthy of our stewardship; and let us never forget that true giving begins only when sacrifice begins.—Rev. J. Ossian Davies.

"PRAY WITHOUT CEASING."

Above the anthems of the celestial choir Jehovah hears our feeblest cry; and amid the glories of the upper sanctuary Christ's eye turns less on the glittering crowns his redeemed ones cast at his feet than on his people here—fighting in the fields of battle, weeping in this vale of tears. Therefore let us pray on, nor cease praying till we cease living.—Guthrie.

RELIGIOUS LIFE.

If you would save another from drowning, you must not only see him and pity him, but you must be yourself a strong, stalwart swimmer. Maintain, therefore, your own spiritual strength by prayer and by exercise; and if you are conscious that your religious life is waning, hearken to the words of the risen Jesus: "Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die."
Rev. A. Rowland.

SOLDIER WORK IN BRISTOL.—The recent mission services for the Militia, who numbered nearly 700, were much blessed. A tent had been pitched on Horfield Common, but in consequence of the neighbouring farmers raising objections, it had to come down, and the meetings were held in the open air close to the camp gate. This proved the best place after all, as the preaching could be heard by those in camp as well as by those standing around. The mission was conducted by Mr. Gawyn Cummings, of Dublin (late A.S.R. to 4th Royal Hussars), and God honoured the faithful declaration of his "whole counsel" by bringing many of the men under conviction of sin. Besides the meetings, some of the workers visited the camp and barracks with tracts, &c., and had many opportunities of speaking for Christ. The hon. secretary of the work was Mr. Cecil Smith, 37, Old Market-street, Bristol.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

BANK HOLIDAY AT KILBURN HALL.

It was hardly expected, with such glorious weather, to find so large a number of Christians as met on Monday last, remaining in the city in order to respond to the invitation of Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, the director of the Evangelistic Mission.

In the afternoon, Mr. Blamire gave an interesting account of his 20 years' pioneering work in Spain, and Mr. Goodchild asked prayer on behalf of his special work amongst servants, relative to which he gave some interesting details. Mr. Walters spoke of the mission to Billingsgate fishmen.

After prayer on behalf of these and other workers, Mr. Blair Neatby gave a practical address upon the present cheering aspect of the work in Spain, as described by Mr. Blamire. Mr. Page, of Chelsea, exhorted those Christians present, who at this season of the annual dispersion were contemplating their holidays, to remember the statement that "those who were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word." He would say to them: "As ye go, preach."

After tea the hall was well filled for the evening meeting. Mr. Hurditch having asked for praise for manifest blessing on Mr. Edward Hurditch's tent mission at Cardiff; Mr. Craighead's mission at Burton, Hampshire; for blessing vouchsafed at the Wilton House of Rest; and for souls saved during Mr. Palser's recent services at Dalston Hall; Dr. Neatby followed with a most thoughtful and profitable address from John vii. 37, 38.

Further addresses were given by Mr. Edward Hurditch, Dr. Brooks, Mr. Ned Wright, and Mr. C. Russell Hurditch.

Friends of the Open-air Mission utilised the interval between the services to gather around them in the space in the front of the hall, a large number of people who eagerly listened to the singing and preaching the Gospel.

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

"WAITING UPON GOD."

Does the expression so often used in the Psalms, "Wait on the Lord," imply waiting like that of a servant, or does it imply waiting for the Lord?

Yours faithfully, E. K.

Château d'Oek, Switzerland.

ANSWER.

The servant waits upon the Master for orders; the Psalmist waited upon God for grace and righteousness. His waiting was a lively expectation; he knew his personal need, and in restful confidence he trusted God to supply it. "On Thee do I wait all the day" (xxv. 5). "My soul, wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from Him" (lxii. 5). The ruling idea in this expression, as found in many Psalms, is one of unbounded hope in the God of mercy and truth. It is hardly needful to add that, in proportion as this confidence is ours, we shall individually render truly devoted service to the Lord who has bought us.

"A PERPLEXING QUESTION" (1 Cor. ix. 27).

Dear Sir,—Some of your readers find a difficulty in 1 Cor. ix. 27; but may not that difficulty be an imported one? The principal idea of the passage of Scripture is, not acceptance or rejection, but the means of avoiding the one and obtaining the other. God, who has appointed the end, has also appointed the means. If I would not fail of the end I must use the means; the awfulness of the consequences of failure makes one to be careful in that use. I know that the natural end of such a course is ruin; I avoid that course out of fear of the end, and am saved. The Apostle says: "If I do not keep under my body and bring it into subjection I shall be a castaway; therefore, I do so keep my body, and so do bring it into subjection, and, therefore, I shall not be a castaway." God saves man with man's own concurrence. "If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land." "Run with patience the race set before you." One of the means by which God keeps his people and brings them to final and perfect salvation is by implanting within them a deep sense of the awfulness of failure. "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling," not with apprehension and doubt, "for it is God that worketh in you."—Believe me,

Faithfully yours, David Wheeler (Retired Clergyman).

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. A. R. Buckland has been appointed to succeed Professor Momerie as morning preacher at the Foundling Hospital.

Rev. Cecil E. Tyndale Biscoe, curate of Whitechapel, Rev. David Marshall Lang, Rev. Martin J. Hall, Rev. George H. V. Greaves, Miss S. J. Thompson, Miss M. Sander, Miss Wills, Miss H. K. Cornford, and Miss E. Reeve have been accepted for missionary work by the Church Missionary Society.

It is proposed to arrange for the compilation and publication of a complete History of the Church Missionary Society. Rev. C. Hole, Lecturer in Ecclesiastical History at King's College, has been commissioned to make an experimental beginning by preparing the history of the first five or six years.

SALVATION ARMY.

An attempt is being made by residents in the neighbourhood to prevent the Salvation Army from taking Finsbury Chapel, Moorfields. The matter came before the Court of Common Council last week, in a memorial asking the Court to withhold its sanction to the transfer of the property to the Army. The memorialists urged that the processions incident to the services of the Salvation Army would lead to public commotion in the neighbourhood, and would seriously depreciate the value of the property there. The question was referred to a committee.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Theodore Meyer, superintendent of the English Presbyterian Church's Mission to the Jews in East London, owing to advancing years, contemplates retirement from his more active duties.

A band of students of New College, Edinburgh, who have carried on mission work for some time past in the Old Pleasance Church, Edinburgh, propose to rent a house adjoining the building, and convert it into a settlement, having accommodation for about a dozen students.

At the afternoon service in Ladywell Church, Glasgow, on Sunday week, a Roman Catholic priest, D. C. M'Varish by name, was formally received into the membership of the Church of Scotland. A sermon was preached by Rev. Jacob Primmer, of Dumfermline. Rev. R. Thomson gave an account of Mr. M'Varish's conversion, and that gentleman afterwards renounced the teaching of the Roman Catholic Church with "heartfelt detestation and abhorrence."

BAPTIST.

A mission chapel to seat eighty persons is about to be built at Ash Thomas by the church at Tiverton. Services have been conducted in a farmhouse for the past four years.

Rev. F. C. Spurr, late of Cardiff, has started for the Continent in company with Alderman R. Cory and Rev. H. E. Stone. When Mr. Spurr returns he will take part in the Baptist Forward Movement in London.

The extinction of the debt of £2472 on the Baptist Missionary Society is announced. The committee plead for the co-operation of friends throughout the kingdom in an effort to raise the ordinary receipts of the Society to such a figure as shall meet the ordinary expenditure.

The Baptists in America have decided to celebrate the centenary of foreign missions by a Missionary Convention, which, it is expected, will be attended by representatives from all parts of the world. It is a part of their plan to send out one hundred new missionaries in commemoration of the occasion.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The freehold of the site of Borough-road Chapel, Southwark, has been offered to the church and accepted for the erection of the G. M. Murphy Memorial Hall, which is to be the centre of all kinds of evangelistic and philanthropic work, including Sunday services.

At a meeting of Congregational ministers in Chicago, it was unanimously decided that an appeal should be issued asking the American churches for an annual subscription of 10,000 dollars for aggressive work in France. This work is to be done under the control of the French evangelical societies.

The Union of Welsh Independents at its recent Assembly expressed "its deep and thorough sympathy" with the resolution passed at the meeting of the English Congregational Union, held at the City Temple in May, relative to setting apart the last Sunday in September as a day of special supplication for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the churches and colleges, and decided to urge the churches throughout the Principality to comply with the invitation and to observe the day as proposed.

METHODIST.

A remarkable step has been taken by the Methodis missionaries in China. They have proposed the formation of a "China Methodist Union," accepting one common set of rules of membership. They would also have a course of study for native preachers, and a hymn-book that would be common to all; a united periodical, and a common name for the Methodist Church in China. If this proposal is carried out, Chinese Methodism will comprise Wesleyans, New Connexion and Free Methodists, Bible Christians, and Episcopal Methodists.

The annual Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Germany and Switzerland have been held. The Swiss Conference, which cares for the German-speaking portion of Switzerland, reports 5109 church members, with 994 on trial, 33 ministers, 206 churches and preaching stations. The German Conference, which met in Berlin, returns 7791 members, with 2440 probationers, 70 ministers, 510 churches and preaching places. The strength of German and Swiss Methodism on the Continent at the present time is estimated at 200 ministers and 25,000 members.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Church of Ireland Y.M.C.A. in Dublin, which has been twenty-nine years in existence, has had a very successful year, and has now 458 members.

The total expenditure of the Irish Presbyterian Church last year on home missions was £10,139 7s. 9d., on colonial missions £2418 1s. 3d., and on foreign missions, including Jewish, £14,575 15s. 1d., or a total of £27,133 4s. 1d.

The Armagh Protestant Orphan Society, which has about 130 children on its roll, has suffered considerably as to its income last year, by the change in the tenure of property in the county. It is, however, doing an excellent work.

Dr. O'Sullivan, the new Bishop of Tuam, is working energetically. He has been visiting the outlying parishes of his dioceese, and has been holding conferences of the mission agents and others, whose work is reported to be in a very hopeful condition.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. F. T. Havergal, D.D., vicar of Upton Bishop Ross, Herefordshire, and a brother of the late Miss Frances Ridley Havergal.—Rev. J. Jenkins, for the last seventeen years pastor of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Church, Pontrhydyfen.—Miss Dunn, who went out as a missionary in connection with the China Inland Mission last year; she was the daughter of Mr. J. T. Dunn, one of the elders of the Metropolitan Tabernacle.—Rev. John MacCarthy, rector of Ickborough, Norfolk; was formerly a C.M.S. missionary in the Punjab.—At Ardagh, co. Longford, Rev. F. T. Gregg, D.D.—Rev. C. K. Strong, rector of St. Mark's, Dublin.—Rev. F. Thompson, rector of Edermine.—Rev. Sartok Biswas, native C.M.S. pastor at Kapasdanga, Nuddea district, Bengal.

WHITSBURY, WILTS.—Mr. Henry Murck, of the Evangelisation Society, has just concluded a three weeks' very successful series of services here, in a barn kindly lent and fitted up by friends in the village. The meetings were well attended nightly, and on Sundays about three hundred people assembled. The clear, simple Gospel message was listened to with rapt attention, and the word was with power and much assurance. We have reason to hope that many gave themselves to the Lord Jesus, while Christians have been helped and blessed.

ANOTHER NEW MISSIONARY BAND of special interest is about to go forth in connection with the Church Missionary Society. Rev. Barclay F. Buxton, son of Mr. T. Fowell Buxton, of Easneye, Ware, has offered to go to Japan with a small party of missionaries, undertaking both the direction and entire charges himself. Mr. Barclay Fowell Buxton is an M.A. of Trinity College, Cambridge, and was until recently curate of Stanwix, Carlisle, and formerly of St. Paul's, Onslow-square, London (Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe's). It is proposed that Mr. Buxton's party should occupy the town and district of Matsuye, an important place at the west end of the main island of Japan.

Dublin Mission Homes and Schools.—During the summer months funds are very low, and yet in the Birds' Nest and its kindred institutions nearly seven hundred children are receiving their daily portion. Some friends who would otherwise help us have got an idea that £50,000 has been left to us, and one little girl put away her money-box, saying, "My pennies are not wanted any more." This is not the case. The Birds' Nest and Homes and schools get no share whatever of this money. It has been left to the Irish Church Mission Committee in London for the purpose of extending the Mission work all through the country, and so the agencies already existing, such as these Homes and schools, come in for no share of it. We therefore wish all our friends to know that, under God, the work still depends on them, and we need their sympathy and help as much if not more than ever. Ellen Smyly.

The Temperance Cause.

In the United States seventy-five per cent. of the brewers and ninety-three per cent. of the saloon keepers are foreigners.

Fourteen million gallons of potato and rice spirits are annually imported into Great Britain. Twelve and a half millions are consumed under the names of rum or gin.

At a large Nonconformist Conference, recently held at Newport, it was decided unanimously to agitate, in order to get the Welsh Sunday Closing Act extended to Monmouthshire.

The demand for temperance refreshment accommodation at railway stations increases. Why should not the temperance organisations at each great centre unite to press the demand?

The Royal College of Physicians has petitioned the House of Commons to amend the Inebriates Act, so as to secure power of compulsory detention, and to provide for the support of criminal inebriates out of the rates.

During the past twenty-five years there has been a decrease in the administration of alcohol in hospitals equal to forty-seven per cent. At the workhouse, St. George's, Hanover-square, it has been dispensed with altogether.

The Bishop of Bloemfontein has resolved on prosecuting an earnest temperance work in South Africa. At the outset he will particularly devote himself to the Bechuanaland police and the employés of the British South Africa Company.

Provost Vitosznski, an earnest priest in Galicia, by his exhortations in church and in the homes of his people, has induced many to cease their visits to the village public-house. The governor has solemnly warned the priest and the mayor that they may be made responsible for any loss to the proprietors of the public-houses through the change in the habits of the people!

Ladies connected with the Manchester Women's Christian Temperance Association have recently called on managers of hotels and restaurants, and as a rule courteous permission has been given them to speak with the barmaids and waitresses, and invite them to a social evening occasionally. Several ladies have opened their houses for the purpose, and a considerable number of the young people have signed the pledge.

Mr. J. Albinson, 24, Grimshaw-lane, Newton Heath, Manchester, writes:—"We propose having 'Pleasant Evenings for the People,' commencing in October and continuing throughout the winter. It is important to have good literature to put into the hands of the people on leaving the meetings. Tracts, pamphlets, and temperance leaflets will prove a great help to us. Men's, women's, and children's Gospel services are held weekly, and for these we should be glad to receive similar gifts."

DONATIONS RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO SATURDAY, AUGUST 2, 1890.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent oss of same.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

"They were EXACTLY what suited us. I think them far superior to almost any I have seen; short, interesting, and to the point. Some have been circulated in Boulogne; some by our clergyman's lady, who sees so many English here; and others by our friends who meet on Tuesdays to pray for Tract-work in all its branches. Some have also been put into French, and published in various periodicals as articles. Brittany has had several in its Protestant paper, and Dr. Monod's 'Archives' have inserted one or two, abridged."—Extract from a Letter from France.

From the AUTHOR,

MR. GEORGE THOS. CONGREVE,

Coombe Lodge, Peckham, S.E.

ONE RECENT CASE WILL BE GIVEN IN THIS JOURNAL EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

(THIRTY-FOURTH SERIES.)

Mr. JOHN CHARLWOOD, of Jessamine-cottage, CRANLEIGH, near GUILDFORD, was brought to Coombe Lodge by Mr. Mann, his employer, on the 13th of February last. Pneumonia, years ago, had left him weak at the chest. Some weeks before this an attack of influenza had been followed by a return of pneumonia. This had left him in a very prostrate condition. The breathing was short, with spasmodic pains in the right lung, and he was losing flesh and strength.

By April he was well. He writes me:—"I felt better from the first dose of your medicine. I am all right now. I have no pains or difficult breathing, no weakness or languor now. I have made flesh. I can run and sing as well as ever. My friends say 'it is a wonder to see me.' I thank you so much for your kindness and for the benefit received from you. You are perfectly at liberty to use this."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

Cheap Edition: With Portrait. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.

THE TEMPERANCE RECORD says:—

"This AUTOBIOGRAPHY is admirably suited for the drawing-room table or for a gift-book: but it is especially worthy of possession as a memento of Mr. Gough, who has now entered into the joy of his Lord. Beautifully printed, appropriately illustrated, attractively bound, and tastefully embellished—it deserves a wide circulation."

GUY'S GUIDE TO DIGESTION

IS an interesting account of the time taken to digest nearly every article of food known. Business anxieties and harassing family cares interfere so much with the healthy activity of the stomach that all should pay attention to the digestibility of food. When roast pork takes five hours and twenty minutes to digest, and venison only one hour and thirty minutes, it will be seen of what infinite consequence to happiness is this Guide. It will be sent GRATIS and POST FREE to any reader who will write for it.—T. GUY & CO., 4, Ludgate-circus, London, E.C.

GENESIS.
EXODUS. NUMBERS.
LEVITICUS. DEUTERONOMY.

Tinted covers, 1s. Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.
Cloth, Bevelled boards, Gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

"The Readings are short, simple, and lucid helps to Bible study. Admirable comments for family worship and private devotion. Used well, they will give 'light on the daily path.'"—The Cambridgeshire Congregational Magazine.

"We are quite charmed with this volume; so much so that when we commenced to read it we were obliged to finish it; it was so fascinating. It is a valuable addition to the literature already published on the Old Testament. All who want to understand the Pentateuch should get this book and study it carefully."
Irish Congregational Magazine.

"Industry and skill are evident on every page in the selection of the salient incidents for comment on and in the marshalling of really important information, while the whole is suffused with the Evangelical spirit. . . . Rarely can Sunday-school teachers get so excellent a commentary on such easy terms."
Methodist New Connexion Magazine.

"The book is intended to be used by Bible readers as a work of reference, and appears to have been compiled with a good deal of thought."—The Bookseller.

"Cannot fail to prove helpful to Bible students."—Footsteps of Truth.

Very suitable for hanging up in Chapels, Mission Rooms, Lecture Halls, Workshops, &c., &c.

NEW WORK by REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

Tried by Fire:

EXPOSITIONS OF THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PETER.

Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.; Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"Delivered first as Expositions in the course of my stated ministry, and in pursuance of my constant custom, they were afterwards published week by week in the pages of The Christian; and in response to very many requests are here preserved in a permanent form.

"Written amid the multiplied engagements of a busy life, it would be impossible to estimate the benefit to heart and thought by bending over these translucent depths of sacred truth—so calm, so still, so profound, so counteractive of life's feverish haste: and it is my earnest hope that these Expositions may pass on to others some of the blessedness which their preparation has brought to myself."
Extract from Preface.

"These discourses are marked by vigorous language, by spiritual thought, and by a high and holy purpose. They are practical rather than critical; and we have no doubt the book will help to promote the Christian Life."—Methodist Times.

"Many of these expositions have already greatly interested us; and we are glad to see them reprinted. There is in them such evident sincerity of soul—such simplicity, earnestness, and beauty—as to charm the devout and thoughtful reader. Some features of the work especially strike us, such as the ease, accuracy, and freedom with which the word 'elect' is treated (page 13); the many indications of careful, exegetical reading shown in passages of great beauty, as on pages 24, 38, 48, and elsewhere. In fact, we can scarcely turn over a leaf without finding some passages of intense force and of touching tenderness."
Sunday School Chronicle.

"The papers forming this volume having recently appeared in 'THE CHRISTIAN,' have doubtless been read with interest by many of our readers, from some of whom we have received grateful testimony to the consolation and help they have proved to them while passing through seasons of severe suffering and trial. The book is written in the author's well-known thoughtful and forcible style, presenting the truth both in an expository and practical manner. We warmly commend the work."
Footsteps of Truth.

"The popularity of Mr. Meyer's Expositions is a good sign of the times. This, the latest, is one of the best, and is full of tender Christian wisdom. There are many unobtrusive signs of thought and culture throughout; but the chief charm of the book is its earnest simplicity."—British Weekly, July 11, 1890.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. J. A. O'Connor, New York, ex-Romish priest, and editor of The Converted Catholic.

Mr. Spencer Walton, of the Cape General Mission, has arrived in England, with his sister and his infant son, looking older in years and not strong in body, but full of hope and zeal for the Lord's work in South Africa. He expects to remain in this country until January next, and is open to address meetings, public and private, upon the claims of that southern colony. He has a story worth hearing, and we hope our readers will afford him many opportunities of telling it. Mr. Walton's address is: Clenthurst, Versailles-road, Anerley, London, S.E.

A few days ago the girls attending the High School, Dulwich, sent a contribution of no less a sum than one hundred and fifty pounds to one of the Day in the Country associations. We should like to see other schools follow this noble example. Many a little heart would be made happier and many a weak little body strengthened if in each of our large schools an opportunity were afforded to the scholars of contributing to such funds, and they would prove that "it is more blessed to give than to receive."

By the death of Cardinal Newman, at the age of eighty-nine, an ecclesiastic of eminence and influence has passed from the scene. His wonderful personality at Oxford, and during the Tractarian movement, have often been depicted. Of late years his life has been one of comparative seclusion. Of the Tractarian controversy The Times aptly says:—"It was professedly historical. Yet of history, in the modern scientific sense, there was very little in it; and neither side seemed to suspect that behind the question whether the Fathers thought and wrote so-and-so lay the question of the grounds on which the Fathers formed their opinions." However much the judgment of the man may have been called in question, his honour has generally been allowed, and his name held in regard for his personal piety and conscientiousness. The "Apologia" will long be read as a remarkable record of religious experience. Referring to it The Times has employed words well worthy of quotation:—"Perhaps an Apologia must always be somewhat painful; at all events this one is, from the air of absolute certainty that pervades it, and, shall we say, from the evidences of nothing short of superstition with which it abounds."

From The Methodist Recorder we learn that during the sittings of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference, at Bristol, an excellently-conducted debate took place respecting the admission of professional reporters to the Conference during sessions when ministers and laymen were present. This, which is called "The Representative Session," is of recent introduction, and the admission to it of other than ministerial reporters won such favour from lay representatives, and even ministers, as to secure the adoption of a resolution in favour of it. The change will be important and valuable, as making the Wesleyan Methodists seem more a part of the nation, and bringing them into a more manifest identification with all sections of the Christian Church. Exclusiveness is out of keeping with the age.

At the conference, what is termed "The Fernley Lecture," was delivered by Professor Green, of Didsbury College, on "The Mission of Methodism." Five truths were emphasised as characteristic of Methodist teaching, and fundamental:—

(1) Conversion in the preacher first, and then in the hearer, and that conversion including judicially a change of relation Godward—Justification; and a change of experience in personal nature and character—Regeneration.

(2) The assurance of salvation. The core of Methodism was not its services or organisation, but the experience of a redemption exulted in and enjoyed. (3) An elevated idea of the Christian life, involving the entire sanctification unto God of character and possessions. (4) The saving of souls—the proclaiming unfalteringly an offer through Christ of a salvation unto men from all sin. (5) Fellowship, as distinct from church membership, yet leading to it, of all who desired to flee from the wrath to come, and for instruction and spiritual association.

We are told by men who want the preaching of Sociology instead of the Gospel, that the pulpit "is played out; it is out of touch with the age." Let it be said plainly that the early preaching of the Methodists was not only not in accord with the age, it testified against it. Nevertheless, such an impartial witness as Mr. Lecky affirms (in his "England in the Eighteenth Century") that the Christian doctrines taught by the early Methodists "exercised a profound and lasting influence upon the moral forces of the country, and even upon the course of its political history." Granting the advantage derived from advances in the critical and more accurate knowledge of God's revelation, it may be said firmly, that the omission, or slurring over, or cold recognition, of the above fundamental doctrines, is that which now makes the pulpit despised as "played out"; whereas the impassioned enforcement of them is just as much needed in this age as in the time of Wesley. Because they are God's panacea for man, they can never be obsolete.

It by no means follows that a return moved for in Parliament or in the House of Lords is certain to be of wide interest, but we are satisfied that one moved for a few nights ago by the Earl of Harrowby will be of great value, as it will embody the report of the proceedings of the International Congress held at Paris in September, 1889, on the subject of the social and sanitary effects of the Day of Rest. We heartily commend his lordship's views, as reported at length in the Press, to the attention of working men, for we have long been satisfied that the extension of the Sunday rest to those who have not now got it, means, as the Earl of Harrowby says, "the promotion of good feeling between rich and poor, between employer and employed throughout the world."

New Guinea, the largest island in the world, excepting Australia, has a barbarian population, the spiritual darkness of which cries for the Gospel of Christ. Rev. W. G. Lawes, the well-known missionary, writing to The Times, points out that the instructions which the Administrator, Sir William MacGregor, has received, state that he is, "to the utmost of his power to promote religion and education among the native inhabitants." Yet, strange to say, each of the South Sea Island teachers is taxed at the rate of £7 per annum, nearly one-third of his entire stipend! We rejoice to learn from the report of the Administrator that side by side with a firm and impartial enforcement of the law every care is to be taken to preserve the natives from the temptations before which uncivilised races, when first brought into contact with Europeans, have so often fallen, and that stringent ordinances have been passed against supplying them with intoxicating drinks or firearms. Mr. Lawes well says:—

As the area of Government control is extended, officers will be needed in many districts of New Guinea, and it is of first importance that Christian principle and the best of English life should be represented to these (so-called) "savages." The Administrator's hands would be strengthened, the cause of civilisation advanced, and the interests of commerce promoted by the accession of men who, with a nobler ambition than that of making money, would consecrate their energies and abilities to the work of civilising and Christianising, raising, and ruling the natives of this great land.

We sincerely trust New Guinea will be blessed with such traders and rulers—trading and ruling in the fear of the Lord.

It was with something like consternation that British Christians learned a few days ago that Madagascar was to pass under the protectorate of France. In return for certain advantages at Zanzibar and elsewhere, our Government has made concessions to the French in regard to diplomatic dealings with the Malagasies. We rejoice to find, however, by the announcement of Lord Salisbury on Monday last in the House of Lords, that opportunity has been taken on both sides, not only to reserve all rights and privileges which the subjects of either Power may have in either island, but also to give the most explicit guarantee to missionaries and missions as to the freedom of religious practice and teaching. It was on this latter point that apprehension was felt, the hostility of the French towards Protestant missions in the South Seas being still well in mind. How the people of Madagascar will greet this change we cannot say. We sincerely trust there will be no repetition of the bloodshed of a few years ago, and that there will be no reason for the insinuation that British Christians sent the Gospel, and their Government barter away the natural rights of the people. While hoping that the French will put no obstacle in the way of God's kingdom in the island, we cannot but see in this arrangement another important sphere for missionary activity on the part of the French Protestant Churches.

Mr. Sankey has compiled a volume of music, entitled "Winnowed Songs for Sunday-schools," which will shortly appear.

Those who think that by means of the liquor traffic evil powers are aiming to counteract the Christian movements of the times, find much to justify their fear. In Iowa (U.S.) prohibitory laws have been passed, with special regard for the freed blacks; but the Supreme Federal Court has provoked an exciting conflict by a decision which permits a neighbouring State to introduce intoxicants. In relation to Africa, the Native Races and Liquor Traffic Committee have just appealed to the King of the Netherlands, asking for a high tariff on liquors imported into coast territory, and for an official analysis of them. They declare that the land is so deluged with gin and rum, order so perishing, and offices so abused that the people must soon be swept off the face of the earth. Consummate wisdom and firmness are necessary to save men from these threatening evils.

Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, writing in the Union Signal, states, in regard to the liquor traffic in Africa, that some idea may be formed of the amount of intoxicating drink sent to that country from the quantities declared at Madeira, where most of the African-bound ships touch. In one week only, 960,000 cases of gin, 24,000 butts of rum, 30,000 cases of brandy, 28,000 cases of Irish whiskey, 800,000 demijohns of rum, 36,000 barrels of rum, 40,000 cases of vermouth, were declared. Mrs. Leavitt adds that an Angola chief said to a visitor who proposed to open a mission: "Drink has eaten away my people's hearts. Their heads are empty; they cannot understand the words you say to them. It is too late"; and she states that "four years ago congregations of fifty to a hundred-and-fifty could be gathered where now it is impossible to hold a service." If this is to be the most remarkable result of civilising Africa, the energy which is displayed in the direction of opening up new districts for British trade will only add to our terrible responsibility before God.

The anti-slavery decree lately issued by the Sultan of Zanzibar is matter for sincere congratulation on the part of all friends of Africa. By it the sale or exchange of slaves is absolutely prohibited, and slave depôts are forbidden under severe penalties. Slaves are to be allowed to purchase their freedom from their masters, the latter being compelled to accede to any such application, and the slaves of freed slaves by the decree regain their liberty. That it is not a dead letter is shown by the fact that the Sultan has closed all the houses hitherto used by the native brokers for the traffic in domestic slaves. The Times states that the Arabs are content to be confirmed in the possession of their present lawfully held slaves subject to the above decree, but that it is generally recognised that the effect of these repressive measures will be to bring domestic slavery to an end in a few years. This is good news, and it is earnestly hoped that the expectations thus raised may be abundantly realised. The work of abolition will necessarily be gradual, but the edict in question marks an immense forward stride, and great credit is due to Col. Euan Smith, to whose strenuous efforts the Sultan's decree is said to be largely attributable.

THE THREE GARDENS.

BY REV. JAMES CULROSS, D.D.

THE GARDEN WHERE THEY LAID HIM.

IV.—The Garden-Sepulchre.

The last sufferings are over; the sacred head is bowed; the world's Redeemer hangs lifeless on the cross. He really died; it was no counterfeit or swoon. The fact that Roman soldiers were his executioners gives security enough of that. They were not in the habit of leaving such work half done; and they had seen death too often to make mistakes about it. Besides, the Jewish authorities were to be satisfied. Though there had been nothing else, the spear-thrust in the side, by the hand of a soldier who knew the road to the heart, would have been sufficient to produce death. The fact of death is thus made sure, and, indeed, has never been seriously disputed except under the exigencies of some theory.

In the suburbs of Jerusalem, just beyond the walls, were numerous gardens and orchards, which furnished a pleasant retreat from the close and sultry town. In one of these gardens was a rock-hewn sepulchre, never yet occupied, belonging to Joseph of Arimathea, and designed for his own last resting-place. This Joseph, a member of the great Sanhedrim, was a secret disciple of Jesus, and had not consented to the counsel and deed by which He was put to death. After the crucifixion, as the Sabbath drew on, he and Nicodemus, another secret disciple, having obtained the consent of the Roman Governor, took down the dead Christ from the cross, and laid Him in this garden-sepulchre. It had to be done hurriedly, owing to the nearness of the Sabbath-day; but they found time to wash the body from blood and dust, and to wrap it in fine linen with a hundred pounds weight of spices in the folds—an immense quantity, as for the burial of a king. The eleven took no part in the service; only a few loving Galilean women watched till all was over, and, when they saw the stone rolled to the door of the sepulchre, sadly withdrew. By an afterthought of the chief priests and Pharisees, who were haunted by the words which "that deceiver" had spoken as to what would happen on the third day, the stone was officially sealed, and a guard of Roman soldiers was stationed at the spot, to make sure that none of his friends should remove the body and then give out that He was risen from the dead. There is a tone of unconscious sarcasm in the governor's words authorising the watching of the sepulchre, "Make it as sure as ye can."

The site of the garden is now unknown. Tradition places it within the walls of the modern city, not more than five hundred yards from the Haram area, and marks the spot where the body was laid, by the so-called "Church of the Holy Sepulchre." It is now many years since Dr. Robinson showed that the traditional site cannot be accepted; but he did nothing to determine or even to suggest another. Afterwards Mr. Fergusson endeavoured to establish the theory that the crucifixion took place on the east of the city, almost close to the Temple enclosure, and that the rock-hewn tomb is covered by the building which the Moslems call "the Dome of the Rock." Other indications point to the north of the city. The precise locality must still be held undetermined, except that it lay near the city but outside the walls.

In this garden-sepulchre, then, the dead Christ was laid; and the few who had been actors or spectators withdrew, and rested the Sabbath-day according to the commandment. Of all days before or since in the world's history, that Sabbath stands by itself. The "flesh" of the holy Redeemer rested in hope in the cold bosom of the tomb; His spirit was "in Paradise." Where Scripture is silent, it becomes us to be diffident; we may not imagine what emotion was stirred among the heavenly host, what joy was "radiant in celestial eyes," or how, among the powers of darkness, mingling with their triumph, there would be forebodings of dismay, their victory carrying in its bosom a mighty, undefined dread. But we know how it was in Jerusalem. The excitement of yesterday is followed by the deep Sabbatic stillness. Multitudes, as usual on "an high day," throng the Temple-courts, and the services proceed as they have done for centuries. To the little band of disciples it is a day of sorrow; now they feel themselves "orphans" indeed; faith is bewildered; the great hopes that had inspired their breasts seem to be quenched for ever; the "leading-star of love" has set behind a cloud. The chief priests and elders could be but ill-content with their success. What may the third day bring forth? In the very hour of fruition they must have had the secret pain of successful sin, and strange misgivings that they could neither account for nor banish.

On the morning that followed, the mighty Victor came forth from the prison-house where He had lain; for it was not possible that He should be holden therein. To have continued in the grave would have falsified all the past. We have no account of the rising itself, save a line or two in the Gospel according to Matthew. In that line or two there is nothing of the "pomp and circumstance" of words. The account is as simple and unadorned as simplicity itself. It was enough to state the facts. In them lay the glory.

Early in the morning of the first day of the week, Matthew tells us, there was a great earthquake; the angel of the Lord, with countenance like lightning and raiment white as snow, descended from heaven and rolled back the stone from the door of the sepulchre, and sat upon it; while the sentinel soldiers did quake, and became as dead men. Without human witness, friendly or hostile, the Lord arose, the angel rolling back the stone at his coming as a servant might open a gate for a king to ride through.

Two particulars may be noted with regard to the time. First, it was early morning. The Galilean women set out to visit the sepulchre "when it was yet dark"; and on their arrival they found it empty. Just with day-dawn—"that sweet hour of prime"—the Lord seems to have left the place. Second, it was spring-time—Nisan, the month of blossom—the time of nature's gladness. The earth, awaking from her wintry sleep, was putting on her beautiful garments; the air was "full of dew and sweetness"; the sky was cloudless; the time of the singing of birds was come; the garden in which the sepulchre lay was bursting into bud and blossom. If his advent was in "the winter wild," when nature "had doffed her gaudy trim," in sympathy with the Man of Sorrows, His resurrection was in the hour of nature's glory. One can scarce help seeing in all this a kind of nature-symbolism of deliverance achieved from the reign of death—pointing that in Him resides "the power of an endless life."

A Call to Prayer.

Many of the readers of The Christian will have been shocked by hearing of the apprehended expulsion of the Jews throughout Russia. After dwelling in Russia for months, my remembrances of its people are so pleasant that one almost refuses to believe they would willingly practise cruelty on unoffending Jews—the brethren of our Lord, the people from whom we have received so many of our familiar names, and the men who have so carefully preserved to us the greater part of our Bible. The people, too, who have this last year been reading with such avidity the Christian's New Testament, translated for them by Mr. Wilkinson's friends into their own venerated Hebrew—if the Jews are indeed to be driven out of Russia and dispersed over the earth let us pray that such dispersion may be abundantly blessed to the world, as were the dispersions of Christian Jews and of Christian Gentiles in the first and early centuries.

But what a needs-be for the labours of our brother Wilkinson, and his co-workers to be expedited, both in Russia and in the countries to which these fleeing Jews might be driven, if the apprehended expulsion should take place! Yes, and far more than this—why should not this anticipated and bring us Gentiles to sit round our New Testament, and ponder it, like little children listening to a tale never heard before? For instance, in Luke x. 2, Jesus says in sending out the seventy: "The harvest truly is great, but the labourers are few: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth labourers into his harvest." And after "the seventy returned again with joy, saying (ver. 17): Lord, even the devils are subject unto us through they name," ver. 21 adds: "In that hour Jesus rejoiced in spirit, and said, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes: even so, Father; for so it seemed good in thy sight." Jesus actually exulted that it was the Father's will to work such mighty works by such simple ignorant men!

Is there some mistake in the statement of the words of our blessed Lord, or were his words of exulting emphasis to be limited to those seventy only, and was there afterwards to be another law for human learning, human oratory, and human refinement, to supersede the Holy Spirit's teaching? No, never. For, again, He sends out the twelve specially selected, and of the one most used at Pentecost and his comrade it is recorded, and truthfully recorded, they were

"UNLEARNED AND IGNORANT MEN."

Then surely this was to cease with the seventy and the twelve? Nay, for Paul, who was himself both learned and cultured, writes long afterwards (1 Cor. i. 26, 28, 29), "For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble [are called]. But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty, and base [vulgar] things of the world, and things which are despised hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are: that no flesh should glory in his presence."

Are we then to reject for work among the heathen men and women who have proved themselves blessedly successful in winning souls at home, because their pronunciation may be vile and their grammar utterly bad? Listen to the echoes of those two unlearned and ignorant men, which must still reverberate round the world: "Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye. For we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard" (Acts iv. 19, 20).

Whilst our heartfelt thanks must be given for the glorious work that has been done by missionary societies of Europe and America in years past, and in this our day, let us never dwarf our prayers by confining them to such noble and self-denying labourers. No; what we must also cry for is for thousands upon thousands of Christian men and women, who shall go out, or be raised up out of the native populations; and who, whilst supporting themselves by honest work or trade, and holy living, shall, by their success in winning souls, prove themselves to be a true part of the army of labourers that Christ enjoins us to pray for.

If in Palestine in the dawn of the morning, he sent forth seventy, and then twelve, and afterwards thousands, do you think that in this late hour of the evening, whilst the immense harvest is

ROTTING FOR WANT OF GOD-SENT REAPERS,

He says: "Cry no more for labourers; the door is shut; the harvest is past." Nay, but the rather we will go and stand in the plain of dry bones, and when He says, "Can these dry bones live?" we will look to Him to raise every one of those very heathen, not a disorganised mob, but a veritable "army" of God-selected and God-sent-forth soldiers, an army wholly surrendered to Him, and by Him made wise to win souls. Ah, yes,

SATAN STILL MAKES IT HIS BUSINESS

to sell veils. We see he has a veil for our persecuted Israelite brethren to blind their eyes against considering the wondrous teaching of the Messiah. He has, too, a veil for us to hinder our understanding the urgency and simplicity of the injunction to spread the Gospel throughout the whole world, not by ministers or missionaries merely, but by every converted man and woman. Now, Mr. John Wilkinson and his friends have fixed four days at Mildmay, not for speaking, but specially for prayer on behalf of the Jews. Would it be out of place that we Gentiles also should take time for such special prayer, and to consider if "blindness in part" is not upon ourselves in regard to our prayers and our methods for spreading the Gospel throughout the whole world? We, as well as our Jewish neighbours, may and rub our eyes, when we remember that only about forty years ago we were as blind as bats in regard to permitting our sisters to carry the Gospel to the millions of heathen women, our fellow-subjects, in India. One post has just brought me two letters, one from C. H. Gill, India, of the C.M.S., and the other from his brother, W. Hope Gill, China, of the C.I.M., each asking for reinforcements. W. Hope Gill had just finished a long journey of 425 miles through many towns and villages, the whole length without one single witness for Christ. He urges us to cry to the Lord of the harvest to thrust forth labourers into these needy districts, and adds, "Oh, that one might be more faithful in doing so!" Yea, into the whole field of China, specially, I think should we now thus cry and labour in prayer to God, since dear Mr. Taylor's paper, "To every creature" is before the Church, showing what a thousand evangelists could do to hasten China's evangelisation.

THE GOSPEL IN DUNKIRK.

Dear Sir,—I should like to draw the attention of some of your readers to this place. If they have not already settled where they will spend their summer holidays, perhaps some would think of Dunkirk, which offers several advantages: (1) By its nearness to England. Steamers come here direct from London, fares only 15s. return. By Dover and Calais it is quicker, but rather more expensive. (2) The air is very dry and bracing, and there are beautiful sands and bathing, though it is not a pretty place. But, above all, there is plenty of scope for Christian work both for those who speak French and for those who do not.

Beyond supporting a colporteur, the French Protestant Church here does not engage in evangelistic work. There is an evangelist working amongst the Belgian population, and that is all that is done for this large town of 30,000 inhabitants. It is a very hard and wicked place, and, therefore, surely Christians should seek to win it for Christ. The Salvation Army worked here for some time, but the three officers have lately left, quite worn out. The McAll Mission sent an evangelist to hold two services weekly, but that has been discontinued. We saw an appeal in your paper about a year ago for this place, which has led to our spending our summer holiday here. The people receive God's Word most eagerly. In a few minutes our basketful of Gospels and tracts is emptied. Sometimes we are almost mobbed in a friendly way; two or three hands are laid on each book, and when the supply has failed those who have got none go away much disappointed. As the chaplain here says: "France is now ready to receive God's Word, and we ought not to lose the opportunity."

We have gathered some children, many of whom attended the McAll services, for a class every week. Last time there were fifty-six present. We have also begun one for adults, but that has been so far poorly attended, not more than ten at a time the three weeks we have had it. We shall probably have to leave towards the end of August. Could not someone speaking French come and continue these classes, and the little Bible-reading and singing we have started for the English sailors every Sunday afternoon? There is a godly evangelical English chaplain, who warmly welcomes any help amongst the English sailors, of whom there are always from 100 to 200 in port. The chaplain visits them on their ships, and there is a nice Institute where they can be met, with a Christian man at its head. The work amongst them is difficult, as they only remain a few days in port, but in consequence a great many are reached, and they go to all parts of the world. The accommodation is not very plentiful, There are furnished villas, hotels, and an English family receives a few boarders. It is considered best to be out of the town, in a pleasant suburb—Rosindaël. Trams run into Dunkirk every few minutes. I will gladly look for accommodation for anyone wishing to come.—Yours faithfully, (Miss) A. Clarke.

TEMPERANCE LESSON BOOKS.—In order to meet the demand for new, simple, and progressive manuals for the use of scholars and teachers, the Committee of the National Temperance League will shortly publish the first of a series of lesson books, the preparation of which has been entrusted to Mr. Frank R. Cheshire, F.L.S., the League's own educational lecturer, whose reputation in scholastic and scientific circles guarantees that his works will be complete, readable, and accurate, and will fulfil the requirements of the Code. Mr. Cheshire has undertaken the work largely in deference to the repeated desire of some of the teachers in whose schools he has delivered about 1600 lectures, and from which he has examined more than one hundred thousand temperance essays prepared by the scholars who have listened to him.

Discouragers.

A BIBLE-READING AT KESWICK CONVENTION.

By Rev. HUBERT BROOKE.

Read Num. xxxii, 6-15 and Deut i. 38. No Israelite could exist in Canaan for whom God had not provided an inheritance. Levi might appear to be left out (Deut x. 9), but the Lord was his inheritance, and Levi was representative of all the rest. The Psalmist said (xvi. 5), "The Lord is the portion of mine inheritance and of my cup"; no wonder he added a little later (xxiii. 5), "My cup runneth over." Here then is a picture of being filled unto all the fulness of God. The Lord is your inheritance: now we can understand how the inheritance may be owned, but not possessed. Some people own a property which they do not work, or work only partially; but by others it is owned, worked, and possessed. God is our inheritance, and we are heirs of God. It will take eternity to comprehend all our inheritance. There is always more to follow. The Lord is the Rock of my habitation whereunto I continually resort.

When we seek to possess our inheritance we enter into sympathy with Paul when he says, "I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus." God apprehends us for a purpose, but few apprehend what God would do. There is yet very much land to be possessed; let us place no limit to what the Lord wants us to inherit. An American millionaire was congratulated on the dollars he possessed. He said that was not much cause for congratulation; a man may possess one million dollars, but after that the dollars possess him. We have no time for anything else but the Lord. None seem to possess all, few even possess much, of that glorious inheritance.

"Wherefore discourage ye the heart of the children of Israel from going over into the land which the Lord hath given them." Those people limited God for themselves and discouraged their neighbours. The best way not to discourage others is not to limit ourselves. These people say, "You have not sufficient capital; you have not been a Christian long enough; or it will cost a great deal." Don't yield to these discouragers when you are going in to possess the land; stop their mouths by pointing to the will and the title-deeds. The discouragers did not all die in the wilderness.

Tell them, "The Lord said I should meet with discouragers; you are of that sort, therefore I know I am on the right way." The discourager is a sign-post, don't sit down there. He is a stick-in-the-mud, and has no intention to leave the spot which he has reached. Say good-bye to him, and pass on.

Discouragers are of three sorts, hindering our going in to posses the land:—

(1) Open enemies.—They want to hinder us, because we are going to dispossess them. "The men of Ai smote of them about thirty and six men: for they chased them and smote them in the going down: wherefore the hearts of the people melted, and became as water" (Josh. vi. 5) Their hearts melted at the first defeat; but, take courage, you may have a succession of victories after this. Don't be cast down by the first defeat.

Even when not defeated, a good bold threat is enough to discourage (1 Sam. xvii. 8-11). When Saul and all Israel heard the words of the Philistine, they were dismayed, and greatly afraid. But neither active opposition nor bold threatening can hinder the enemy of the Lord from being overcome. The Lord's people must prevail; if then, so now, in the strength of the Lord.

The enemies sent Nehemiah a threatening letter; "It is reported among the heathen." Remember that rumour is proverbially called a liar. Sanballat was an enemy; Gashmu was a gossip; leave them alone. "Thou and thy fellow Christians profess sinless perfection." Tell them, "There is no such thing as thou sayest; but thou feignest them out of thine own heart."

The open enemy will use blandishments, as when Satan took Jesus to the top of an exceeding high mountain, and said, I will give Thee all the kingdoms and glory of the world if Thou wilt fall down and worship me. But his Father had said, "Ask of Me," and the possession was to come by way of suffering. Satan proposed an easier path. Leap over the sufferings and get into the glory at once. When the Lord Jesus began to tell his disciples that He must go to Jerusalem and be killed and rise again, Peter rebuked Him; "Take it easy, the Lord's service is not so hard as that."

These discouraging temptations must be overcome by being brought into the presence of the Lord. Joshua's plea at Ai was, "What wilt Thou do unto thy great name if we run away." As soon as David came to meet the giant, he brought in the presence of the Lord, "I come to thee in the name of the Lord of Hosts." Bring discouragers to the name of the Lord. Nehemiah appealed: "My God, think Thou upon Tobiah and Sanballat and the rest that would have put me in fear." Elisha showed the young men that the Lord's presence was with them. O Lord, open the eyes of old men and young men, that they may look at these discouragements as in thy presence. Show them the heaven full of ministering spirits, sent forth to minister on behalf of them who are about to inherit salvation.

(2) Half-hearted friends.—These bring discouragements of a more subtle character than the former. Fellow-believers discourage the Lord's servants. "Thus did your fathers when I sent them from Kadesh Barnea to see the land." They said the enemies were stronger than they. The secret reason why half-hearted believers discourage us is found in Ps. cvi. 24, "They despised the pleasant land; they believed not his word." If old believers do this, how can we expect the younger to go forward.

The two and a half tribes said, "We don't want to go over Jordan; we are very comfortable here." So a young believer may say, "I don't see older Christians so eager about following the Lord fully." Take care you are not settling down when you ought to go forward.

In Nehemiah's time the nobles put not their necks to the work of their Lord. What did he do? He brought in the Lord's estimate about them. You must prove all things. So Moses said to the two and a half tribes: "Behold, you are risen up in your fathers' stead, an increase of sinful men, to augment yet the fierce anger of the Lord against Israel." They were cowards, lazy, they did not wholly follow the Lord; therefore their lives were wasted, their carcases fell in the wilderness. Let me say to all here, Believe the Lord, so shall ye prosper. Be not discouraged nor discouragers, don't think it is the normal thing to die in the wilderness, or to wander there forty years before going up to possess the land. When the fox lost his tail he told his companions that that was the normal condition for foxes. Let no one put away the promises and say they are not for you, the Lord wills to give them to the very full.

(3) Another class of discouragers are injudicious, whole-hearted friends.—When on the way to the land, Moses said to Hobab: "We are journeying unto the place of which the Lord said, I will give it you. Come thou with us and we will do thee good." What must Hobab have thought when thirty-eight years afterwards they were still in the wilderness? Moses did not tell an untruth; he told him of the glory, but he did not tell him of the trials by the way. So many whole-hearted believers grievously discourage young Christians by not telling them of what they are sure to meet with in the Christian life.

With every promised blessing we must mingle salt: "Every oblation of thy meat offering shalt thou season with salt" (Lev. ii. 13). Salt finds out the sore places. On the way to the glory there is sure to be a cross. Every sacrifice must be salted with the salt of truth. "Have salt in yourselves, and be at peace one with another." Remember, "Let your speech be alway with grace, seasoned with salt" (Col. iv. 6). All the discouragements we have mentioned, except one, came through speech. If we are bound for the crown, we must have the cross; but remember that "the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us."

At the point of entering the land, the discouragements come; but the Lord says, "Have not I commanded thee? be strong, and of a good courage." The Lord Himself is the source of our encouragement. "Jonathan strengthened David's hand in God." "David encouraged himself in the Lord his God." "Wait on the Lord; be of good courage, and He shall strengthen thy heart: wait, I say, on the Lord."

MISSION SHIPS IN FRANCE.

Mr. C. J. Mountfield, master of the Herald of Mercy, describes another voyage up the Seine:—"While at Paris we had four meetings a day, and the people—either Roman Catholics or of no profession—listened with profound attention. We had on an average 500 persons daily, the audiences including ladies and gentlemen of position, as well as people of the working classes. No doubt it was the first time many of them had heard the Gospel. The rich as well as the poor are ignorant of the Bible. While the pastor was reading St. Luke's Gospel, a gentleman was trying to find it in the hymn-book, and, not succeeding, handed the book to someone to find the place for him.

"Coming down the Seine the same success attended our endeavours, the ship being filled with people. We stopped at Rouen and also other places, and held meetings at the locks, speaking from the deck to the people on the quays. I am convinced that no means as yet tried are equal to mission ships for reaching the masses of people. I pray for more mission ships; but, unless the Lord's people will help Mr. Cook to replace the one now in Ireland, and not worth repairing, there will be one less."

AMONG PARIS JEWS.—A deeply impressive scene was witnessed on Wednesday evening, August 6, when a Jewish lady and her son presented themselves at the Church Taitbout, 42, Rue de Provence, Paris, to make an open confession of their faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. For months this daughter of Abraham had been under the instruction of Mr. Mamlock, missionary of the London Jews' Society, and there was no reason for doubting her sincerity and true conviction. The parents and brother of the lady, though still Jews, were present. They were deeply interested spectators, and will, it is hoped, soon range themselves among the disciples of Christ.

CHINA AND THE SCRIPTURES.—Rev. Dr. Wright, editorial superintendent of the British and Foreign Bible Society, has returned from China, after a mission which, it is hoped, will be fruitful of much good. The following sentences from a letter in the last issue of The Bible Society Reporter will interest many:—"The Shanghai Conference was the largest assemblage of missionaries ever brought together in one place. Many important questions were discussed, but the meeting will be longest remembered for the Bible Society work which it inaugurated. My mission has been fulfilled beyond my anticipations, or the hopes of those who sent me. The version strife of forty years is, I hope and believe, closed, and the missionaries united in Conference have made arrangements to devote their best scholarship and intelligence to the production of standard versions: (1) in the high classical Chinese; (2) in the low classical Chinese; (3) in the Mandarin Chinese; (4) in the local dialects; (5) in the preparation of marginal references, page, and sectional headings, &c.; (6) In the production of Scriptures for the blind. I feel profoundly grateful to God that my long and weary journey to China has not been in vain, but that I have been enabled to take part in laying the foundations of a great work fraught with blessings to the millions of China."

The Cape General Mission:

IS IT A MANIFEST SUCCESS?

When Mr. Spencer Walton, in the autumn of 1888, issued his programme of the work he proposed to do in South Africa, under the title of the Cape General Mission, I must confess that I felt extremely dubious as to the result of the enterprise.

I have now nearly completed a hurried visit to the Cape, and have spent a few weeks in going over the different branches of the Mission, and I am astonished to find what a vigorous and extended work is being done, and especially grateful to God for the deeply spiritual tone which pervades the whole.

Beginning with Cape Town itself, a grand work is going forward in the New Mission Hall (which by the bye is one of the prettiest halls in the town). On the Sunday I was there the place was well filled with a deeply interested audience of just the right sort, and at the close of the service twelve professed to decide for Christ. During the week there are consecration and prayer meetings in the same hall. This is under the superintendence of Mr. Frank Huskisson, assisted by an efficient choir and a good band of workers.

I was also much impressed with the splendid open-air service held on the jetty on Sunday afternoon. The first hymn was hardly started before a large crowd gathered round, composed of sailors, soldiers, Dutchmen, Germans, Hindoos, Malays, and almost every description of "coloured boys," who stood for over an hour and listened to the good old Gospel message delivered in English and Dutch by the open-air band, under the leadership of Mr. George Ramsay, of Montrose.

Then there are the older branches of the Mission, comprising the Sailors' Rest and the Soldiers' Home, commenced some years ago by Mrs. Osborn, which are still doing good work; these are under the superintendence of Miss Jones, Miss Hilder, Miss Wright, and Miss Arnot.

A new and very important work is just being commenced by Miss Sheasby amongst the lepers on Robben Island, to whom she is to pay weekly visits. She also works among the Malay women and children.

Miss Walton (Sister Edith) and her assistant nurses are very hard at work, and more helpers in this branch are immediately needed.

Leaving Cape Town, I visited the railway extension works at Kalk Bay, and found Mr. Coates and a young Dutchman hard at it among the men employed in constructing the new line. His shanty is divided up into a small reading-room for the men, a room for meetings, a kitchen, a small bedroom for himself, and last, but not least, a little surgery and dispensary; and I am assured that Mr. Coates's pills have gained considerable fame among the men and are in great demand. A magnificent work is going on here, and several of the worst characters have been truly converted to God.

Starting for Kimberley, I passed through Salt River, where the Misses Sprigg, Rose Innes, and Mitchenson are carrying on a work amongst the railway employés, commenced by the late Mrs. Spencer Walton. I broke my journey at Beaufort West, and thus had the pleasure of an interview with Mr. Jackson, who travels up and down the line labouring amongst the railway officials; he is a true child of God, and after meeting him I was not surprised to find that his work is being truly owned of God, and that he is deservedly esteemed and beloved wherever he goes.

Arriving at Beaconsfield, close to Kimberley, I was met by Mr. Walklet, who is working in conjunction with Mr. Morris, of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, and I shall not easily forget the Sunday I spent here. Having obtained a permit for the compounds, where the natives who work in the mines are lodged, I drove out from Beaconsfield there, Mr. Morris taking his cornet, and Mr. Walklet his small organ; I can't say that I altogether enjoyed the drive, as their poor old cart is so tied together with straps and string that we were in continual danger of landing in the middle of the road. (I do wish someone would give them £20 for a new cart; it would be money well expended.)

Arriving at the Central Compound a large dinner bell was rung by Mr. Morris and soon after Mr. Walklet struck up a tune on his organ, and then the congregation gathered round, and such a congregetion as is not easy to describe! On they came, Zulus, Swazis, Basutos, Kaffirs, Fingos, natives of Zambesi, Pondos, Bushmen, Hottentots, Amatongas, &c., so that some twenty different tribes were represented; they were dressed in all conceivable styles, from a simple band round the waist, to something approaching a civilised costume; almost all were decorated with a plentiful supply of bangles. Mr. Morris spoke fluently in the Sasuto language, which was understood by most present; and Mr. Walklet has made such rapid progress that he could sing their native hymns in good style.

Many of these men listened most attentively to what was said, and from time to time some have given signs of a real change of heart. During this outdoor service many will sit and mend or wash their clothes, others will play cards (this gambling is unfortunately very much indulged in within the compounds), and some complete their morning toilet with the aid of a small looking-glass.

This outdoor service was followed by a short one indoors, in a room kindly lent by the mine-owners. From six to eight compounds were visited in this way, and as a night-school is held during the week, where the natives are taught to read the Bible in their own language, it is simply impossible to over-estimate the importance of the work; for, on leaving the compounds to return to their different tribes they carry with them the message of salvation, not only written upon their hearts, but in the Bible which they have learned to read. The Cape General Mission is most anxious to put one or two more workers here as soon as the necessary funds can be raised.

I understand that among other new work shortly to be undertaken, if God permit, are missions to the Pondos and Swazis, and work amongst the Cape Mounted Police in the Transkei; there is also a new opening at Johannesburg to be filled, and a new Nurses' and Deaconesses' Home to be opened in the course of a week or two in Cape Town.

On my way back from Kimberley I broke my journey at Wellington, and had the privilege of making a short stay with the Rev. Andrew Murray, president of the Mission, and found him very hopeful about its future.

In closing, let me say that from personal observation, I can most sincerely commend the Cape General Mission to the prayerful attention of the readers of The Christian.

SERVICES IN THEATRES AND HALLS.—Some members of the Shoreditch Vestry seem to have set themselves for the hindrance of the Gospel. For many years the Town Hall has been used on Sundays for religious services in connection with the London City Mission. A few days ago the Vestry decided to let the hall from October to March next to the National Sunday League for lectures and musical entertainments. The earnest appeals of some members that the old tenants should be preferred, and the hall be utilised for evangelistic purposes, were ungraciously overborne. The discussion made it very clear that some members of the Vestry have no adequate idea of the claims of Christ upon the hearts and consciences of men. It is sad to note that two clergymen, Revs. Freeman Wills and W. E. H. Sotheby, supported the resolution whereby the Gospel was brushed aside to make room for lectures and entertainments. It is difficult to see how they can reconcile this action with their grave responsibilities as ministers of Christ.

ITALIANS IN LONDON.

It is a pleasure to be able to announce a well-considered endeavour to reach and influence the many thousands of Italians in London. So far, the efforts made for the moral elevation and spiritual enlightenment of the Italians in our midst have been on a small scale and without the needful organisation. The newly come labourers are Rev. Dr. Constantine Stauder and his wife, who have for years been engaged in all-round Gospel work among the Italians of New York.

Dr. Stauder is a native of Tuscany (Italy), and at the age of 23 was ordained a priest in the Church of Rome. Pope Pius IX. sent him as a missionary apostolic to America, where he covered the highest posts of learning as Doctor of Divinity and Canon Law. The awful new Dogma of the Pope's Infallibility opened his eyes to the corruptions of the Romish faith, and he joined the Episcopal Church of the United States. Taking up residence in New York, he founded missions, schools, Sunday-schools, and Christian societies. His principal work was the rescuing of children from vagabondage, and the promotion of peace and morality among the factions of the Italian colony, to whom he took the simple Gospel of Christ.

Being the first clergyman of Italian extraction to enter the American Church, he had much special work to do—composing hymnals, translating service-books, writings, tracts, &c. He instituted the Italian Young Men's Christian Association, which is now spreading through the principal cities of the Union where large colonies of Italians dwell. Mrs. Stauder is an accomplished Canadian lady. Her chief work in America was the founding of the Italian Young Women's Christian Association. This was the first society of Italian women in America, and its principal aim is the education of the children of foreigners and the raising of the condition of the Italian women. She also founded the Industrial Italian School, which in June, last year, counted more than 500 children. The Doctor and his wife had been invited to join Count Campello in the Reform movement in Italy. But friends of the Italians in London have requested them to remain in England, at least for some time, and extend their care to the large colony of Italians here, alas, too long forsaken and neglected. We trust they will inaugurate a great work.

In a circular, they announce a splendid programme. It is proposed, amongst other things, to establish an Italian Home, and Children's Shelter, in which moral and religious education will go hand in hand with industrial training. The project has, we read, been hailed with joy by the better class of Italians residing in London, and already some promises of support have been received. £2000 will meet the expenses of implanting and maintaining for a year a modest institution of the type required. Communications to Dr. Stauder, may be addressed, 2, Vernon-place, Bloomsbury, W.C.

CHRISTIAN SAILORS WITNESSING.—At the last muster of the Christian Lifeboat Crew, at the Welcome Home, Ratcliffe Highway, a letter was read from a band of six members on board the steamship Flintshire bound for China and Japan. Writing from Port Said, the men said: "We are having meetings every other evening, and services on Sundays; henceforth, we are also going to have Bible-classes twice a week. The officers seem to take an interest in our work; that is to say, there are no orders given, or other disturbances, while we are at service. We have taken care that those who do not attend the meetings receive books and tracts; every Sunday morning they are distributed to everyone on board. A few words are spoken at the same time. We are all doing our share, and the Master is working for us."

VI.—LAND-MARKS.

I noticed that, as a rule, there are no hedges or fences of any kind to divide the land. The vast plain of Esdraelon, ten or twelve miles across, so far as I noticed it, had no such divisions. The only signs of divided ownership in these Palestine plains are a few loose stones put one upon another at intervals in a straight line, so that it would be very easy for anyone when ploughing to change the boundary line. So when six of the tribes stood "upon Mount Ebal to curse" (Deut. xxvii. 13) it was solemnly proclaimed: "Cursed be he that removeth his neighbour's landmark" (Deut. xxvii. 17). To which the assenting "Amen" of the vast crowd was heard all over the mountain side. Thus, a wrong which might easily be committed was checked by the curse of Jehovah, solemnly proclaimed.

VII.—THE ART OF CONTENTMENT.

In riding from Jerusalem to the Dead Sea through the wilderness of Judea, I noticed a dwarf shrub bursting into bloom. Nothing can exceed the desolation of these rugged, barren mountains and ravines, which produce a solemn awe on the mind of the beholder. So far as this diminutive shrub was concerned, it did its best to enliven the scene of desolation and to fulfil the prediction of Isa. xxxv. 1: "The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose." Naturally the reflection was suggested that piety in lowly places, and in adverse circumstances is seen at its best. A rugged, cold world is thus beautified, as the rugged sides of these ravines were by this flowering shrub; which, instead of repining at its hard lot, did its best to appear to advantage, and to cheer the wayfarer by its tiny blossoms. "I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content" (Phil. iv. 11).

VIII.—THE STRAIT GATE, AND THE NARROW WAY.

I met with several striking illustrations of the strait gate (Matt. vii. 13-14). Outside Jerusalem are the rock-hewn tombs of the kings, the entrance to which is so low that a stout member of our party declined to try it, and the remainder had some difficulty in squeezing through.

In the mosque El Aksa, on the site of Solomon's temple in Jerusalem, are two pillars so close together that only very thin people can squeeze themselves through, yet all pilgrims used to try, for the tradition was that only those who succeeded were sure of heaven; the others would be lost. But the test was manifestly unfair, because it was absolutely impossible for stout people to succeed, and it was hard to be shut out of heaven on that account; whereas the strait gate indicated by our Lord in Matt. vii. 13, is wide enough for all to pass through if they are willing to leave their sins behind them, and enter alone. But the test of these two pillars is now no longer possible, for a recent Pasha had a strong iron guard placed between them to prevent the pilgrims testing their spiritual prospects in this way. And many of the wise of this world would like to close up the only strait gate that leads to the only narrow way, so that all pilgrims on life's highway might flatter themselves that they were right without so inconvenient a test as conversion. But the directions "Enter ye in at the strait gate," and "Strive to enter in at the strait gate," are still sounded out, and cannot be abrogated or set aside by any self-deception or worldly policy.

But in some respects the most remarkable illustration of the strait gate was found in the Temple of the Sun at Baalbek. This Temple is entered by a very wide and lofty portal, which anyone may pass through with pleasure. But at the foot of the solid wall to the right of this portal is the entrance to a spiral staircase, leading to the top of the walls; which it is only possible to enter by lying down flat, and squeezing the body through the low, narrow opening. Yet for the sake of the fine view from the summit, many visitors submit to this humiliating process. I did it myself, and so had the lesson impressed on my mind the more forcibly. And what is that lesson? Why, this, that those who want to see the glorious visions only to be obtained from the battlements of the city of God above, must enter by the only way which the Builder of that city has appointed, and that is the way of humility and self-abasement. Many of the tourists who visit Baalbek are proud of that performance, yet they scorn to stoop low enough to enter the strait gate which leads to the beautiful city. But in this matter also only those who humble themselves shall be exalted (Luke xiv., 2).*

Mr. George Müller's Work.

"My faith has been tried many times, yet I am not in the least tired of this mode of life, in which, for everything, I am still depending on God; but desire, by his help, in the same way to finish my course." So writes the venerable Founder and Director of the Bristol Orphan Homes in his fifty-first report,† and in the eighty-fifth year of his age. When the annual accounts were made up on May 26 of last year (1889) there was a balance in hand for the orphans of £9,551 8s. 10d. Referring to this fact, Mr. Müller says: "Though this balance was so large, yet, according to the average expenses of the previous years, it would only be enough for twenty weeks; we could not, therefore, trust in the balance in hand, but had to look to the living God for the continuation of this orphan work; and we desired to do nothing else, as it is our joy and delight more and more to make it known that none are confounded who trust in God alone. We were, therefore, during another year, supplied with means for this largest of all orphan institutions in the world, not because we had a large balance in hand at the beginning of the year, but because we trusted in God, as we ever had done since December 9, 1835."

The financial result is manifest in the balance-sheet of the report, which shows a sum of £5,184 12s. 2½d. to the credit of the orphan account on May 26, 1890. Thus, through another year, the work has been well sustained, and additional testimony is given to the faithfulness of God and the EFFICACY OF FAITH AND PRAYER.

The value of this testimony is immense, corroborated as it is by the facts set forth in the annual narrative, and which can also be attested by numerous eye-witnesses. For the greater part of the year Mr. Müller was labouring abroad, chiefly in India, and a brief summary of his work will be found in the opening pages. He had purposed going on to Shanghai, but intelligence of the lamented death of his daughter, Mrs. James Wright, led him to return to Bristol, which he reached about the end of March.

The providence of God in the care of the Institution is illustrated, as usual, by references to the donations received during the year, which show the same variety as ever, and the same wide-spread interest. From all quarters the donations come, large and small, and constantly from new and unknown contributors. Writing on September 27 last, Mr. Müller says: "During another month we have been enabled to meet all expenses, amounting to £752 4s. 9½d. (this is for the School, Bible, Missionary, and Tract work), and our balance, which was this day month £72 18s. 4½d., is now £228 0s. 1d.; but immediately after the monthly accounts were made up, it pleased the Lord greatly to increase our balance. We received this day from the United States, for these four objects, £4,000, and for the orphans, £1,000. See, dear Christian reader, how blessed it is to

TRUST IN GOD.

Will not my dear fellow-believers be encouraged by this, and be led to make trial of this way, and see for themselves how willing the Lord is, even in the last part of the nineteenth century, to supply the need of his children, who trust in Him in answer to their prayers?" "December 28, from Liverpool £2 12s. 3d., as a thank-offering for work to do during the past year and having health to do it." From almost any country in the world you could mention, says Mr. Müller, "We have had donations, and all this unsolicited, and in forty-nine out of every fifty cases, from persons who are unknown to us." On January 8, a lady in Scotland, an entire stranger, writes for information as to where she shall direct a cheque, and shortly after forwarded £500. On May 17, a legacy of £2,207 3s. 3d., which had been in Chancery about five years is paid. Concerning this, Mr. Müller says: "Day by day.....I asked God to hasten the money to us, and to get it out of the High Court. Our faith, however, was long tried, as it often had been in similar cases. But I expected the answer, as I had had an answer to prayer under similar circumstances more than twenty times regarding legacies in Chancery."

We might quote many more instances of great interest, did space permit, of which the foregoing may be taken as specimens, while the donations vary in amount from shillings to thousands of pounds. According to former custom Mr. Müller intersperses the record with remarks of a practical character, for the purpose of encouraging Christians to the exercise of faith in God. It is the habit among a large number of people to look upon the life of this servant of Christ as in its conditions and principles, but nothing can be more evident than this, that he does not so regard it. One weighty sentence will illustrate this and carry a lesson at the same time:—"If we do the work of God, in God's way, trust in Him, and bring our case in believing prayer before Him, we need never be cast down; for in God's own time the help will surely come; but we must do God's work in God's way, bring our case in believing prayer before Him, and not indulge in things contrary to his mind."

It is now more than fifty-six years since Mr. Müller commenced this work, at which time very little attention was paid to the subject of caring for destitute orphan children. Remarking upon this point, he says:—"At the time when it was specially laid on my heart to labour for orphans, the total accommodation in all the Orphan Institutions in England was for 3600 orphans, and, at the same time, there were 6000 orphans under eight years of age in the prisons of England according to public statistics.....Now, I am happy to say, there is accommodation in England alone for at least 100,000 orphans." The stimulus thus given to philanthropic effort by Mr. Müller's example has proved of great value; and, while sharing his satisfaction at this increase of benevolence, we rejoice that the noble work, carried on by himself and his esteemed colleague, Mr. James Wright, is maintained in so much vigour and efficiency.

A MISSIONARY'S WORK IN FIJI.

Extracts from a Letter to a Friend.

When I read your letter through, it made my heart warm to you, and led me to thank God for putting it into the hearts of his children to pray specially for missionaries. Then I translated the letter to a number of our teachers and others who were gathered together with me, and many and hearty expressions of thankfulness to God were spoken that prayer was continually being offered in the far off land, for the prosperity of his work in this part of his vineyard.

The Sunday before your letter came, I preached in the chief place in this mountain district. Let me tell you a little of my work.

On Saturday evening we always have what is called the "Preparation Prayer Meeting." Saturday, indeed, is called "Preparation Day" for the Sabbath. Food, wood, and water are brought in in sufficient quantities to last over Sabbath. I led this prayer meeting, and next morning—Sunday—I led the seven o'clock prayer meeting. At ten I preached to 400 natives, and baptized, during this service, 72 adults and children. The first one baptized was

THE DAUGHTER OF THE HIGHEST CHIEF.

He and two others were the first three who embraced Christianity on my visiting them in 1865, and he sent to me before the service, asking me to baptize his daughter by my name, "in memory of my first visit to the district." When I asked him to "name this child," he replied, "Andi Lagama," which means "Lady Langham," this baby being a lady of rank, and always to be called Adi—pronounced Andi.

Another one baptized was an old heathen priest who was recently converted (he has been a nominal Christian for many years). His birth name is Lightning, and he was baptized Abraham. After a hasty meal I rode six miles in a tremendous downpour of rain. I got wet through, and even my change of clothes were all more or less wet, so that I had to preach in shirt, trousers, and slippers, to about 200 people; and baptized 32 adults and children.

I travelled during the following week to various villages preaching—four times—holding school examinations, baptizing adults and children (during this trip, which lasted fifteen days, I baptized 269 adults and children). On Sunday the 15th (I got your letter on Sept. 13) I led seven o'clock prayer meeting, preached, baptized one adult and one child, gave sacrament of the Lord's Supper to two hundred members, 20 of whom were scholars in our school. Went up the river seven miles, preached, baptized 65 adults and children, and gave the Lord's Supper to 200 more members, 20 of these also scholars in our schools. Then went down the river the seven miles, shooting some rapids in the dark in our canoe which was but by the Lord's mercy we got safely to our lodgings for the night.

At the missionary meetings, some of which I held myself—others were held after I came home—the people contributed about £153; so you will see they help well. Altogether this circuit of mine gave £664 to the general funds of the Society.* We have 11,585 natives in my circuit, 11,418 of whom attend our services, and 4986 of whom meet in class (there are 3100 full members, 1221 on trial, and 665 meeting in our junior classes). Three of our people died a few days before I got to this district—Happy deaths. "I know the path to Heaven," said one, "Jesus is the way. I do not know when I shall die, but I know Jesus is my Saviour."

* The Wesleyan Missionary Society.

This one was to have been baptized by me by the name of Ezekiel. A woman named Agnes died exclaiming: "I shall enter Heaven to-day. Eternal life is mine! Life! Eternal life is mine." Another said "I am going, I am away," and his spirit winged its way to the land of the blessed.

"AS AN ANGEL OF LIGHT."

2 Cor. xi. 14.

PART I.

The world is too busy with work and with play,
It suffers no pauses, it brooks no delay;
And the Church is too busy with all its good deeds
To rest by the fountain whence all good proceeds;
So there's room for the sick, the infirm, and the blind,
To pity and pray for too busy mankind.

"Amen," saith the enemy; "all are agreed
That pious seclusion alone meets the need,
With high walls encircle the thrice-favoured few,
Whose fastings and prayers will distil like the dew
On the toilers that groan, and the triflers that run
To see every vanity under the sun.
The flower of the race will surely repair
To these temples of penitence, houses of prayer.
Celibacy lauded and praised to the skies,
The convents and monkeries soon will arise;
And hermits and anchorites people the wild,
For by virtues fantastic shall man be beguiled."

Ah! skilled was the plotter, and skilful the plan
To dazzle, mislead, and intoxicate man;
The best and the wisest fell into the snare—
The best and the wisest—exceptions were rare.
The blindfolded teachers, they never perceived
That Satan as angel of light had deceived;
That, losing his hold on the old pagan world,
The gods from their shrines ignominiously hurled,
The crafty arch-foe, both of God and of man,
Who changes his tactics, but never his plan
(Which is ever the Lord God of hosts to dethrone,
That he and his fiends may be worshipped alone),
Had dug deeper, and laid the foundation again,
Of a scheme to enthral and to captivate men.

The Indian Theosophy, old Gnostic* lore,
Exploded as heresies long years before,
Surviving in principle, held mighty sway
In the minds of the leaders of thought of that day;
For many a sturdy opponent of wrong
Is enslaved to illusions from whence it has sprung:
And the seed of the Upas is carefully sown
By the very same hand which the tree has cut down.
For in error kaleidoscope-like is the mind—
Combinations are many, the same still in kind;
Or like barrel organs whose tunes are but few,
When the list is completed begin we anew.
Philosophy falsely so-called was the lure,
For the noble and talented, saintly and pure;
While lying pens, dipped in hypocrisy,† wrote
The legends and marvels on which the crowd dote.
So changed in exterior, changed too in name,
The gods of the heathen are worshipped the same;
And Jupiter, Venus, and Bacchus again
Receive the lip homage of ignorant men.
In Romanish countries one sees e'en to-day
The old Saturnalia hold ignoble sway.
Thus Christians and pagans to each other lent,
And Satan, that Lord of Misrule, was content.

We weep o'er his triumph; but still we can see How easy, unwarned, such a triumph might be.
But when, with the century's snows on her brow,
The Church is befooled and entangled as now,
Untaught by the annals of history's page—
The blood-sprinkled records of many an age,
Of martyrs who suffered, whose crime was their faith,
And their love to their Saviour more mighty than death;
Of scaffolds and gibbets, of racks and of flame,
Of tyranny, cruelty, sorrow, and shame—
We're amazed and confounded, and ask, "Can it be That again we are destined such sorrows to see?"
We pause for an answer, nor wait we in vain,
For echo repeats it, "Such sorrows again!"

* The Gnostics taught that the universe was the joint work of two co-existent beings—the one good, the other evil. All mind and spirit and light were the creation of the good spirit, all matter and darkness the creation of the evil one. Consequently, to escape from the condition of natural life, as far as possible, became the duty of man, or was esteemed the highest excellence; hence the austerities, fastings, vigils, maceration of the body, seclusion, and celibacy. A false and fantastic standard of piety was the result.

† 1 Tim. iv. 2.

PART II.

Yet were there footsteps on the soil of this poor earth,
Which, followed wisely, would have led far other-wise;
One unsullied Being visited this lost world,
Then died a sacrifice for man's salvation.
His lips spake words man's never spake before nor since,
The glorious Son of God, the gracious Son of Man,
Jesus Emmanuel.
His words and ways recorded stand in Holy Writ.
We search in vain for practice or for principle
That e'er could yield such cruel, bitter harvest.
What monastery founded He? What convent blessed?
Pilgrimages counselled? or what relics praised?
Of all the multitudes that thronged his daily path
And blessed his power to heal, claimed He as much
For hermit solitude or cloistered piety? ... as one
The widow's son of Nain He raised to life, and then Delivered safely to his mother's arms.
The ruler's daughter from the dead was raised by Him,
And then committed to her wondering parents.
The man of Gadara, released from Satan's thrall,
Received Divine commission now to tell his friends
That Israel's great Messiah there had come to bless.

Such were our blessed Saviour's works; but what his life?
Pure and unsullied was it, as the morning dew—
Divine yet human.
No stern ascetic He, rejecting nature's gifts, man.
God's good and beauteous blessing to ungrateful
He marriage blessed, and drew to his encircling arms
The tender little ones who flocked unto Him there.
Earth's sorrows claimed his deepest, tend'rest sympathy;
And friendship never seem'd so sweet and sacred as
When seen in Him. crowd,
Retirement loved He, yet freely mingled with the
To bring the blessing there, and nights of fervent prayer
Oft witnessed to his heart's deep solemn loyalty
Unto his Father;
While days of active toil, did truly evidence
His ministry to man.

Such was the great Redeemer. What his followers?
We search again th' inspired page, and there we find
Disciples worthy of so bless'd a Master.
Jesus the Lord, Him crucified, a sacrifice
For fallen man, then raised for his salvation,
This was their lofty theme.
Sin they detected and denounced without reserve
In its protëan forms, and, as became them well,
The godliness they preached they also practised then.
Manly it was, yet was it truly reverent,
With soundest reason consonant and common sense;
No sullen discontent with that which God ordains;
No sickly mysticism that shuns the light of day
And shrinks from life, with all its God-appointed toils,
And varied blessings.

By them all classes were exhorted and addressed:
Subjects, parents, children, masters, each in their turn;
With servants, husbands, wives, they all were led and taught
To hold themselves to God responsible for all
They did, and make his written Word of faith the rule
And practice of their lives.
The Spirit, we are told by Paul, expressly speaks,
And *demon teaching calls such doctrines as forbade
To marry, and commanded to abstain from meats
Which God ordained to be received with thanks,
By those who do believe and know the truth.

So far opposed are thoughts and ways of God from those Devised by sinful man, e'en far apart as light
From darkness is, as truth from falsehood far removed
As Heaven from Hell.

No wonder then if followers of two systems so opposed
No more resemblance to each other bore
Than forest oak and mountain pine,
Bathed in the morning dew and swept by Heaven's blast,
Bear to the pale flower grown without the light of sun,
Or the weak seedling found 'neath hot-house roof.

LAW CLERKS' CHRISTIAN UNION.—This Union held its third social meeting in the Shaftesbury Hall, Orde Hall-street, on Thursday evening last week, under the presidency of Mr. C. C. M. Baker (barrister). Addresses were given by Mr. Griffiths, also a barrister, and Mr. Ellis, an articled clerk, upon John iii. 7 and Luke v. 10. The hon. sec. of the Union is Mr. J. C. TRUSTING.

I do not ask Thee, Lord, to be explaining
The many mysteries of my life to me;
I only ask Thee, Lord, for grace sustaining
To bear the burden which seems fit to Thee.

I am content to trust thy loving leading;
It were not trust, if I could trace the way.
No good thing shall this life of mine be needing;
Thou wilt provide the manna day by day.

CREATED, OR HAPPENED, OR EVOLVED.

"It's lovely to live on a raft. We had the sky up there all speckled with stars, and we used to lie on our backs and look up at them, and discuss about whether they were made, or only just happened. Jim, he allowed they was made, but I allowed they happened; I judged it would have took too long to make so many. Jim said the moon could 'a laid them; well that looked kind of reasonable, so I didn't say nothing against it, because I've seen a frog lay, most as many, so of course it could be done. We used to watch the stars that fell, too, and see them struck down. Jim allowed they'd got spoiled and was hove out of the nest."

In this charming piece of fooling Mark Twain states the problem admirably. The question is whether things were made, or "only just happened." But Jim, being a philosopher, suggested evolution as a compromise, and Huck Finn's deism was not intelligent enough or vigorous enough to resist it.—A Doubter's Doubts about Science and Religion. (Kegan Paul.)

MR. SPURGEON'S COLLEGE.

Wednesday, August 6, being the opening day of the new session of the Pastors' College, the tutors and students were entertained at Westwood throughout the day by Mr. and Mrs. Spurgeon. Twenty-one fresh students were admitted, making the total number now in course of training over seventy. On the arrival of the party in the grounds, refreshments were served, after which a short prayer meeting was held in the open air. Mr. Spurgeon gave a brief address of welcome to the newcomers, who, he said, were entering on their studies with much freshness of piety which he hoped they would not lose during the ensuing months. He believed they were still on the right side. The object of the college was to train champions for the truth; they desired to see men of ability come forth to carry the Gospel banner to the front. All could not be first; but all could be useful.

The company dispersed throughout the grounds until dinner, and after that repast, addresses were given by Prof. Gracey and Mr. Bunning, from Australia. The former gave some excellent advice to the students, showing that nothing could be done without faith; and that the truth they were to teach could not be found out by reason; it was a revelation from God.

All spent a pleasant afternoon in the grounds, and after tea another meeting was held in the garden. In the course of a second address, Mr. Spurgeon assured the students that they would find more and more need for the divine showers to come down on their work. They needed the Holy Spirit to enable them to sow the seed and to preach with power. No man was able to preach always alike: for various things, such as biliousness, headache, or a liver out of order, might affect him. He might even be affected by things connected with the congregation, such, for example, as the sight of whose face looked as though nothing short of a thunderbolt could move it. Otherwise, the pulpit might not be right; it might be too high, so that the preacher had to stand on a narrow hassock. He was himself stupid enough to be put out by such things; and men being such strange creatures, such things would put preachers out. Those who were most blessed in their work were often like high-bred horses. Others more resembled cart-horses; but if they did much, their heart would be near their skin, and a little thing would put them out. When, however, all other things were right, they would not make any effective sound until the Living One made his breath to sound through them. They must endeavour to live in an atmosphere in which God could bless them. The Lord could not bless some men, because, when conversions occurred, they were overcome by pride. Such men had abilities; but they knew it, and needed not that the devil should tell them that they had preached a good sermon; they told that to themselves. God would use an earthen vessel, or one that was merely meek, but He would not use the proud. He advised them, with all their getting, to get understanding. The tutors could not give them that; the grace of God alone could impart it; might He grant it to all. Mr. Spurgeon then referred to the possibilities of success or of failure which lay on before, and urged the students to pray for themselves and for him.

A copy of the Rev. Charles Bullock's "George Herbert" was presented to each student in the name of the author.

Y.W.C.A. HOME, FOLKESTONE.

A correspondent who has been staying at the Y. W. C. A. Home, Folkestone, writes: "The Narrows Mission has from the first been carried on by women. The beginning of it all was Miss Moore. She utilised material which she herself had brought to Folkestone, and utilised it to a great deal of purpose. She established a Young Women's Christian Association, and connected with it a Seaside Home of Rest, where women from school, warehouse, office, and shop, might obtain the rest and recreation which London's weary workers so much need. Most of them were used to Evangelical work, and knew how best to labour on behalf of their poorer sisters and brothers. Others were full of the energy which Miss Moore and Miss Nell, the Lady Superintendent, knew so well how to direct.

"The Home has served a double purpose. It provides sea-side rest within the reach of workers of limited means. Moreover, it has given to the townsfolk an example of aggressive work which they have not altogether refused to follow. Time back, permission to hold the Children's Special Services upon the Sands could not be had; such services were held last year. The story of the Home points a definite moral to Christians living in easily accessible seaside towns. Get a Home as brightly furnished as the one at Folkestone, girls with the right spirit, and—most important of all—a lady superintendent like Miss Nell. Then give your girls work to do—not enough to spoil their holiday, but just sufficient to keep them in harness. Provided your aims are right and your dependence upon God complete, the results will be the same as at Folkestone."

MR. G. R. CAIRNS, of Chicago, sails this week for America, after a protracted stay in this country during which his evangelistic labours in various places have been greatly blessed.

RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.—The Bank Holiday was kept at the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff-highway, with the usual free tea and hearty services, both afternoon and evening. It was opened with an outdoor meeting, at which several ladies, English and Swede, assisted. Tea followed to about 130 sailors, during which meal Mr. Isaac and a Swedish lady gave an address, and songs were sung. After tea the entertainment wound up with separate meetings for the English and Scandinavians, the latter being particularly well attended.

REV. J. McLEAN, Baptist minister from Glasgow, has concluded a three weeks' mission in Caddy, co. Antrim. On the week evenings the meetings were held in the schoolroom, which was generally crowded; and on Sunday evenings large congregations gathered in the open air to hear the Word preached. On the last night of the series about seven hundred were present. Christians have been much revived, and some unbelievers have been led to trust in Christ. Mr. McLean conducted a similar mission last year, the fruits of which are still manifest. The recent meetings have had a marked influence for good over the district.

HARTFORD, CONN.—Large numbers of people have gathered in three sections of the city for several Sabbaths past to listen to gospel preaching by the pastors and others who have assisted them. All denominations of the city have united in the work. Many who never attend church have earnestly listened to the words spoken, and evidently much good is being done. Rev. Graham Taylor conducted the service at the Tunnel Park, when he introduced Rev. E. Payson Hammond, the evangelist, who related an interesting account of a remarkable meeting in Denver, Colorado. Mr. Hammond explained what he called the "Central Doctrine of the Bible Substitution," by which God could be just and yet pardon the guilty. He referred to the meeting which Rev. L. L. Potter and he had held in the jail in the morning, and of his having spoken to the man who, last week, shot Mr. Milner in East Hartford. Every one present seemed deeply interested in the service. Large open air meetings have been held at the Ball Ground. Many outsiders are beginning to feel that the pastors and people in the churches take an interest in their welfare.

For the Young.

A PRISONER.

By Olive E. Dana.

'Say what they will, it's hard! Nobody knows anything about it, or can. And nobody can help it, or me. It's like being in prison, and I never thought I should stand that very well. Nothing to see, or think of, or do,—I don't know how I'm going to endure it. And it will be weeks and months!"

And Stella Eveleth, thinking all these things in her half-rebellious heart, leaned back in her easy-chair, and closed her eyes wearily.

"Very tired, dearie? Hadn't you better lie down now?" It was her mother's voice, tender and anxious, and Stella answered, as brightly as possible:

"Not very, and not just yet. I wish I could help you with that mending," she went on. "Leave some of it till to-morrow and let me try. I need something to do, and you're so tired."

"Nonsense! you can't use your arms, child. I'll get along. The doctor says you mustn't sew, and darning's just as bad."

Stella turned her head away impatiently. "The same old story," she was thinking. She did most of her complaining in that way. "Nothing that I can do, on account of this stupid lung-trouble. Imprisonment, without hard labour, that's the worst of it. Does pneumonia always leave one such a wreck for a while, and how do folks endure it? So much that needs doing, too. See this room now. Sue doesn't care, she takes the parlour, Dora's too young to mind, and mother's too busy. I don't wonder Fred doesn't stay in two evenings a week—such a doleful place and set! And even Joe doesn't find it over-attractive," and she noted, disapprovingly, the dust on mantel, and bracket, and pictures, and showing white between the rows of books on their shelves; the tidies rumpled and hanging by a corner; the plants, parched and dusty; the canary's ill-kept cage; and the smoking lamp, with murky globe and slanting wick, besides which her father was nodding over his paper. Once more she leaned back among the cushions and tried to rest; recalling, as had become her habit in illness, bits of music and tender verse, bright thoughts and quaint or forceful sayings, to dispel the weariness, bring forgetfulness of the pain, and exorcise the discontent.

As she mused, there came with other remembered words, two or three she had noticed in her Testament that very day—"The prisoner of the Lord"—"a prisoner of Jesus Christ." If one could only say that! If one could only believe that of herself! Nothing could seem very hard after that. Pain and idleness, too, could be born bravely and thankfully, if one were such a prisoner, or could be. And why not? Why should it not be true of her in her humble place? She was Christ's disciple to begin with. That had been settled long ago. This that she had to bear was not of her choosing, but it must have been God's choice for her. He had helped and comforted her in the sharper trial of pain and utter weakness even with his own presence and love. She had been his prisoner then; why not now? The weary waiting time before her took on new meaning, and revealed new possibilities. Just what it might hold or mean to her she could not tell yet. She would learn, and earnestly. So it was a peaceful as well as a prayerful heart that she carried to her pillow, and a bright face that she brought into the family circle next day.

"She looks better," said Sue.

"Almost well," said Dora.

"But she'd better be careful just the same," added the elder sister.

Stella sat resting by the fire after breakfast, thinking again of the phrases remembered the night before. By and by she got her Bible and looked them out.

"I wonder what Paul did besides write epistles to the churches?" she thought. "Doesn't it tell somewhere? In the last of the Acts? I'll find it. Oh—'and received all that came in unto him, preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ.' Well, I can't do any such thing as that; I can't preach or teach, or anything. And nobody is likely to 'come in unto' me for anything. And I can't even study, with these troublesome eyes. But come to think of it, I suppose Paul was only going on with his work as well as he could under the circumstances. And it's been proved that he did it very well, too. Well, now, maybe I can be doing some of mine even here and now."

Two hours later her mother, returning from an errand, found her cosy sitting-room very brightly clean, all its furnishings seemingly made over new, and most daintily arranged. Such a fresh, home-like air it had not worn for weeks.

"Stella, I am astonished! You know the doctor forbade dusting."

"Not with a damp duster—I had no gloves—that wouldn't let a particle fly."

"And you've been sewing—tidies and lambrequins and——"

"No, mother, only pinning them on. Now, I can rest a little; before I couldn't, partly because there wasn't anything to rest from, mostly because there wasn't any place to rest in."

"And, best of all," she said to herself, "I've found I can do something. I'll take the dining-room to-morrow," with a vivid recollection of the sundry neglects and omissions in the table service—napkins that should have been relaid, d'oylies and tray-cloth soiled or forgotten, silver that ought to be cleaned, and glass that had not been polished; of salt and sugar shakers half-full or empty, of bread unevenly cut, and a butter-dish really untidy, it was so ill-kept. How much weak hands could do there!

So it very soon came to pass that unaccustomed comfort began to be felt through the home. The rooms were brighter and more inviting, the meals more cheery, the home atmosphere full somehow of sunshiny peace. Mother found her mending sorted, her lists made out, her work-basket in order, and a dozen little household matters attended to before hand. Father's papers were always "where he could lay his hand on them," his slippers and spectacles handy, and a ready assistant with his sometimes tangled accounts; someone to talk with him of church or business interests, or to listen while he told the day's news. And what she was to father and mother, she was, also, as occasion demanded it, to brothers and sisters.

"'Somebody, thy name is Stella,'" exclaimed one of the boys one day, and after that the name clung to her. There was one sure to be at home and disengaged, and with "a heart at leisure from itself, to soothe and sympathise," which is after all the best qualification any one who aspires to be a friend or helper can have.

She found that the easily-tired eyes weren't so great a hindrance as she had feared they would be. To be sure, she could read very few books, and none at all in the evening; but that made her only drop "pastime" stories, take time when freshest, in the morning, usually, for her leisurely chapter, made her skip and choose in magazine or paper, and read all the more attentively what she did have eyes for; and brought about on the part of the others the habit of reading aloud. Begun for her sake, the reading club became ere long a family institution. And aching chest and nerveless arms, though they forbade fancy-work and any constant effort, permitted all sorts of helpful bits of work.

"She's getting to be the head of the institution," said Joe one day.

"No, the centre, the heart of it," said Sue, with a kiss.

"We never began to be so cosy before," declared Dora.

Nor was the good of it confined to that one household, either. You cannot keep any good thing wholly to yourself. It spreads and shines and scatters in spite of you. More than one friend and neighbour, and some acquaintances merely, far from home, lonely, and in need of sympathy and companionship, found out that the Eveleths' sitting-room was very inviting, and that it had always one occupant who was very sweet and sunshiny, shy, maybe, and not saying much, but it did one good just to sit with her. She had never any unkind or depressing thing to say, and whatever she did do or say was sure to seem just the best and most helpful thing.

"She's a household saint!" "One of the real folks!" "One of the Lord's own helpers." So said her friends, while she, all unconscious, whispered to herself every now and then—

"'A prisoner of the Lord'; a prisoner and a servant! Oh, I will try to be!"—Boston Morning Star.

A GRAND RECORD.

In a pretty church on the island of Aneityum, in the New Hebrides, is a tablet erected by grateful natives to the memory of their missionary, Rev. John Geddie. On this tablet is written in their language the following:—

WHEN HE LANDED
IN 1848
THERE WERE NO CHRISTIANS HERE, AND WHEN HE LEFT
IN 1872
THERE WERE NO HEATHEN.

Perhaps some boy who reads this will think, "That is very nice, but I can't go as a missionary, so I can't do anything like that." No, perhaps you can't go as a missionary to the heathen; but every day you play with boys and girls of your own age; are you helping them to be better or worse? You must do either one or the other. If they are better for being with you, you may not have a tablet which will tell of your work, but it is seen by One who never sleeps, and is written in his book of remembrance.

REV. E. L. HAMILTON, of the North Africa Mission, is about to resume the direction of the Bath Evangelistic Mission (of which he was the founder), the climate of Africa necessitating his return to England.

MR. MOODY'S WORK IN CHICAGO.

VISIT FROM REVS. W. R. MOWLL AND F. E. MARSH.

We have had a delightful and profitable visit from the above beloved brethren. They came to us from Northfield, at Mr. Moody's request, and remained one week. Daily lectures on Christian work and Bible-readings were given to the students in the Bible Institute, and every evening was occupied with evangelistic work in the tents or halls of the Evangelisation Society. God gave his blessing, and all the workers have been instructed and cheered by the addresses of our English brethren, and they have had souls for their hire in our city. While they were in Chicago, was used upon the Lake front, opposite a park (once opened for Gospel meetings, but closed since the Anarchist disturbance) near the centre of the city. Both the evangelists made capital addresses at the launching of this enterprise. Since their departure, hundreds of people have assembled nightly by the shore of the lake to hear the word preached, and many awakened souls have been dealt with. During the day, the barge is used as a free reading-room, and scores resort to it to be sheltered under its awning, and to be refreshed by the cool breezes from the lake.

A GOSPEL BARGE

Workers are present from Mr. Moody's Training School to converse with and present Christ in personal conversation to those who are thus made approachable. Much good fruit has resulted from this as well as from the meetings which are held each evening, and where many are professing Christ.

Our brethren were much pleased with Mr. Moody's plan of combining the training of workers with the doing of the work. They visited and gave valuable assistance at the tents, that are pitched in of the city, and made centres of evangelisation; and were also with the bands engaged in open-air work. The world-wide nature of Mr. Moody's work in Chicago is seen by all who visit us. Students are here from every part of Great Britain, from Sweden, and from Germany. They are doing work in the city in what are known as "the German Quarter," "the Scandinavian Quarter," "the Bohemian Quarter," "the Polish Quarter," "the French Quarter," "the Italian Quarter," and "the Jews' Quarter." Tracts in all these languages are distributed and house-to-house visitations made to invite people to the tents, and also to make permanent acquaintance with the people by the women workers.

The young men and women at the Training School number about one hundred during our present hot July and August, and will be twice or three times that number in September. There are perhaps a dozen or more that are PREPARING FOR THE FOREIGN FIELD.

Many friends in Great Britain have aided liberally in the starting of this valuable work, feeling that it was for the whole world, and it certainly is proving to be so.

The census of this year has astonished even the large-talking Chicagoans themselves by its showing twelve hundred thousand people as being in the city on June 1, 1890, as against a little more than five hundred thousand in 1880. Thousands of these people are from England, Scotland, and Ireland, so that Mr. Moody, through his various agencies in the city of Chicago, is reaching more of the young men of England than many of the workers in England itself. His name draws them to his Chicago Avenue Church, and to the tents, barge, or mission halls worked by his assistants. Probably, five thousand people listen to the Gospel each Sunday in various places worked under Mr. Moody.

It would be safe to say one fourth of the inquirers dealt with at these meetings are from homes in Great Britain. The writer was deeply interested this week in the case of an Englishman just from London, a graduate of Oxford, and a pervert during the past winter to Rome. It will take some effort to undo what the Romanising influences at Oxford accomplished with this young man, who was sent there to prepare for the Church of England ministry, but that effort will be earnestly made. So our friends in Great Britain must not be surprised if we draw on them both for men and money in pushing this work of Christ in overtaking the need of the thousands they are sending over to us. The visit of Mr. Mowll and Mr. Marsh has done us good. Let others follow their example and come and see us. Let the Christians of Great Britain pray for us, and let those who know and value dear Mr. Moody stand by him and help him in this great work of the closing years of his remarkable ministry for the whole Church of Christ; and by God's blessing the problem of city evangelisation for America and Great Britain shall find its solution in the success here achieved.

There is not at the present time a more interesting field of labour in the world than the city of Chicago, or one where more earnest effort is needed to reach the masses with the Gospel of Christ. D. W. Whittle.

THE GOSPEL IN CORSICA.

Sir,—Mr. Donald Matheson in a recent issue of your paper, referred to the work which God has done in Corsica, through my friend, Miss Grant-Brown. That work is, I believe, one of the most striking in the history of recent missions. Corsica, as your readers know, is one of the strongholds of the Church of Rome. Mariolatry and idolatry in their grossest forms, constituted the only religion with which the people were familiar. Whatever Rome may say in England, she takes good care to keep the Bible from her devotees, where she can. How can the darkness be other than antagonistic to the light?

For the last two winters, Miss Grant Brown, accompanied by two or three friends, has been led to preach the Gospel in some of the towns and villages of Corsica. When last winter she started I felt that the door had been opened by Him who has the key of David, and I expected great things. The result has been even more blessed than I anticipated. That great numbers attended the continuous preaching of the Gospel from day to day is not surprising. The real cause for rejoicing is that many received the Word unto life eternal. At the present moment there are three mission rooms open daily, where native evangelists themselves the fruit of last winter's work, are preaching Christ. Two are in England, at Harley House, pursuing their studies that they may return in due time to Corsica as ministers of Jesus Christ. In a word God's light has been kindled in the Roman darkness of this island. A church has been planted. That church is now evangelising the island. No society or institution has had anything to do with it. It has been

GOD'S OWN DIRECT WORK.

I have before me copies of letters which have reached Miss Grant-Brown since her return to England. May I give you one or two extracts? The writers, be it remembered, were a few months ago either atheists or students in a priest's seminary. Needless to say, they knew nothing of the Bible. Whatever teaching they have had has been from above.

A—— is a Bachelor of Arts, a lawyer of considerable intellectual power, the story of whose conversion leads us to think that he is called to do much for God in the history of the young Corsican Church. He writes thus (in French, of course):—"We, believing sons of glorious martyrs; we, who are made to thrill and tremble with a holy enthusiasm by the word of God; we eagerly desire to become fishers of men...But, whatever be the future in the place which God's hand shall have assigned us, we long to be wholly inspired by his word, and we will ever keep in view, in our words and actions, the triumph of evangelical truth, the advancement of the Kingdom of God on earth."

B—— says: "I am altogether convinced. The darkness is scattered, and has given place to light. I am Christ's alone, and I will fight for him till my last hour."

C—— gives touchingly the story of his conversion. It is far too long to quote. I will extract the first sentence and the last:—"Till February 13, 1890, I was in deepest darkness ...Now the light shines on my heart. Thank God."

D——, who was training for the priesthood, says, evidently, with overflowing gratitude: "You have opened to me the way to heaven; you have from idolatry; from the way bristling with briars and thorns, in which I walked so many years, not knowing that I was hastening to destruction...What a blessed change has been wrought in me! Since February 15, 1890 (memorable day to me), I am like a man longing after heavenly things, lifting heart and hands to heaven."

But, sir, I must stop. I could multiply such extracts, but I forbear.

May I make three remarks in conclusion.

(1) Dear Miss Grant Brown's message is the old Gospel of ruin, redemption, and regeneration. It is the story of the Cross which is mighty in Corsica. Through it God is bringing sinners to Christ. The work is real, because the Gospel preached is real. God grant that many of them may be led to testify with increasing decision and boldness to salvation through the blood of Christ. Misrepresentation and reproach we shall incur, but what is this if souls are saved?

(2) Let our downhearted Protestant friends take courage. If we are willing to attack Giant Pope with the sword of the Spirit we shall succeed.

The power of Pentecost is with us still. If we do God's work in God's way, we shall see results in plenty. What we long for is the conversion of Protestant and Papists alike. God's grace is omnipotent, praise his Name. He can save the Romanist or the Atheist as He did Saul of Tarsus. Courage! Let us be aggressive in his cause! Nothing can resist Him.

(3) One of the supporters of this work was that prince in Israel whose loss we are now mourning—I mean Mr. R. C. L. Bevan. What he did in helping such Gospel testimony, wherever he heard of it, no one will know till the great day. The Master, however, sees the need, and we lean upon Him to supply it. The sunny fields of Corsica are white to the harvest. Who will help? The night cometh when no man can work. J. Bennett, D.D.

Worthing.

BERLIN CHRISTIAN MISSION.—It gives us great joy to hear of the progress of the good work which Mr. Fritz Schaaff is superintending in the capital of the German Empire. During the first half of the present year over 200 meetings were held, attended by 6240 persons; moreover, the sick were visited, and tracts and cards were distributed. The most cheering fact of all is that God has blessed the efforts put forth, several persons having, by changed lives, testified to real newness of heart and mind. Mr. Schaaff and his wife are devoted labourers for the Lord, and we should be glad to hear of measures for their support in the work. So far, the balance-sheet showing a deficit, they have had to go short of many things; but as they reckoned upon difficulties, they are not discouraged. Mr. Schaaff's address is: 33, Britzer-Strasse, Berlin.

The Late Sir George Burns, Bart.

ONE of the most picturesque features of the lovely Firth of Clyde is the number of bays by which its shore is indented; and of these bays the most striking is that which bears the name of Wemyss. For more than thirty years the venerable man who forms the subject of this sketch was the most interesting presence in Wemyss Bay. Thither he retired when he left the cares of the great shipping firm to his able and energetic son, and, in the place which there he made his own, he chiefly resided. A spacious house, with velvety lawn, and varied flower beds, and wooded terraces—it was almost the ideal of a gentleman's home. And it was one peculiarly appropriate to a merchant who had done so much to develop the Firth as a sea-way of commerce. In the long evenings of early summer, he could distinguish the vessels of his fleets, as they bore their passengers and their cargoes to Liverpool and Belfast. And the succession of both steam and sailing ships, whose funnels or whose masts he could see on the other side of his laurel hedges, were a perpetual reminder of the busy world in which, though apart from its doing and driving, he was ever interested. Sometimes, from the deck of the steamer, a glimpse could be obtained of the Christian sage sitting, with uncovered head—for he often refused hat and cap—his abundant white hair waving, as the soft western breeze played over it.

And good it was to have the privilege of a talk with the old man as thus he sat in warm but shady nook, and with volume of some sort in hand. He had a wonderfully active mind. To the very end his eye was not dim; he never needed spectacles. To the very end his mental force was but little abated. His memory was most retentive, and he was continually adding to its stores. He was in touch with the scientific developments of the day. He was well acquainted with that which was best in its literature. Of mere party politics he took little account; but politics, in the higher meaning of the term, were a constant study to him. Historical and antiquarian research was most congenial to him. One of the subjects which occupied him in later years was the Empire of the Hittites. Add to all this, a keen sense of humour, a great fund of anecdote, and a genuine delight to converse with friends, and there will be no difficulty in conceiving that to be beside him and enjoy his society was a pleasure never to be forgotten. It was a pleasure and a profit as well. For none could pass any time with him without feeling that his life had a centre, which kept all topics in subordination to one ever dominating interest. To him to live was Christ. Never was faith simpler, fuller, more beautiful than was the faith of Sir George Burns. His speech, his action, proved that in his deepest soul he said, as said another, "I have a passion, and it is He only."

He was born on December 10, 1795, in one of two tenements popularly known as "the Holy Land," because in them four clergymen, besides his father, lived. His father was a man greatly beloved. For the long period of seventy-two years he served in the Church of Scotland as the minister of one of the two great parishes of Glasgow. Before the Reformation, the Archbishop held, as one of his many baronies, the barony of Glasgow. After the Reformation, when the city increased, the parishioners of Glasgow outside the city, tradesmen and tenants of the old barony, were ordered to worship in the Laigh Kirk of the cathedral, in other words, in the crypt, and a pastor was appointed over them. Thus was originated the second or landward parish, in which there has been a succession of godly and distinguished incumbents. One was the famous Zachary Boyd, who railed at Cromwell from the High Church pulpit, and whose "Last Battel of the Soul" and other works are still an evidence of both his erudition and his piety. Another was Donald Cargill, who, with Cameron, founded the party in the church known as Cameronians, and who was beheaded.

Dr. Burns, the father of Sir George, was a singularly faithful, devoted, and amiable minister of Christ. In his subterranean church, most graphically described in "Rob Roy," he preached with great fervour the pure Gospel of Jesus Christ. Every Sunday evening the good man went to a part of his wide parish and taught a school. He taught the children to read, that he might instruct them in the Scriptures. His school was one of the first Sunday-schools, if not the first, in Scotland, or perhaps in the British Empire. A good man and full of the Holy Ghost, his memory is still cherished in Glasgow. Old persons still alive remember when he was led into the church on Holy Communion Sunday, and, unable to do more, was placed at the head of the communion table that he might bless his people.

The crypt of the cathedral ceased to be the parish church in the year 1800. Another church, very ugly, was built by the heritors, and in it, for thirty-nine years, the good pastor preached and prayed. That second church has also been removed; and a stately Gothic edifice has been substituted for it. On the laying of the memorial stone of the third building, in 1887, Sir George, then ninety-two, delivered a speech, in a voice whose ringing tones were heard afar, and whose reminiscences, pathos, and eloquence touched all hearts. In listening felt that he was almost the last surviving link to him, one connecting with generations and conditions of life which belong to what seems now a far past.

Old Dr. Burns had nine children, of whom four died in childhood. The eldest became a Professor in the University, and was distinguished as a man of great learning, professional eminence, and deep piety. The youngest was the late Sir George. When twenty-three years of age he entered into a mercantile partnership with his brother James. Shortly afterwards, in 1824, they organised a small fleet of sailing vessels between Glasgow and Liverpool, and then between Glasgow and Belfast. The small fleet has now expanded into a great system, which, especially as between Ireland and Glasgow, has promoted a most extensive trade.

In 1840, the most marked event of the firm occurred. On July 4 of that year the first steamship having her Majesty's mails left Liverpool for the United States of America. It steamed into Boston, amid the enthusiastic cheers of a vast crowd, on the eighteenth day of that month. The Britannia—for this was the name of the pioneer steamship—capable of accommodating 115 passengers, and making a speed of 8½ knots an hour was then reckoned a wonderful feat. To us it seems a mere dwarf as compared with the Umbrias and Etrurias of our day; but the four paddle-vessels which in 1840 formed the Cunard line, were the sign of a new era, an era whose fullest triumphs have not yet been witnessed. How the famous Cunard line was formed; the visit of Samuel Cunard, of Halifax, to London, then to Glasgow; the introduction of Mr. Cunard by Mr. Napier, of engineering and shipbuilding fame, to George Burns; the perseverance of Mr. Burns, by which he was enabled to raise the £270,000 necessary to float the Company and secure the Government contract for the American mails; the Company composed of the three, Cunard, Burns, MacIver; and that which they did, and the results still ever-growing — these things have been often told, and need not now be more than referred to. The organisation of this line was the beginning of the flood-tide of Mr. Burns's prosperity. He was, thenceforth, one of the modern steamship kings. About thirty years ago he transferred the management of the vast shipping business to his son, in whom he discerned a rare capacity for administration, and between whom and himself there always existed the most beautiful unity of sentiment on all subjects.

In 1877 Sir George was left a widower. His wife, the daughter of the well-known James Cleland, LL.D., was a lady of remarkable gifts of mind and heart. With her husband she was deeply interested in Christian work. Many a good cause received their warm and liberal support. Mrs. Burns was indeed the helpmeet for one such as he. Though reared in the Church of Scotland, the liturgy of the English Church attracted them, and in 1838 they joined the Anglican Communion. But they had no sympathy with sacerdotalism or with any of the exclusive claims often put forth on behalf of Episcopacy. They never conformed to the Scottish type of Episcopacy. Their sympathies were too catholic to be compressed into any particular system. They loved all who loved Christ.

Sir George, when a younger man, was an active Christian worker. He was much associated with Dr. Chalmers. It is said that he and another used to meet on Saturday night in Dr. Chalmers' house, and unite in prayer. He was familiar with Dr. Guthrie, with Dr. Norman Macleod, and with other Scottish divines. In later years the circle of his friendship widened. Lord Chancellor Napier (of Ireland) was an intimate friend. Between the late Lord Shaftesbury and himself there existed an attachment which intensified as the years passed. For fourteen years Lord Shaftesbury spent a considerable portion of each summer, either with Sir George, or at Castle Wemyss, the residence of his son. And many were the long talks of the Earl with the old gentleman whom he playfully called "Father Abraham." Men good and great sought him out; and, in the love of Christ, they and he were quickly united.

The Baronetcy was conferred on him when in his ninety-fourth year. "To him," as was truly remarked in a sermon preached in the Barony Church, "the mere title was of little account; the value of the distinction was that it was the expression of his Sovereign's favour in acknowledgment of all that God's grace had exalted him to be and to do." His eye was fixed on "the glory that excelleth." The King and the kingdom were his prospect and his goal.

He was emphatically a man of prayer. He had learned to realise the word, "Pray without ceasing." Prayer was more than an occasional exercise; it was an ensphering element. He remembered persons by name in his own prayers; sometimes in family prayer. Every day he besought God on behalf of the Jews. He was an example of what in Scottish phrase is called "the aefauld man." Those who know him needed no commentary on the Beatitude, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

The loving old man leaves a blank which can never be filled. He was so beautiful, so gentle, so good. The writer of this sketch saw him shortly before the end. As he looked on the face, thin and wan, but retaining all the old grace of outline, and heard the simple words in which the dying saint expressed his longing to see Him whom, though absent, he loved, the thought suggested was Simeon, and Simeon's song, "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace." In peace he departed: "Home, home, home" were among the last articulate utterances.

Many mourners assembled in the chapel at Wemyss, which he had reared in memory of his wife. His two sons, the present baronet, and Mr. J. Cleland Burns, with their children and other relatives and intimate friends followed the remains into the vault at the rear of the chapel—"a sepulchre hewn out of the rock"; and, when all that was mortal was consigned to its care, those who filled the chapel knew that he was not there, that he had risen. They could hear "a voice from heaven, saying," unto them concerning him, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth."

HE CARETH FOR THEE.

"Casting all your care upon Him, for He careth for you."—1 Pet. v. 7.

What can it mean? Is it aught to Him
That the nights are long and the days are dim?
Can He be touched by the griefs I bear,
Which sadden the heart and whiten the hair?
Around his throne are eternal calms,
And strong, glad music of happy psalms,
And bliss unruffled by any strife.
How can He care for my poor life?

And yet I want Him to care for me,
While I live in this world where the sorrows be
When the lights die down on the path I take;
When strength is feeble, and friends forsake;
When love and music, that once did bless,
Have left me to silence and loneliness;
And life-song changes to sobbing prayers—
Then my heart cries out for a God who cares.

When shadows hang o'er me the whole day long;
And my spirit is bowed with shame and wrong:
When I am not good, and the deeper shade
Of conscious sin makes my heart afraid;
And the busy world has too much to do
To stay in its course to help me through,
And I long for a Saviour—can it be
That the God of the Universe cares for me?

Oh, wonderful story of deathless love!
Each child is dear to that heart above;
He fights for me when I cannot fight;
He comforts me in the gloom of night;
He lifts the burden, for He is strong;
He stills the sigh, and awakens the song;
The sorrow that bowed me down He bears,
And loves and pardons, because He cares.

Let all who are sad take heart again.
We are not alone in our hours of pain;
Our Father stoops from his throne above
To soothe and quiet us with his love.
He leaves us not when the storm is high,
And we have safety, for He is nigh.
Can it be trouble which He doth share?
Oh, rest in peace, for the Lord does care.

MR. W. H. RAYBOURNE at KESWICK.

The last Sunday evening of the Convention was also the last evening of "Rev. W. H. Raybourne's" mission at Keswick. He was assisted by Rev. W. Obershan, who acted as the leader in his glorification. This gentleman stated that he was wholly sanctified some years since in America. At that time he went to hear the greatest preachers, but as he was far in advance of them all, he could get no good, and he could not find the right Gospel till "the man of God came."

On Sunday evening Mr. Raybourne sat alone on the platform. After having made some rambling remarks upon Acts xvii., he said that all Christians were the worshippers of "The Unknown God," and clearly implied that his mission was to reveal this unknown God to Christians now. Not a word of Gospel truth was spoken. The preacher glorified himself and condemned all others. When he had finished, he called for testimonies.

The following are some of these "testimonies":

One said: "The test of true religion in these days is love to Mr. Raybourne. The greatest sinner who loves Mr. Raybourne is a saint." He added, "I love Mr. Raybourne as I love God, and I love God as I love Mr. Raybourne." He went on to speak of "them two."

A lady said: "I came to Keswick dark and miserable, and could find no light till I came to the 'man of God.'"

A young man declared that he could find no religion till "the man of God saved him."

A man said: "When I doubt the man of God, the prophet, the inspired man, I find myself growing old. My skin becomes hard, and the marks of age are seen upon my face; but when I trust the man of God, tell him my state, and follow his teaching, my flesh comes as the flesh of a little child."

Ladies one after the other rose and praised "the man of God," going from their places to shake his hand.

No words can describe this awful meeting.

Mr. Raybourne received all this and much more with smiles. We need to watch and pray.

The Gift of the Spirit.

BIBLE-READING AT KESWICK CONVENTION,

By Rev. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE.*

"Wherefore be ye not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is. And be not drunk with wine wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit"—or as the Greek has it—"in Spirit" (Eph. v. 17, 18).

As the declarations or revelations of God concerning salvation have to be accepted with implicit faith, when they tell us of a salvation infinitely beyond anything we could possibly have expected or hoped for; so the commands of God are to be received with implicit faith when they bid us do things that go far beyond anything we could expect to see carried out in ourselves. True faith bows before the Word of God; for that word can only convey Divine facts or principles concerning the salvation accomplished for us. We do wisely to lay our heads in the dust; or we may be tempted to say that the thing revealed is impossible for us, because it is beyond what we could have expected to be true. When, therefore, God lays upon us a command, we should say at once, "It must be true and possible"; though by nature we may be inclined to think, "It is impossible; and could never be carried out in such a creature as I am."

Exactly as we Christian workers go to a poor helpless soul, and say: "This is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and that life is in his Son.... He that believeth not God hath made Him a liar;" so every one of us, when we come to a command that has relation to our progress in spiritual life, ought to remember that the record is the word that God hath spoken, addressed to ourselves; that it is for us to accept it as his own commands individually; that it must be possible for God to carry out in the creature; and that by disbelief we make God a liar. To the child of God, yearning for holiness, there is in approaching a command that seems to be naturally impossible; because he realises that the Lord gave the word, and that it is for the Lord to carry it out—to make possible of fulfilment in his child that which He commands. For surely we can say with Augustine, "Give what Thou commandest, and then command what Thou wilt." Yea, let God command what He will; it must be carried out; only on one condition—that we be "willing in the day of his power."

As we approach this intensely solemn command: "Be filled with the Spirit," there is not one of us who would not feel it to be almost blasphemous for such words to be expressed by mortal man, were it not that they came by inspiration of the Holy Ghost; and that the man who wrote them was empowered by the Spirit to hand such words down to the whole Church of God. Therefore it cannot be an impossibility; or God would never have uttered the commandment. It lies upon the creature to see that, according to God's plan of fulfilment, it shall be carried out in him; and that he shall not thwart or hinder the will of God by unbelief, or by any continuance in that which is evil.

IT IS AN EXCEEDINGLY SOLEMN THING

to take up such a command, and to believe that what hitherto seemed so absolutely beyond our reach is intended by God for us all; for while we hear again and again of aspirations after the blessings that would come from being filled with the Spirit, very few of God's children seem to believe that the fault is in themselves if it is not realised; or that the hindrance cannot lie with God, but must lie with us if his will is not completely carried out. With regard to all such commands, the full and final accomplishment of them must wait for the day when our bodies shall be fashioned like the body of the glory of the Lord Jesus Christ; because our body, being still subject to corruption, cannot receive into the corrupt parts thereof that Spirit of God which is everlasting life, and which knows no taint or touch of corruption.

The question for us is this: How near to the accomplishment of God's will is it possible for the believer to come in the life that now is, while waiting for the full and absolute perfection of accomplishment at the day of the Lord's appearing? The great grief and shame that lie upon the Church is this: that as a whole she is willing to lie down and remain so far away from God's holy purpose. For instance, Christ says, "Be ye perfect," or, "Ye shall be perfect, as your Father in heaven is perfect;" and we know how the majority of Christians say that because there is no perfection to be had in this world, therefore they will not even make an essay to see how near they can reach perfection in this life. And because dogmatic theology says that the Holy Ghost cannot pervade that which is corrupt, therefore the majority seem to think they may be content to live a life which is very, very far below that spiritual life that we see traced in God's Holy Word.

These gatherings are for inquiring how near to this glorious conformity to the Lord Jesus Christ we may attain by simple submission, by simple acceptance, by simple gratitude towards God; and how near we may be in this world of sin to knowing even as we are known by the Lord Jesus Christ. Therefore as we approach the solemn subject, my first charge is this: Hinder not the will of God by a spirit of unbelief; by limiting the Holy One of Israel, because you reject his holy counsel and purpose for you.

TRAIN YOUR SOULS

in a spirit of receptivity, and by the exercise of faith, to take all that God Himself can give. Be determined, that before you leave this Convention, "your whole spirit, soul, and body"—whatever department of your being you can deal with—shall have been placed submissively at the disposal of God, to know, to receive, and to enjoy, everything that God can possibly give you, while you are, alas, in the body of corruption.

I am conscious that there are many differences of opinion as to how far we can be filled with the Spirit; as to the means by which this fulness is to be secured; as to what will be the signs of being filled; and what are the hindrances in ourselves, to our yielding ample and implicit obedience to the commandment of the Lord. I shall therefore divide my subject into three special branches, which I would entitle:—

I. The Universal Endowment of the Holy Ghost which God has bestowed upon the Church and the world.

II. The Individual Endowment with God the Holy Ghost, which takes place with regard to every soul when it is brought into the knowledge of its acceptance in Christ Jesus, and is made alive unto God through Him.

III. The Personal Enjoyment which may be known by the saint as he progresses, or accepts continually more and more of the gift that God has bestowed upon him.

I do not think that we ought to feel that we are controverting, or hurting one another's feelings, because terms are used that slightly differ from those which our brethren might employ. We are engaged this morning in a Bible-reading, and I desire to set forth exactly what God's Word says.

UNIVERSAL ENDOWMENT.

Look, first, at the universal endowment of God the Holy Ghost as a gift. I ask you to believe this, that God's Word makes it clear that there has been bestowed once for all the gift by God of The Holy Ghost as a Person; and that it would be just as inconceivable, I think I may say, that we should ask that God should send his Son again to be born in the flesh, and to pass through the great work of our redemption once more, or again and again, as it is for us (reasonably and theologically and Biblically) to ask God to give again the gift of The Holy Ghost, which He has once for all bestowed. But this will not prevent a constant repetition of earnest prayer for the experience described in Luke xi. 13: "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children: how much more shall your heavenly Father give Holy Spirit to them that ask Him!" There is no article "the" in that passage; the word is partitive, not personal; it is "Holy Spirit." There is no question that none of us have realised the fulness of the possibilities that might be expected concerning the gift or powers, or qualities of this "Holy Ghost"; and that the very holiest will always be conscious of needing more. It is one thing for me to ask God to give me more of the Spirit—and here I am at one with my brethren—in my own personal enjoyment; it is another thing to ask God to give his own perfect gift again from heaven, as though He never had bestowed it; and to throw the blame upon God which should lie upon myself. It is one thing to recognise that I have failed to take and to use what my Father has bestowed; it is another thing to charge my Father with not having bestowed what He says He has given.

Therefore, I approach the Word with an attempt to discover whether God has given "the gift of The Holy Ghost." I humbly say that The Holy Ghost is already given

AS THE UNIVERSAL INCOME OF THE CHURCH.

You will remember that He is called "the earnest of our inheritance." We shall know the full extent of our inheritance when we see Jesus as He is. But meanwhile the Holy Ghost is described as "the earnest"; because a man may possess a splendid income and yet may never have seen his magnificent property. What we enjoy of our income is the measure of holiness which we really possess, or exhibit, in this life. Holiness is, so to speak, the expenditure of income received through God's gift of the Holy Spirit. Hereafter the inheritance will be ours in its fulness; then we shall know as we are known.

But in order to show that there has been an actual bestowment, once for all, of the Person of God "The Holy Ghost," as distinguished from his qualities, let us turn to God's Word, and judge ye what is said! Look first into the Old Testament scriptures, and see the nature of the promise concerning the Spirit. The Lord Jesus bids his disciples look for the Holy Ghost as "the promise of the Father." What is the nature of that promise?

First of all there is the thought in Psalm lxviii. 18, where we read that the Lord Jesus Christ "led captivity captive, ascending on high (as the Psalm says) to receive gifts for men." If we turn to Paul's declaration of the fulfilment in Ephesians iv. 8, we find he changes the words very purposely and determinedly. "He led captivity captive and gave gifts unto men." In the former case it was "received gifts for men;" in the second case, after Pentecost, He "has given gifts to men." Therefore, clearly, that promise, or prophecy, has been fulfilled. With regard to which distinctively mark God's intention to give the Holy Ghost, we turn next to Isaiah xliv. 3: "I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground; I will pour my Spirit upon thy seed and my blessing upon thine offspring." And again, in Isaiah xxxii. 15, the prophet said that full blessings could not come upon the land "until the Spirit be poured upon us from on high." Look also at Ezekiel xxxvi. 27, and you will find God, by the mouth of the prophet, saying: "I will put my Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments." Go on to Ezek. xxxix. 29, where you find it said—it is a solemn question when this text shall have received its fulfilment—"I have poured out my Spirit upon the house of Israel, saith the Lord God." Turn next to Zechariah xii. 10, and we read: "I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and of supplications; and they shall look upon Me whom they have pierced." I cannot deal fully with these texts, but simply point you to them that you may study them and judge for yourselves to what particular period of history they actually refer.

* Revised by the Author.

But now we come to the great passage in Joel ii. 28, 29, which must always be considered as the first promise for this dispensation: "I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions; and also upon the servants and upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out my Spirit." I have read to you several texts that speak of God's "pouring out" of his Spirit, and this one is the key text to the whole, because in Acts ii. 16 the Apostle Peter makes use of never found anywhere else, as far as I know, in the Bible, with regard to the fulfilment of a prophecy. He says: "This is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel." In every other case in the New Testament you would read, "That it might be fulfilled," (showing that it is an application); or "as the prophet has said," (showing that the writer takes up the prophet's words). But here Peter says: "This is that which was spoken by Joel."

AUTHORITIES CITED.

What did it mean? I have two great authorities — one dead and the other still living—for rendering it exactly as I would render it myself. Dr. Pusey says in his Commentary on the Minor Prophets—and he is no mean authority as a theologian—"Concerning this promise of his Spirit, God says I will pour out, i.e., give largely; as though He would empty out Him who is Infinite, so that there should be no measure of his giving, save our capacity of receiving."

I turn to Rev. H. C. G. Moule's work; and I humbly think most of us believe him to be no mean authority. In his "Outlines of Christian Doctrine" he says:—

"As the Messianic Age approaches, the prophecies indicate a coming universal 'effusion' of the Spirit ('upon all flesh,' Joel ii. 28). The universality seems to refer to an extension to all races and ranks of men. The New Testament (Acts ii. 16-21) finds this fulfilled at Pentecost, when representatives of the race received the Gospel, and the universal believing Church definitely began to be under the power of the Spirit. True, that beginning has a future in which 'all the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the Lord' (Ps. xxii. 27). Limits upon the work of grace at one period are no proof that it will be always limited; but the passages here in question indicate not so much a work in every individual, certainly not an 'effusion upon' every individual, as a world-wide extension of the Spirit's full action upon individuals, resulting in union with Christ in his Church universal" (p. 127).

Dr. Wordsworth says that the pouring of the Spirit "upon all flesh" received its fulfilment in the person of the Lord Jesus Christ, because the Word was made flesh; and that now this blessing is to be poured through Him upon us; so, as He received the fulness of the Spirit, the fulness of the Spirit was poured down on Him and through Him upon all flesh that would take it.

With these three great authorities before us, we can have no hesitation, I think, in understanding that the term "upon all flesh" does not mean upon each individual man, but is to be taken generically, and that the coming down or descent of the Holy Ghost was to be

ON HUMAN FLESH AS A WHOLE.

The promise being of this character, has it ever received any distinct fulfilment? You remember the Lord Jesus Christ, before He passed away, spoke in John xiv. of sending a Person, "Whom my Father will send in my name" (ver. 26); and "Whom I will send" (xv. 26). In Acts ii., where we find the declaration that the prophecy has been fulfilled, we read (ver. 17) that the Apostle, quoting the prophecy, says: "It shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit on all flesh." In ver. 33 of the chapter he uses the same word in the Greek: "Being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, He hath shed forth this which ye now see and hear." So that, according to these prophecies, according to the promise of the Lord Jesus, and according to the declaration of Peter, we should say that there has been once for all an historical fulfilment in the advent of the Holy Ghost as a Person, exactly as there was in the advent of the Word made flesh when Jesus Christ came down from heaven to earth. Such an advent we all would acknowledge to have taken place on that solemn day of Pentecost which Peter speaks of. Can He be said to be always "descending," or always being "poured out," as on Pentecost day?

Now, when the Holy Ghost came as a person, you will observe that there are special terms made use of concerning his advent. When the Lord Jesus Christ came, John the Baptist spoke of Him as one who should do all his work in the power of the Holy Ghost; and in connection with our Lord's baptism we learn some remarkable facts. In Matt. iii. 16 we read that as Jesus Christ came out of the water, "the heavens were opened, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove AND lighting upon Him." Mark these two terms. First there is the universal endowment of Christ as the Second Adam by the descent of the Holy Ghost from heaven at his baptism. Then there is the individual enduement of the Master as "the Son of Man" by the lighting upon (or coming upon) Him of the Holy Ghost, so that the Spirit claimed Him for his own (see the same thoughts expressed in St. John i. 33). Thus we have an historical fulfilment in Christ at his baptism, when the Holy Ghost descended AND lighted upon Him; and then the historical fulfilment for the Church on the day of Pentecost, with its glorious results.

In the fulfilment of the prophecy that the Spirit should be poured upon all flesh there would appear to be or manifestations of the fact of the descent having taken place, by the use of the term "falling upon," which only occurs three times in the Acts of the Apostles. It is partitive in the sense that it comes upon three generic classes of men; but absolute in the sense that these three classes, generically, embrace all flesh. From Acts ii. we know how the Holy Ghost descended upon those who were called saints in Jerusalem, but in Acts ii. we do not have the use of this term. In chap. xi. 15 we find the Apostle saying concerning the Gentiles: The Holy Ghost fell on them as on us at the beginning." There then is the historical declaration of The Holy Ghost having descended as a Person at Pentecost; and thus He "fell upon" the Israelites: for they were all Israelites who then knew the Lord, and were waiting for the fulfilment of the promise.

The next instance in the Acts is where the Spirit fell on the Samaritans, who were, as I think we would acknowledge, a half-breed race, a mixture of Israel with the Gentiles, as we know from 2 Kings xvii. In Acts viii. we are told that Peter and John went down to Samaria: "Who, when they were come down, prayed for them that they might receive the Holy Ghost (for as yet He was fallen upon none of them). Then they laid their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost." He had fallen upon Israel, and now He fell on the Samaritans. In Acts x. 44 we have the record of his falling on the Gentiles, as already mentioned: "The Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word" i.e., the centurion and his household.

So you have these remarkable facts. First the Holy Ghost descended upon the Lord Jesus as representative Man. Then Christ went back to heaven, and, at Pentecost the Holy Ghost descended as a Person, and became the absolute gift of God to men. There is a generic fulfilment of God's promise upon the Israelite, the half-breed, and the pure Gentile. Thus all mankind are included, and you find the Holy Ghost "poured out," and "descended" or "fallen upon" all flesh according to the promises contained in the Old Testament prophecy. This, as I understand it, is the historical fulfilment of God's blessed intention of Love and Grace, and is what I call "The universal endowment, or gift to man, of God the Holy Ghost."

INDIVIDUAL ENDUEMENT.

I consider, next, the individual enduement, which is a totally distinct thing. The first fact is one in which man is in no wise concerned. God acts alone; man has no part in it whatever. In this second stage there is partly the work of God and partly the work of man; a mixture of the objective and the subjective. And as I look for this individual enduement, what do I find? That when a man—any man, no matter who—is dealt with by God, the Spirit comes to work in him a process of conviction of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment. The very moment the man receives the blessed truth that God was in Christ saving him, he receives regeneration. He is a saved soul, and is given a new life. At that moment there is now in him, first the old natural life which remains with us to the end of our existence, and secondly, the new Spirit life which God the Holy Ghost has bestowed. What has he now received? Just this gift of God, which was the blessed gift of the Holy Ghost, and in Him the life of the Lord Jesus Christ. The very moment he takes these, everyone would acknowledge that he is endued with the Holy Spirit. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his." Therefore all the Church are at one upon the simple fact that when we believe we are partakers of the Holy Ghost. What some of us do not agree upon is as to that we now possess, or as to the extent that we ought to enjoy God's absolute gift. But we all allow that we have received the Holy Ghost; and that at the very moment when we realise what Christ has done, the life of the Spirit is put into us.

But what has really happened to such a man? As Paul says, in Gal. iv. 6, "God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts crying, 'Abba, Father.'" "The babe's cry and the man's cry put together," as one old writer expresses it. Again, as Paul puts it, in 2 Tim. i. 7: "God hath given to us the spirit of power, of love, and of a sound mind." We have, moreover, as he says in Rom. viii. 15, "not received the spirit of bondage, but we HAVE RECEIVED the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry Abba, Father." As Christians we are not "waiting for the promise"; but we have received the blessed Spirit of liberty and of power. It is ours as a gift from God, and the individual enduement has taken place, for the Holy Spirit has come upon us, at the very moment of our new birth.

Mark, once again, how it was with the Lord Jesus Christ. In Matt. iii. 16 we are told that the Holy Ghost descended and came upon Him. Then He says to his disciples (Acts i. 8) "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." Again in Acts xix. 6 we read, concerning the disciples at Ephesus: "When Paul laid his hands on them the Holy Ghost came upon them." This word "came upon" is a totally different word from that which is translated "descended." Christ received the Holy Ghost after He had descended. The Spirit descended and then came upon Him. So as God has given the gift of the Holy Ghost as a Person, there comes the partitive distribution on each individual soul who is made alive unto God. Each true believer has the Holy Ghost as his wn spiritual income; but alas! he knows but ittle of Him yet.

I have been through my Bible, and I believe hat I have marked every single text where the Spirit is mentioned, and I find (though there re some writers who differ from me) that wherever the Person of The Holy Ghost is mentioned you always have the article "the." Wherever the qualities or gifts of the Spirit—that is, where any special gifts from the Spirit) re put before us, the Name is without the rticle. You will never find any single man, not even the Lord Jesus Christ, who is described s being (I do not say that the Lord Jesus was not; I only say that we do not read of Him being), as a man,

FULL OF THE PERSON OF THE HOLY GHOST, where the article is used, which denotes the Person, and not quality.

In Luke iv. 1 you will see this distinction remarkably preserved: "Jesus being full of (the) Holy Ghost, returned from Jordan, and was led by the Spirit." In the first part of the sentence there is no article; it is his subjective experience. In the second clause it is an objective fact, an historical truth—the Holy Ghost led Him into the wilderness. Of course I do not here touch upon our Lord's Divinity, I am simply speaking of Him in his humanity and as the Word of God does.

When we are born into the kingdom of God, He gives to each the Holy Ghost, but we cannot take Him in; He is far beyond our capacity. Therefore, all that we enjoy is "Holy Ghost;" but that does not prove that we have not received, as a gift from God, our whole income. It is ours, but we are not "of full age," or sufficiently "perfect" (Heb. v. 4), to be able to spend our inheritance.

Take a minor, and put him under the Court of Chancery, and the Vice-Chancellor gives him an allowance out of his income till he is capable of spending the whole. God allows us to take and use what we can use properly, but we are such babes that we do not know how to use the income that He waits to give. The moment we are of age He will allow us to take all our possession. So there comes the question—How much can we enjoy or spend of our income on earth? And certainly there is room here for much self-reproach and for wider and nobler aspirations for the future.

Having seen that the individual enduement takes place at the new birth, we come now to consider the third part of the subject. There is a most solemn distinction between the actual endowment, or the enduement, by God, with the gift of the Holy Spirit and man's of the gift from the moment that he has received it. We should, perhaps, best explain what it is to be "filled with the Spirit" if we ask ourselves what this Holy Ghost is meant to be to those who receive Him at all from God? I may not stay to speak much of his absolute personality as God. He is described as "the Spirit of the Father"; "the Spirit of God"; "the Spirit of the Son"; "the Spirit of Christ." But when we speak of his qualities, we find He is described in different ways—"the Spirit of power, of love, and of a sound mind," "the Spirit of wisdom," and so on. In Isaiah xi. 2, 3, the Lord Jesus Christ is spoken of as having a seven-fold power of the Spirit upon Him; and that He was to Christ as man, I humbly believe he is meant to be to us; that is to say, we ought to know Him and use Him, as the Lord Jesus had, up to the measure of the possibility in which faith can enable us to appropriate and to enjoy our glorious possession.

LOOK AT THE FIGURES

that God uses in speaking of the Spirit. There are no less than seven of these by which the Holy Ghost is described at different times. First He is compared to water. At the very outset of our spiritual career, we are buried by baptism into death; even as when mankind were buried by water under the flood. But as God put Noah and his family into the ark, which is a type of the Lord Jesus Christ, so we are not only buried in, but "saved by water" when "by one Spirit [Greek: "in one Spirit"] we are all baptized into one body." Again, He is water, that He may be to us as a refreshing draught to cheer us in the struggle and toil of daily life. He is spoken of also as fire to burn and destroy whatever is evil in us; also to illuminate, invigorate, and warm. He is oil, to soothe and comfort and to give us peace. He is wind, to permeate every part of our being by the searching and cleansing power of God. Then we come to a solemn thought. He is a seal, stamping us with the very image of God, and setting Christ's mark upon us as He claims us for his own; for "we, beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory even as by the Spirit of the Lord." Again, He is "wine that maketh glad the heart of man." And at last you read of Him as the dove; but that apparently is not for us. It is a remarkable fact that nearly all the others are qualitative or partitive—what we call elements. But as the dove He came upon Christ alone as a living manifestation and embodiment of the Spirit in his work—He being the true representative Man, to whom for us the Spirit was given without measure (John iii. 34).

But now we, as men, are called to be filled; and, in order that we may be so filled, the question arises, What does it mean in this special passage? There are two words used with regard to "filling." One is πλήρης the adjective, and the verb akin to it, πληρόω, which expresses the normal or constant condition. But there is another word, πλησθεὶς, which signifies an abnormal or special condition, and which is also frequently found in the Acts of the Apostles. The distinctive use of these several words should be most carefully noted in all the passages where they occur. I humbly think that it is the idea conveyed by this latter word which some men are thinking of when they speak so much about the "baptism of the Spirit"; little recognising that that expression is as it never occurs once in the whole Bible. There are five passages that speak of Christ doing his great work of baptism with regard to the Spirit. The first is Matt. iii. 11, where John the Baptist in preaching uses the words: "He shall baptize you in"—not with—"Holy Ghost." Then in Mark i. 8 we have the same word: "Baptize you in Holy Ghost." In Luke iii. 16 there is also the same expression: "In Holy Ghost and in fire." In John i. 33 we read again: "He shall baptize in Holy Ghost." Christ Himself makes the promise once: "Ye shall be baptized in Holy Ghost not many days hence" (Acts i. 5). There are these five promises; but it is only once alluded to as a fact accomplished. This is very remarkable. We find it in Acts xi. 15, 16, where you find the Apostle Peter describing the baptism "in Holy Ghost." In every one of these passages we observe that the word "in" is used, not "with"; but we find the great accomplishment of it declared by Peter to have been at the day of Pentecost, and a fulfilment of it also in the case of the Gentiles, upon whom the Holy Ghost descended. So that, when the Holy Ghost descended upon all flesh, the baptism of human flesh, or the baptism of humanity generically, took place. And, with regard to the individual, this should take place at his baptism. In his new book, "Veni Creator" (which I commend to your study), Mr. Moule says: "Baptism is the initial act by which a man is introduced into the Church, and therefore baptism of the Spirit, the same as baptism of water, must be an initial act. At the very time the man commences to live, he is baptized in the Holy Ghost." (I quote from memory; but see p. 220 of his book).

I humbly believe—and I pray God to forgive me if I contradict His truth, or pain any brethren who differ from me—in or by the Holy Ghost for any man from the moment he has become a child of God. He simply remains in the element into which he was introduced, and it is his own fault if he be not perpetually drinking-in the Heavenly element which now surrounds him. The Holy Ghost is to the soul what pure air is to the body. "Open thy mouth wide and I will fill it." At the same moment that spiritually he is baptized into the death of Christ he is also quickened in or by the Spirit. That is what Paul says in 1 Cor. xii. 13: "By (or in) one Spirit we are all baptized into one body." He goes on to say: "And have all been made to drink into one Spirit." I seldom find these words spoken of at all. The Revised Version leaves out the word "into," and we read, "have all been made to drink one Spirit." Whose fault is it if, as the beloved of the Bridegroom, we have refused to drink abundantly? (Cant. v. 1). We read of the Israelites in 1 Cor. x. that "they were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea." The cloud is the only figure describing the Holy Ghost that I did not mention among the seven, because it is more of a type than a figure, and because I waited for this opportunity to say what the cloud means. It is the abiding presence of God. And all Israel, whether spiritual or carnal, were baptized, because they were Israelites, into the cloud and into the sea. So St. Paul says to the carnal Corinthians: "Ye were all baptized into (or in) one Spirit, and are thus made into one body." Therefore this baptism in the Spirit is true for all believers, however carnal or babe-like they may be.

THERE IS NO AFTER BAPTISM

But now comes the question that troubles so many: "What then are we to look for? Since you say that we cannot again be baptized by the Spirit, or with the Spirit, or even in the Spirit, what is to happen?" I would humbly answer that the only real question now to be answered is, What can we do to be filled with (or in) the Spirit. Mark what St. Paul says to the Corinthians in his first Epistle, iii. 16, "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" Again in chap. vi. 19, "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, which is in you, and which ye have of God; and ye are not your own? Therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are his." Once again in 2 Cor. vi. 16, "God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people." The Apostle states a fact in all these passages—that of the Holy Ghost already, and have the Holy Ghost in us. I need not refer you to such texts as Rom. v. 5, "The love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us"; or 2 Cor. i. 22, where we read that God hath given "the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts"; 2 Cor. v. 5, "Who also hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit," and many other texts, showing that we have received the Holy Ghost, besides having been baptized into one body in one Spirit.

As I said, the question is, "What shall we do to be filled?" Now, what did they do in the days of Hezekiah, when the Temple had been allowed to have all kinds of iniquity and filth brought into it? The priests came and purged out all the filth that they found, and cast it into the brook Kidron. What did they do in Nehemiah's day, when Tobiah had filled God's chambers with household stuff? The prophet cast it all forth out of the Lord's house. What did the Lord Jesus do, when the Temple was filled with money-changers and sellers of merchandise? He made a scourge of small cords and drove them all out.

THAT IS THE FIRST STEP,

and the step which must be taken by us. The moment it is taken I humbly believe that the Holy Ghost will rush into our hearts as air does into a vacuum when opened; or as water into a vessel when placed under a fountain.

But Hezekiah and the others only cast out all that they found; and you can only cast out all the evil that you find. And therefore, say our friends, you must wait in prayer for the gift of the Spirit. I would rather say: Go down on your knees and say like David, "Search me, O God, try my heart, and see if there be any wicked way in me." It is not that God has not given. No, brethren, it is you who have not taken. You have filled the Temple of God with your household stuff, and have put the money-changers and divers kinds of folly into my Father's house; therefore, you are not filled with the Holy Ghost. Let a man, let the church, let this assembly, go down before God and say: "Search me, O God." When He has searched you He will show you things you never knew. You can only get rid of what you find; and God gives no further than man can take. And man can take

ONLY WHAT HE KNOWS.

Let us go to Him and tell Him of all our sin and folly, and of the pride that has prevented us from confessing the evil things which we knew of.

How many have spoken to me within the last few days (not knowing that I was going to give this Bible-reading), and have said: "Tell us about this baptism of the Spirit. What are we to do to be filled with the Spirit?" God has given me this burden here to fulfil, and I pray Him to forgive me if I have failed in my task. We may all rise to the normal condition of the Christian if we are yielded to God; but if He wants some special service from us He will show us that there is something wanting. Then it is that by the confession of our need and by the humble prayer of faith (as in the case of the disciples in Acts iv. 31, when they needed boldness in the hour of trial) we may find ourselves filled (πλησθέντες) in that department of our being in which we lacked the Spirit. This is the only form in which a sudden accession can be known, and it is obtained by discovery and confession of the fact that in that department of our being we have not yielded to God.

Remember, moreover, that there is this difference between the old dispensation and the new. The Old Testament prophets were carried and borne along by the Spirit. That was the special characteristic of Old Testament power, as we find from 2 Pet. i. 21. Because the Spirit was rather acting upon, than in, those whom He used; and some people think that if they had the Spirit they would be driven or carried along like the prophets of old. But He does not deal with men thus to-day. We read in Rom. viii. 14: "As many as are led by the Spirit," and so again in Gal. v. 18. God only leads by his Spirit that dwelleth in us; and He will lead you just so far as you are willing to go. He never drives now. The Gospel is not a driving dispensation; you must be willing to be led.

But what is to be the result of it all? Look first at the negative results of yielding to the Spirit. Look at Gal. v. 16: "Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh." I do not believe that that passage is meant to be done away with by the Christian. Some say that St. Paul was very low down when he wrote that. I have heard it said: "I pity St. Paul when he wrote that; he was in a low, grovelling experience." Nay, brethren, the lust of the flesh

IS IN ALL MEN TO THE LAST.

If a man tells me he is delivered from the flesh, so that it has no longer any existence in his experience, I know that he is contradicting God's Holy Word. The flesh is there, and what is the Christian to do? "Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh." The flesh is lusting against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh, and you are between the two. The question is "To which are you going to yield." Walk in the Spirit, because willingly led of the Spirit; and stay there all the days of your life; if you do, you will never fulfil the lust of the flesh.

And what are to be the positive results? In Gal. v. 22 we have the answer. Do not let us talk of the fruits of the Spirit. It is the fruit of the Spirit—nine grapes in one bunch. It is all of one Spirit who desires to work one and the same blessed fruit in us all. Here are nine beautiful grapes, and they all relate to character, rather than conduct. Perhaps you are longing for splendid conduct: wanting to go and do some great works. God wants you to begin with character. The Holy Ghost works character; then He can fill you for service; and assuredly God wants all to be thus blessedly filled. It is no man's special prerogative, or gift, above his fellows, to be filled in the Spirit. But remember that while the world "resists the Holy Ghost," even a child of God may "grieve" and "quench" Him.

"Fill the water-pots with water, and bear unto the governor of the feast." Such is the command of the Lord Jesus to his servants. God deals with you as "servants" to the end. The servants must fill the water-pots; and by God's grace take out everything that is not the pure water of the Spirit: and when you have borne out to the governor of the feast, he will say: "Every man at the beginning doth set forth good wine, and when men have well drunk then that which is worse; but thou hast kept the good wine until now." The water of God is meant to be poured out of these poor earthen and feeble vessels, (St. John vii. 38), and to be turned to "wine that cheers the heart of man"—even the blessed heavenly wine, not wine of earth. When the Lord sees that the water-pots are filled with water, He will begin to make use of us and to pour out of his riches all over the earth. The command of the Lord to each one of us is this: "Be filled in the Spirit," and then "Yield yourselves as those that are alive unto God!" "Who is on the Lord's side? Who?"

OBITUARY.

MADAME ARMENGAUD.

This lady, née Hinsch, founder of a sect called "Hinschites," has just died at Nimes. Her charitable undertakings included sea baths at Cette and two refuges for young girls.

JOHN HANALOA.

The death is announced, in the leper island of Molokai, of the Hawaiian pastor, John Hanaloa. His wife falling a victim to leprosy in 1877, the pastor exiled himself with her, giving himself with great devotion to the spiritual comfort and enlightenment of the unfortunate inhabitants of Molokai. He did not take the malady himself, but his heroism was none the less worthy of praise, for to the last he continued among the lepers in order that he might tell them of Christ.

SEAMEN'S MISSION SOCIETY.

The work of the Seamen's Mission Society deserves the prayers and gifts of all true Christians in the Church of England. In our great ports, and in many of the great harbours of other lands, notably Hong Kong and Melbourne, with their peculiar and terrible temptations, the devoted men supported by this society are doing a true battle with the right weapons with the powers of evil.

The Rev. R. B. Boyer, of Cambridge, who for years has given his whole life and energy to the work, has quite lately undertaken an extensive new district as superintendent, and entreats material, but yet more spiritual aid. It is sad to know that the war between capital and labour tells heavily on the Society's resources, many great employers declining to subsidize the work to the former extent.

The excellent work of the Deep Sea Mission deserves all praise and support. But it should be known that that Mission is enabled to spend more on the North Sea fishing fleets than the Seamen's Mission 600,000 merchant seamen scattered over the world.

THE GOSPEL IN BASUTOLAND.

Mr. H. M. Dyke, writing from Morija, Basutoland, describes a visit from the High Commissioner. The annual conference was in session at the time, and the occasion was one of great joy to the Christians. Mr. Dyke says: "The Basutos showed their appreciation of being under British protection by assembling in great numbers; upwards of 15,000 horsemen were present at Maseru to salute Sir H. B. Loch. These were reviewed by him, and a couple of days were employed in various games and in feasting. At Morija we assembled a goodly number of our school children, but it was not possible to collect those from a distance; about 1,100 day scholars were drawn up in a line to receive his Excellency.

"Many of the evangelists and teachers were also present, and addresses were delivered. To all of these words of encouragement were spoken by Sir H. Loch, who expressed himself greatly pleased. I trust the visit of the Governor will have a great influence for good upon the tribe. His bearing, so affable and sympathising, gave much confidence to the people, who are ever suspicious lest their liberty should be interfered with, and that the protection of the Queen might one day be withdrawn.

"The reports of our brethren presented to the Conference were on the whole very refreshing. The enemy of souls is, as we have reason to expect, doing all in his power to prevent the establishment of the Saviour's kingdom, but his power is restrained, for the hand of the Lord is with us, and many precious souls are delivered from the thraldom of sin, and brought into the liberty granted by our Saviour. We take fresh courage, therefore, and have abundant reason for joining in songs of praise."

Having referred in kindly terms to the Cape General Mission, Mr. Dyke says: "God be praised for the numerous agencies He has called forth during the last few years to work in South Africa. The great influx of English speculators, diggers, navvies, &c., has much changed the character of the population—unfortunately not by way of improvement. Therefore there was great need for every exertion being made by the children of God to prevent the land from falling into the state of the ancient Cities of the Plain."

MR. J. S. HARRISON has just finished a four weeks' mission at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End. The Sunday evenings were great times of ingathering, and every night men and women came forward and decided for Christ, many signing the total abstinence pledge. Mr. Harrison will, on Sunday next, commence another mission for three weeks in the same building.

RELIGIOUS CENSUS IN AMERICA.—The census reports of the United States place the Wesleyan Methodist body at the head of the list with a membership of five millions. The Baptists come next with nearly four millions, and the Romanists follow with nearly the same number. The Presbyterians, however, are rapidly increasing and according to the last return now number three millions.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on the following:—Special services by Mr. Owen Rodway, at Congregational Chapel, Newent, Gloucestershire, on Sunday, August 17.——A mission in the tent on the shore at New Brighton being conducted by Mr. Rowland Sturt, of the Evangelisation Society.——Tent services being held by Mr. John Elliott, at Erchfont, near Devizes.——An eight days' mission in Cherryfield Hall, Dundee, beginning August 31.——A three weeks' special mission in Leslie, N.B., commencing August 16.——Special Gospel services in the New Hall, Chipping Sodbury, conducted by Mr. G. Cummings, August 25 to 30.——Special services at Southport, commencing August 31, to be conducted by Mr. J. Albinson.——A three weeks' tent mission being held at Billingshurst, Sussex, by Mr. John Sturges, of the Evangelisation Society.——PRAISE: For blessing received during tent mission at Pulborough.

MR. LECKY ON ROMANISM.

A very interesting article from the pen of Mr. Lecky, the historian, appears in the June number of the American Review, The Forum. It is entitled: "Formative Influences," and describes the religious and literary influences which led the writer from being a divinity student in Trinity College, Dublin, to become the author of the well known "History of Rationalism." Amongst other things, he draws a most appreciative sketch of the genius and writings of the late Archbishop Whately.

The most interesting point, however, in the article is the outspoken opinion it expresses as to the essential paganism of the religion of Rome, under its mask of Christianity. As coming from one whose calm impartiality as a historian is universally recognised, the following words have more than ordinary value:—

"Of the enormous and essential difference between matured Catholicism and the Christianity of the New Testament, I never doubted, and my convictions were much deepened by long travels in Italy, France, and Spain, during which I endeavoured to study carefully Catholicism in its actual workings as a popular religion, and not as it appears clarified and rationalised in such books as the 'Exposition,' by Bossuet. I often asked myself who could have imagined from a perusal of the New Testament that Christianity was intended to be a highly-centralized monarchy, governed with supreme divine authority by the Bishop of Rome; that this Bishop was to be connected not with the great author of the Epistle to the Romans, but with St. Peter; that the figure which was to occupy the most prominent place in the devotions and imaginations of millions of Christian worshippers was to be the Virgin Mary, who is not so much as mentioned in the Epistles; that in the immediate neighbourhood and with the full sanction of the highest Ecclesiastical authorities, graven images were to be employed in devotion as conspicuously as in a pagan temple, particular images being singled out from all others for particular devotion, by special indulgences, and by special miracles? I soon convinced myself that popular Catholicism, as it exists in southern Europe, and as it has existed through a long course of centuries, is as literally polytheistic and idolatrous as any form of paganism, though it has many beauties, and though much of its very mingled influence has been for good."

Mr. Lecky then goes on to speak of "the teaching of his early youth," in which "this transformation of Christianity was described as the great predicted apostasy, the mystery of iniquity, the work of Antichrist among mankind. Under the influence of the historic method it assumed a different aspect, and the mystery became very explicable;" but his explanation is so interesting in its bearing on Apocalyptic interpretation, that I will reserve it, and a few remarks on it, for another number.

H. E. B.

MR. H. BRISTOW WALLEN, for ten years secretary of the Homes for Working Boys in London, has been appointed secretary to the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children (head offices, Shaftesbury House, Shaftesbury-avenue, W.C.), in succession to Mr. William Williams, the founder of the Refuges, who has resigned owing to advancing years.

NAPLES SAILORS' REST.—The work of Mr. Stephen Burrowes meets with an increasing measure of the appreciation it deserves. A few days ago the master of the ss. Tresco forwarded to him a substantial sum, collected on board several vessels, to assist in the good cause. Services on board an emigrant ship recently were attended by hundreds of young people. The work is many-sided, and includes visits to neglected places along the coast. Larger premises are greatly needed, and the committee is appealing for £1,000, wherewith they will be able to secure what is required, and at the same time relieve the work of the burden of a heavy annual rent.

Letters to the Editor.

"ANSWERED PRAYER."

Dear Sir,—It seems only due to your correspondent "P" to send a few words of hearty thanks for the encouragement and cheer her interesting letter on "Answered Prayer" gave me at a time when I, too, was in doubt as to which of two courses was best on which to expend money—when both appeared equally right—on rest and relaxation from duty as companion to a lady, or on a certain branch of education for my youngest girl.

Motherly love and solicitude prompted the latter, while health seemed to demand the first.

Having sought Divine guidance, my attention also was directed to the text on The Christian Almanack for June 27, "Take some food, for this is for your safety," or as it is otherwise translated "health." While still somewhat troubled in mind, lest self was pleading too strongly for indulgence, the same words occurred in one of the lessons for the day, and again, as if to dismiss every lingering doubt, our gracious Lord brought the words under special notice for the third time in your correspondent's letter on the evening before starting for a much-needed holiday. The invigorating air of the lovely and peaceful spot in Kent in which this is being passed is indeed food for both mind and body, and as thanks rise from my heart to the Giver of all good things, the surrounding beauty seems to whisper of the certainty of loving care and guidance in the future.

May He keep his dear children trustful, whatever may befal, and should He see good to open up the path of definite Christian work desired, may the way be made so plain that they cannot mistake it, and may his richest blessing attend the work.

Trusting you will do me the favour to insert this in your much-valued paper.—I am, dear Sir, yours faithfully, N. A. B.

ROME AND PERSECUTION.

Dear Sir,—With respect to the remark "that pages of the Protestant Church are also written in blood," may I suggest the publication of an extract from "Faber's Calendar of Prophecy," pp. 95-97, as being a valuable reflection on this subject? It is as follows:—

"We must confess the lamentable truth, that, in some instances, Protestantism has been thus polluted; yet, when we consider how slow the mind of man is to receive propositions which at length become familiar and appear altogether incontestable, we shall not, perhaps, wonder at the circumstance, however we may deplore it. The sanguine spots of Rome long, more or less, adhered to those who had reformed themselves from her superstitions; and the lessons which had been learnt in a corrupt school were often but too faithfully carried into practice. This was only to be expected; for, except in cases of actual inspiration, the breaking in of light will always be gradual. Hence, in common equity, the masters ought to be blamed, rather than the scholars. Be this, however, as it may, there is a vital and essential difference, in the matter of persecution, between Popery and Protestantism, which ought never to be overlooked; though, for obvious reasons, the modern advocates of the Roman Church prudently pretermit it. Persecution is part and parcel of Popery; but in Protestantism it is merely incidental. In making this assertion I speak advisedly, not inadvertently; and I substantiate it on the very principles of Popery and Protestantism in themselves. A special doctrine of Popery is the infallibility and immutability of the Catholic Church so called, in all points which have been authoritively determined by Œcumenical Councils. Now the duty of persecuting and exterminating heretics with fire and sword is unreservedly propounded by at least two Œcumenical Councils, the third and fourth Councils of Lateran, See Concil. Later. III. can. 27, Labb. Concil. vol. X. pp. 1522-1523; and Concil. Later. IV. can. 3, Labb. Concil. vol. XI. pp. 147-151. Such being the case, in a Church which avowedly can neither err nor change, the duty of persecution becomes an immutable and perpetual article of faith, always existing and binding, though not always capable of being carried into practice; nor can this conclusion be avoided by any modern Romanist, unless he be content to pronounce that two Œcumenical Councils have erred, and consequently that what he denominates the Catholic Church is both fallible and mutable. Persecution, therefore, is inherent in Popery—it is a part, an integral part, of the very system—nor can the Roman Church ever shake off its imposed obligation without at the same time renouncing its own infallibility. But with Protestantism the matter is the very reverse. Unfettered by the chains of an imagined infallibility, Protestants censure and disown, without scruple, whatever deeds of their predecessors they observe to be unwarrantable and unscriptural. In their system, persecution is incidental, not inherent. Their fathers, so far as they practised it, learned the evil lesson in the school of Rome; but the deeds of their fathers they neither justify nor recognise as forming any part of their code of belief and duty. In short, Popery stands precluded, by her own claim of infallibility and immutability, from reprobating and disowning the sanguinary abominations which have systematically characterised the Roman Church. She may retort the charge of persecution upon Protestantism, to secure the purposes of controversy, and to mislead the sciolists of a babyish Liberalism; but she well knows that she dares not to join her rival in pronouncing all persecution for conscience' sake, by whomsoever and whensoever conducted, to be damnable and accursed, and abominable, and unscriptural."—I am, Sir,

Yours faithfully, R. R. Maddison.

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

Sir,—In no spirit of captious criticism, but with the simple desire for explanation, I venture to ask the following questions with regard to some of the utterances reported in last week's Christian as having been given at Keswick.

(1) Mr. Haslam (p. 17) appears to interpret Rom. viii. 11—the "quickening of our mortal bodies"—as describing an operation of the Spirit. Not in raising us finally from the dead, but reviving our bodies for God's service here and now. Is this correct?

(2) Mr. Gregson (p. 18) says "there must be a getting rid of self." Self may be denied, subdued, but is it ever "got rid" of in this life?

(3) He says again (p. 18) "our gifts and talents must all go on the altar and be burned up," and "the Spirit comes into us and burns everything up." Does he mean simply the dedication and consecration of all we have, or is the "burning everything up" something else? The language seems somewhat vague.

(4) Mr. Fox (p. 18) speaks of "a heart not fully cleansed." Are any hearts fully cleansed? Does "God see" in any of us such a heart?

(5) Mr. Peploe (p. 19) is said to have drawn distinctions between "faith," "trust," and "assurance," as brought out in 2 Tim. i. 12. Is not this unwarranted? "Faith" and "trust" are two English words used to render but one Greek word. They mean exactly the same thing. And surely "confidence" is much the same. If I have faith in a person, I have confidence in him, and I trust in him. I cannot exercise the one without the other. These distinctions are said to have been "very helpful." They seem to me to confuse the simple meaning of the Scriptures.

(6) Mr. Selwyn (p. 20) says that "if we had all been out-and-out rejoicing Christians" our country would "have been converted long ago." Is this true? Pentecostal Christians were both "out-and-out" and "rejoicing," but all Palestine was not converted.

(7) Mr. Grubb says (p. 23) that as Moses and Elijah had power to shut heaven or to turn waters to blood, "Spirit-baptized souls" are characterised by similar powers. What does he exactly mean?

(8) Is he correct (p. 23) in adducing the lying in the street of the dead bodies of the witnesses in Rev. xi. 8 as a description of the death which characterises "spirit-baptized souls"? Surely this is a "private interpretation," and somewhat far-fetched.

(9) Mr. Fox (p. 20) speaks of the "Keswick blessing" and the "Keswick doctrine." Hitherto singularity of experience and peculiarity of doctrine have been repudiated, as not making the Keswick Convention. But it seems that an address on the blessed hope of the Church, the glorious second coming of our Lord, was regarded by some as "outside Keswick lines"!

Amid much that seems to have been most sound, Scriptural, and profitable, I venture to ask for explanation of the foregoing expressions, which seem to me open to misunderstanding, and somewhat calculated to lead to error.

MR. HERMANN G. HARRIS, B.A., late director of the Bath Evangelization Society, will be at liberty from September 1st, to conduct special mission services for adults, young people, or boys. Address, Belmont, Weston-super-Mare.

Protestant Notes.

Now that the question of Cardinal Manning's precedence is so prominently before the country, it may not be amiss to reprint the advice on how to deal with Cardinals sent in the year 1536, by Henry VIII. to his nephew, the King of Scotland, by his ambassador, Sir Ralph Sadler. It had come to the knowledge of the King of England that a subject of the King of Scotland had been elected as a Cardinal.

"The King's Majesty," said Sir Ralph Sadler, "could not but advertise your Grace [his Royal nephew] that his advice is, you should not suffer any of your subjects to take upon him that [Cardinal's] red hat of pride, whereby he shall incontinently, the same being received (unless he be of a contrary nature to any man that ever was yet of that sort), not only be in manner discharged of his obedience, and become the Bishop of Rome's liege man; but also shall presume of his Cardinalship to be your fellow, and to have the rule as well as you. Then should the Bishop of Rome creep into your own very bosom, know all your secrets, and at last, unless you will be yoked and serve their pleasure in all points, your Grace is like to smart for it. The thing, perchance, in the beginning, shall seem to your Grace very honourable and pleasant: but wisdom would, to beware of the tail, which is very black and bitter." ("Foxe's Acts and Monuments," vol. v., p. 105; edition 1857).

It has been stated by the Government that the canon law of the Church of Rome is binding law in Malta. We believe that very few Englishmen realise all that such a state of things implies. Take, for instance, one point alone. In accordance with the canon law, the Pope has issued what is termed the "Major Excommunication" against three Maltese newspapers, because they have ventured to differ from the Court of Rome on the political questions which have recently disturbed that island. Now, it may be asked, what are the punishments incurred by those against whom the Papacy may issue the "Major Excommunication"? Let the latest book on "Roman Ecclesiastical Law" supply the answer. The faithful, we are informed, "are bound to shun and avoid the excommunicated (provided he is vitandus), like a leper spreading around him a moral contagion and misfortune." Seeing that this rule applies to temporal matters as well as spiritual, it is in itself a very heavy punishment, especially in a Roman Catholic country like Malta. "The Church strictly commands," says this book, "the faithful to shun and avoid him (the excommunicated), or his society and company, even in the ordinary social and civil relations of daily life." The italics are in the original, which is a book not printed in the Dark Ages, but as recently as the year 1888, and is still on sale at the two leading Roman Catholic publishers in London. It is written in English, and bears the title of "Elements of Ecclesiastical Law," by the Rev. S. B. Smith, D.D. The first volume of the work contains the approbation of Cardinals Manning and Newman. We quote from vol. ii. pp. 286 and 310. The canon law of Rome ought not to be allowed in any country subject to a Protestant Queen, at least in matters which are purely temporal.

MR. PECK SMITH.—In the note relating to Mr. W. Peck Smith, Aug. 1, page 8, for "the old man in the carnal nature," read "the old man, viz., the carnal nature." We have a high opinion of the integrity and Christian character of Mr. Peck Smith, although we differ from his views on sanctification. He has been a member of a Christian church in good standing for over thirty years.

"REGIONS BEYOND."—The August issue of of this attractive monthly contains the first part of a very interesting review of Mr. Stanley's new book from the pen of Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness. A portrait of Mrs. Ahok, of Foochow, the Christian Chinese lady who recently came to England with the cry, "Come over and help us," will be greatly prized by those who saw that Oriental disciple, and heard her earnest words. The other contents of the magazine, especially those relating to the Congo-Balolo Mission are full of interest.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

On all sides great interest has been stirred by the missionary appeal from Keswick to the C.M.S.

Rev. G. R. Eden, vicar of Bishop Auckland, has been appointed to succeed the late Dr. Parry as Bishop Suffragan of Dover and Archdeacon of Canterbury. Mr. Eden (says The Record) has not allied himself conspicuously with any ecclesiastical party, but he has shown a warm sympathy with the work of the chief evangelical societies.

Bishop Barry on Tuesday, last week, addressed a large missionary meeting at Wrexham. He maintained that it was the duty of England and the English Church to civilise and Christianise all the nations of the earth with which they came into contact, and, referring to the influence that England was gaining in Central Africa, he considered that the drink traffic carried on in that part of the world was one of the blackest blots on the whole Empire.

METHODIST.

The Pastoral Session of the Wesleyan Conference provisionally appointed a Connexional Temperance Secretary, and it found a minister of many gifts and great devotion in Rev. G. A. Bennetts, B.A., of Wood Green. The Methodist Times says this appointment has been delayed much too long.

Rev. Cæsar Caine, acting Wesleyan chaplain of the York Garrison, has held a successful three weeks' mission and series of temperance meetings at Strensall Camp. Major Groom, of the York and Lancaster Regiment, in the course of an address, said that during the three weeks between 4000 and 5000 visits had been paid to the marquee for reading, and no less than 382 men had signed the pledge.

The present statistics of the Wesleyan Mission in India show that the baptized native adherents are now 11,695 in number, against 3591 in 1881. There are also 803 persons under instructions for baptism. Last year 675 natives were received into full membership, though the net increase was reduced by deaths and other causes to 264. There are 741 on trial. The greatest success in conversion and church membership is in the Mysore district, where also the education work has resulted in the largest number of scholars.

BAPTIST.

The memorial stone of a new tabernacle at Westbourne, Bournemouth, was recently laid. The chapel, which will be a very handsome structure, will cost about £6000. The pastor is Rev. G. Wainwright.

Mr. G. H. Morgan, of the University College, Cardiff, has accepted an invitation to the pastorate of Woodberry Down Church, Seven Sisters-road, Stamford Hill, N., which has been vacant since November last, when Rev. W. R. Skerry left to become the successor of the late Dr. Stanford at Denmark-place, Camberwell.

The pulpit of the Baptist Chapel, St. Andrew's, Fife, has been occupied for five weeks by Mr. Duncan Garrow, student, Aberdeen. During his ministry much blessing has been felt; there have been three for baptism and two for membership, they making an addition of five new members. The church is at present without a settled pastor.

The August Bank Holiday saw the beginning of a good work at Douglas, Isle of Man, by Rev. E. A. Carter, in connection with his "Pioneer" forward movement. The Douglas Gymnasium has been taken by him for the foundation of a permanent Baptist cause, thus supplying a long-felt want in Douglas. On the Sunday evening, August 3, and through the following week, open-air services were held by Mr. Carter on the beach. On Monday evening Mr. Gawin Kirkham and others took part; crowds gathered round to listen to song and story, to prayer and praise.

SALVATION ARMY.

On Friday last seventeen selected officers embarked for Australia. Fresh contingents are preparing for Denmark and South Africa.

It was only in January, 1889, that General Booth commissioned his seven thousandth officer, and very shortly a similar ceremony is to take place over the ten thousandth.

Two days' special holiness meetings have been successfully conducted by Staff-Captain Blanche Cox and Adjutant Margaret Allen, at Pembroke Dock, including a most interesting service at the Dock gates, which was largely attended and well sustained, despite the rain.

The Salvationists held two very profitable "half-nights" of prayer at their Keswick barracks during the recent Convention. Major Cooke presided, and addresses were given by Mrs. Armstrong, Miss Davis, and Revs. B. F. Buxton, J. G. Gregson, J. W. Harrison, and G. C. Grubb.

The Earl of Hopetoun, Governor of Victoria, and Sir Henry Norman, of Queensland, have each sent £10 towards the Prison-gate and Rescue work in Australia, to which is now added a free labour bureau and loan fund, started by a contribution of £100 from Sir F. T. Sargood, M.L.C.

A Salvationist has been elected to the Mayoralty of Bournanville, Ontario, Canada. At Chicago a lawyer wears the scarlet guernsey while practising at the courts, which creates almost as much sensation as the Australian M.P. who sits in the Colonial Parliament in full Army uniform.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A new Congregational Hall in the village of Chigwell, Essex, was recently opened with a sermon by Rev. C. S. Horne. The new departure is a fusion of two little missions at Chigwell and Woodford Bridge respectively in connection with Woodford Green Church, and is to be under the pastoral superintendence of Rev. G. H. Giddins. The hall will accommodate 200 worshippers.

Rev. Henry Coley (late of Almora, North India) has accepted an invitation to the co-pastorate of Park Chapel, Camden Town, with Rev. J. C. Harrison. Mr. Harrison recently stated that he had intended to resign the pastorate in September, but that in conformity with Mr. Coley's desire he should retain the pastorate for a short period, and he had decided to withhold tendering his resignation until March, when he will have completed the forty-fifth year of his ministry at Park Chapel.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. W. M. M'Gregor, of Troon, has accepted a call to Renfield Free Church, Glasgow, in succession to Rev. Dr. Marcus Dods.

Rev. J. S. Rae, of Trinity Presbyterian Church, Sunderland, has accepted the call to Newington U.P. Church, Edinburgh, in succession to Rev. John Young.

The Presbyterian congregation at Doncaster has hitherto met in the Town Hall, but owing to its great increase a new church is to be erected at a cost of £4500.

A forward movement is about to be attempted in Northumberland. Rev. W. Dryburgh, of Sunderland, has just been inducted to the pastorate of the church at Swalwell. There are populous outlying districts of Swalwell without a Presbyterian church, and it is proposed to open preaching stations in some of these, the work being under the superintendence of Mr. Dryburgh. The development of this new departure will be watched with interest.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. D. C. Bryce, parish minister of Moffat, N.B.—Rev. Charles Williams, Wesleyan minister, Penarth, Cardiff.—Rev. Dr. Grant, minister of St. Mary's Parish Church, Edinburgh.—Rev. T. J. Depress, Wesleyan minister of Redditch.

Appeals.

Ben Jonson Mission, Stepney-green, E.—The superintendent, Mr. James Taylor (28, Cressy-place, Stepney-green), has ample opportunity of using money and clothing for relief of deserving poor. Every case is carefully investigated.

A Bible Carriage and Gospel Tent for West Java.—Owing to the expensive and difficult mode of travelling in Java, it is thought advisable to have a Bible carriage, somewhat like a gipsy van, wherein the colporteur can sleep, &c.; also a tent to invite the natives to, so that the Gospel may be explained to them. In my field (West Java) I have a population of ten million souls to attend to and to supply with the Holy Scriptures in the Malay, Chinese, Sundanese, Javanese, Bengali, Dutch, Arab, French, German, and English languages. The need is very great, and with a Bible carriage many may be reached who are now out of reach. Donations can either be sent to Mr. Benjamin Boram, Jun., Thornwood-grove, near Epping, Essex, or direct to the British and Foreign Bible Society, 142, Queen Victoria-street, London, marked "For Bible carriage and tent for West Java, A. W. H. Boram, superintending colporteur." About £50 is the amount needed. (Signed) A. W. H. Boram, Superintending Colporteur.

THE LIGHTHOUSE MISSION, Wilford-road, Croydon.—The first annual report gives an encouraging account of work in a very needy part of Croydon. The agencies include Bible classes for men, and sewing classes for women. A working institute has been formed for the lads of the neighbourhood, many of whom earn precarious livings as crossing-sweepers, sellers of flowers, &c. Some of these have facilities afforded them for cutting up firewood and making it into bundles; others are taught shoe-mending and rough carpentering work. The secretary of the Mission is Mr. Frederic B. Webb, 64, Clyde-road, Croydon.

PONTYMOILE, MON.—A correspondent writes:—We had a glorious time Sunday night. Mr. Wintle was speaking to believers from the Song of Solomon ii. 2, and while contrasting the Church with the world, and describing the end of the thorns to be burned, a man that has led a most abandoned life, shouted out, "Oh! sir, can God save a miserable drunkard like me?" The speaker said, "Yes; He can and will if you will let Him." He sought and found Christ, and went home happy, rejoicing in the Lord, and promised to have family prayer in his house. Oh, praise the Lord, the Gospel is still the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth!

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 17.—Psalm C.

IN the previous Psalm there is a commendation of our Lord Jesus and of the majesty of his kingdom; in this, there is an exhortation, based on that royal conception, for all the earth to worship Him. It is full of holy rapture, and has inspired hearts to love and worship through all ages. May our hearts be in tune with the anthem of the universal Church, as we peruse these noble and majestic words! But it may be that it has been specially prepared as an anthem for use in that golden coming time, when the kingdoms of this world shall indeed have become the kingdoms of the Son of Man.

1. It is especially on the Lord's day that the devout heart thinks of all the lands of men on whom its blessed light is breaking, and asks that the "joyful noise" of loyal and glad hearts may rise from each. All lands have been included in the purchase of Calvary, let all sing (Rev. viii. 9).

2. God's service is glad—joyous, blessed, perfect freedom. Let us not do his will grudgingly, but gladly.

3. "Know ye"; the more we know God, the more able shall we be to praise Him. Notice the themes for praise:—

(1) That He is God; only living and true; infinitely perfect. Self-existent and self-sufficient; the Father of mercies, tender and true, loving and strong—Oh, rapture indeed, that such a one is God.

(2) That He is our Creator, because as such He is responsible for us.

(3) That He is our Proprietor. "He hath made us, and we are his" (R.V.).

(4) That we are his people, owning Him, therefore, as our liege Lord and King. "Shout, daughter of Zion, thy King cometh."

(5) That He is our Shepherd; and it is the Shepherd's part to care, not the sheep's.

4. We specially enter his gates, when we mingle with the assemblies of his people. Put on the garment of praise with other Sunday attire.

7. Yes, good always and only: equally so when He takes as when He gives, when He chides as when He smiles. And what He has been, He will be. He is the faithful God (1 Thess. v. 24). Praise Him!

MONDAY, AUGUST 18.—Psalm CI.

Again we come on one of David's Psalms. This was not improbably composed at the beginning of his reign, and contains the ideal programme which he proposed to himself, and the principles here laid down are those which not only apply to every Christian community, but which will assuredly distinguish the kingdom of the blessed Lord, for whose advent the Church daily prayeth.

1. Mercy and judgment marvellously blend in all human lives, and they should be alike commemorated in song. Sing your songs to God.

2. The art of this is given (Ps. cxix. 99; see also 1 Sam. xviii. 14, 15). The reward of such conduct is the coming of God into the soul (Exod. xx. 21; John xiv. 23). But the pious heart yearns for it to make haste and arrive. A perfect heart is the blameless, consecrated, and wholly yielded heart (1 Kings iii. 14; Prov. xx. 7).

5-8. Here is the picture of a pious palace, or private dwelling-house. No slander or pride; upright and trustworthy servants; deceit and lying vanished; and strict discipline maintained (1 Tim. iii. 4).

We may well ask ourselves whether this is a true picture of the inner realm, and whether we are strict and merciless in not permitting traitors there. We do not now use the sword of extermination to men; but we should for evil principles and habits, and unholy things.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 19.—Psalm CII.

This is the fifth of the penitential Psalms. Some have held that it is one of the later Psalms, asking for deliverance from the captivity; but, from certain special Davidic characteristics, it seems better to refer it to the hand of the royal and sweet Psalmist himself. But it is of comparatively small consequence as to its authorship; the main thing is to notice its adequateness to those who are afflicted and overwhelmed, and desire a method of expressions by which to pour out their hearts to God.

We may arrange it as follows:—A pitiful complaint (1-11), confidence in the Divine Deliverer (12-22), a comparison of the greatness of God with the frailty of nature (23-28).

4. A withered heart, from which all joy is gone, as the juice from a sapless bough. Man's grief must be consuming indeed when he forgets his meals.

7. Loneliness is one of the keenest of human sorrows.

10. The devout soul does not talk of it, but of Him. God is ever coming to it through human agents and secondary causes. And it deals with Him at first hand.

12. "But Thou, O Lord, sittest as King" (R.V.). What a comfort to turn from our failures and defeats to that eternal Monarchy, which is as independent of us as the stability of the mountains is of the withered leaves that strew their slopes.

13. As much of this complaint was probably occasioned by the depressed state of the Church, so comfort is occasioned by a clear conviction that the Divine Deliverer is at hand.

14. When God leads his people to bemoan the low estate of a church, a revival is near at hand (Neh. iii. 34).

15, 16. The revival of the Church is indispensable to the awakening of the world. And God's glory is conspicuously manifested in the newly imparted zeal and life of his people. Then He indeed appears in glory.

19, 20. The grace of God not only rebuilds his Church, but stoops low to hear the sighs which might seem too slight to penetrate the dungeon wall. Sigh! imprisoned heart, if thou canst not pray. Sighs fly into the ear of God.

25-27. These magnificent verses are attributed directly to our Lord (Heb. i. 10). Granite rocks and stars of light shall fulfil their purpose, and be laid aside as worn-out robes when He speaks their concluded mission (Rev. xxi. 5), but Jehovah-Jesus will ever be unchangeably the same, and able to summon new creations into being with a word.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 20.—Psalm CIII.

David's name heads this peerless Psalm of praise, which as none other expresses the soul of the Church and of the Christian. It is compared to a still, clear brook of praise. The structure is based on the Hebrew alphabet, the letters of which commence each verse in order, so that the whole could be easily committed by memory to the safe custody of the heart.

1. Let no faculty of the soul be still in God's praise—"All."

2. Alas, that we forget so often and so many, yet we will not forget all. Memory, awake, and touch thy chords, bring back the blessed past.

3. Notice the present tenses in this and the following verses. God's tender dealings run parallel with our lives. He is never weary or exhausted. Enumerate the blessings which He gives, and as the fingers tell the successive beads, praise Him: forgiveness; healing (Exod. xv. 26); redemption; crowning; satisfaction (Isa. lviii. 11); perennial youth. We need not think that the Bible authorises the belief that the eagle literally renews its youth; but only that the youth, when renewed, is eagle-like in its royal strength.

7. Ways, or plans, are only made known to the inner circle of the saints; the ordinary congregation learn only his doings (John xv. 15).

8. A conception of God, which seems strange in its setting of that old Jewish economy, but has been confirmed by all subsequent ages.

9. He does chide, and we might question his love if He didn't, but not always. It is occasioned by our sins, but so soon as they are confessed and put away, there is no trace of it left.

11, 12. These are the largest measurements which imagination can conceive, but they are all too small for the purpose of the Psalmist, in his desire to describe the impossibility of forgiven sin coming back on the soul.

13, 14. We do not half enough realise our Father's pity. We chastise ourselves bitterly if we do not understand or reach our ideals. We are ever fearful that He will not give us credit for the motives which underlie our sad and fitful experience. We try to make ourselves more fit for his love. And all the time he is tenderly regarding us, and knows so well how much of our failure accrues from temperament, and disposition, and overstrain (1 Kings xix. 5).

15-18. What a sublime contrast between man's impotence when he is at his best and God's eternity of mercy. There is a promise also here for the grand-children of God's people.—Remember to do.

19. Yes, all men and devils are beneath that power. Satan even must get permission before he can tempt (Luke xxii. 31).

20. The mighty and obedient angels! Angelic obedience might well stimulate us (Matt. vi. 10).

22. One lonely soul on fire with the love of God may set the whole universe ablaze (Rev. v. 11).

THURSDAY, AUGUST 21.—Psalm CIV.

An anonymous poem, and yet there are many indications of David's touch. Luther has well described it as "a praise of God from the book of Nature." The theme is the greatness of God, as seen in his works. The description follows closely on the description of the several days of creation, as given in Gen. i., the deviations being accounted for by the special object in the Psalmist's mind, of exalting the greatness of God, not only in the creation, but in the maintenance of his universe.

There is a majestic introductory verse, which is then elaborated—First, the light, the heaven and earth, then the formation of the dry land (6-9); the watering of the earth from his fountains (10-13); the provision for beasts and men (14-23); the wonders of the sea (24-26); God's personal work in nature (27-30); a noble conclusion of praise (31-35).

The writer of these notes is inclined to lay down his pen, and feel that it is impossible in the brief space at his disposal to say aught of this marvellous production. Here poetry at its highest, sublimity of conception and diction, and devotional feeling of the most spiritual, order blend in one superb and unrivalled poem. Inspiration itself seems to have reached high-water mark.

2. God has many garments ascribed to Him, but this primeval one is, perhaps, the most beautiful of them all (Ps. xciii. 1).

4. "Who maketh winds his messengers and flaming fire his servants." The tempest and the flame are his slaves; make friends with their Master.

6. This is the work of the third day—the removal of the water from the earth—and is painted at great length, because the Psalmist sees in it an allegory of the removal of the heathen, who had inundated the Holy Land (Ps. xciii.). Some have seen in these verses a reference to glacial action, by which so much water is being brought down from the mountains to the valleys.

11, 12. If God is so careful of birds and beasts, how much more of his children (Matt. vi. 26).

15. God is not content with giving the bare necessaries of life; He adds luxuries.

16. The earth is satisfied (13); the trees are satisfied (R.V.); all living things are satisfied (28, R.V.).

17, 18. He who implants natural instincts, provides for their satisfaction.

20-23. Night and morning in the forest pasturelands.

26. God delights in the pastimes (R.V.) of the monsters of the deep.

28. To satisfy creation, God has but to open his hand.

31. Where no human foot treads, God's Spirit broods rejoicing in his works.

34. Here, indeed, is food for holy meditation; sweet because of its theme.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 22.—Psalm CV.

This Psalm is supposed to date from the Babylonish captivity, at which time the hearts of God's people would be specially directed to that faithfulness, which could not fail, and must keep for them all that it had promised. It was natural then to recapitulate the past as an argument for a similar interposition again on their behalf.

The past wonders of God are quoted as arguments for the future (1-7); a recalling of the covenant (8-12); his care over the early Jewish fathers (13-15); his guidance of Jacob and his family to Egypt (16-23); the deliverance of Israel with great wonders and signs (24-38); the marvels of the wilderness march (39-42); and the introduction of Israel into Canaan (43-45).

2. If you cannot sing, talk.

3. "Glory ye" recalls Ps. xxxiv. 2. In the midst of our deepest trouble we have reason for joy, and even the seeker has plenty to rejoice over, for he is on a road which must lead him ultimately to blessedness.

8. A verbal allusion to Deut. vii. 9.

9. When once you can lay hold of a promise, or the provisions of the covenant, you have a purchase with God which enables you to have your utmost petition. God cannot run back from his plighted Word.

12. And his Word is entirely independent of our numbers or power.

15, 16. Pharaoh (Gen. xii. 17); and Abimelech (Gen. xx. 3, 7). Anointed (compare Gen. xli. 38).

18. Is this not equivalent to the entrance of the iron into his soul? We need iron men, but this is not a natural constituent of character, and must be received through trial.

19. His word, i.e., Joseph's.

28-36. A magnificent description of the plagues, with several added and graphic touches.

42. If he did all this because of his covenant, it is impossible that He will ever forget or forsake his own.

44. All the benefits bestowed on Israel are shadows of spiritual blessings. Redeemed, enriched, restored, satisfied with heavenly bread, and drinking of the spiritual rock, made to sit in heavenly places. What can we desire more? Only let us not rebel against Him.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 23.—Psalm CVI.

The previous Psalm was a history of God's goodness to Israel, and this is a history of their rebellions and provocations. Its main character is the confession of sin. If, as is supposed, it dates from the captivity, it is in harmony with the confessions of Daniel and Nehemiah, and was a symptom that the sharp discipline had done its work, and that God was about to restore His people to the land of their fathers.

After an introduction of inimitable sweetness (1-6), the confession extends to the sins of Egypt (6-12); of the wilderness (13-33); and of Canaan (34-43). But as, in spite of all, the mercy of God had so often interposed, so the believer felt able to call on the Lord to complete the work He had begun, and to gather them again from among the heathen (44-48).

4. He who teaches us to use words like these is pledged to fulfil them.

7, 8. Our sin cannot shut us out of the love of God. There is ever a "Nevertheless."

12, 13. How sad and sudden a contrast.

15. Let us ever condition our prayers in the will of God, lest a similar fate overtake us.

16. Num. xvi. 3, 5, 7.

23. Stood in the breach, as a warrior covers with his body a broken piece of a wall in a besieged city.

28. This was the result of the suggestions of Balaam to Balak (Num. xxv. 2; Rev. ii. 14).

32, 33. How infectious is unbelief, that it spread from the people to their noble leader.

35. In spite of Joshua's warning (Josh. xxiii. 12, 13); see also Judges iii. 6.

43. These are the times of the Judges. And how many times has He also delivered us from the results of our sins.

44. Another "Nevertheless."

46. God can put pity into the heart of your most merciless foe.

48. With this magnificent doxology we close the fourth book of the Psalms, and as we do so we worship and bow down, and join the hallelujahs of heaven and earth.

COMMISSIONER BOOTH-CLIBBORN, the leader of the Salvation Army's work in France, gallantly rescued a drowning man at Boulogne a few days ago. In the presence of many helpless spectators, he swam from the beach and brought the poor man ashore in a state of unconsciousness. Then, without delay, Mr. Booth-Clibborn took measures to restore animation, and in this also he was successful. This type of "salvation" was much to the mind of the many visitors at present in Boulogne, who have since been enthusiastic in the expression of their admiration of Mr. Booth-Clibborn's heroic conduct.

DR. BARNARDO'S REPORT FOR 1889 has just been published, and a perusal of its pages is calculated, in the providence of God, to sustain and extend public interest in the great work under Dr. Barnardo's care. The report gives a rapid survey of the work, with details of numerous illustrative cases of rescue. The many agencies which cluster round the Homes are briefly described, and we trust many who may read will find it their privilege to learn more than this unpretentious record affords of the grand efforts that are being put forth on behalf of orphan and destitute children. In a circular letter accompanying the report, Dr. Barnardo says: "Through his dear servants all over the world, the God of the fatherless and the needy has during the past year, more graciously and encouragingly than I can tell, supplied the wants of my ever-growing family." We trust this blessing will continue to be experienced. Copies of the report may be had from the offices of the Homes, 18 to 26, Stepney-causeway, London, E.

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, August 24.

PREVAILING PRAYER.—LUKE xviii. 1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT: Verse 14.

IN this lesson prayer is illustrated by two parables, the first is that of

THE IMPORTUNATE WIDOW (1-8).—The object of the parable is clearly stated (1). That we pray is taken for granted, but as we may faint in well-doing (Gal. vi. 9), and in suffering (Heb. xii. 3, 5), so we may faint in prayer. Unceasing prayer is a duty—"men ought." It is a privilege, resulting in greatest possible blessing to ourselves, but it is duty as well. Not to pray "always" is our disobedience as well as our loss. See also Rom. xii. 12; Eph. vi. 18; 1 Thess. v. 17. Especially is this persistence necessary in view of our Lord's coming. This is the theme with which the last chapter closes, and this parable looks forward to it. His delay must be met on our part by unceasing prayer (xxi. 34-36).

THE UNJUST JUDGE. (2).—"According to Deut. xvi. 18, Israel must have in all the gates of the city judges who were under obligation to administer justice without respect of persons."—Lange. This man was destitute of the two conditions that move to right action—the fear of God, and regard for man. The two are closely connected. If we occupy a right attitude towards God, we shall not fail in our duty to man. Power had made this judge reckless, and had even destroyed all sense of shame (4). The earnest suppliant (3).—As a "widow" she had a special claim to his attention (Isa. i. 17). Oppressed and wronged by some powerful adversary, who takes cruel advantage of her defenceless condition, she cries, "Avenge me!" It is a demand, not for vengeance on her adversary, but for justice to herself. The point of the parable is that, though the judge was of such an unworthy character, and could not be moved by the righteousness of her cause, and delayed for a while to heed her cry, still she persisted. Nothing could induce her to "faint." Her success (4, 5).—The word rendered to "weary" (5) means properly "to beat one black and blue under the eyes; then is proverbial for the designation of any possible torment"—Lange. Her importunity became unendurable, and was confessed by the judge to have overcome him. In the application (6-8) the Church is described as "his elect"—his chosen, and called, and beloved, calling on Him "day and night" to appear on their behalf. As the world grows more like the description just given (xvii. 26-30), the need for incessant prayer increases, and the danger of fainting becomes greater. His delay is the result of his long-suffering (7). He hears, but his time for deliverance has not yet come (2 Pet. iii. 9). When that time does arrive, He will answer "speedily" (8).

"Shall He find faith?" refers to such faith as the widow manifested in persisting in her importunate cry. We have a Judge of very different character, who can only do righteousness, and whose sympathy with us is so real that He feels all we feel. His delays are not denials. Even if He seems to be as unmoved as the unjust judge, have faith in the certainty of the right answer at the right time. At some services I attended years ago a man of eighty years of age was converted. When we came together out of the inquiry-room we were met by another man about the same age, whose emotion was too great for him to control, and who said, "For forty years I have prayed daily for the conversion of this man, and now God has answered my prayer." Let us distinguish between petulance and importunity. To persist in asking what we know is not God's will to give is wrong (Deut. iii. 25, 26). If our prayer is on the line of God's will, we cannot be too importunate. His seeming denials should only intensify our longing for the answer.

THE PHARISEE AND THE PUBLICAN (9-14).—It is probable that there were others besides the Pharisees who thought "they were righteous, and despised others" (9). Against such, in all ages, this parable was spoken. Self-righteousness and proud contempt of others are always found together. It is probable that many pilgrims were on their way to the temple at this time, so that the parable was the more appropriate. The Pharisee's prayer (11-13) is "less a prayer in which he gave thanks to God than a congratulation which he addressed to himself."—Godet. He exceeded the demand of the law in fasting. Besides the annual fast-day prescribed (Lev. xvi. 29-31), he kept a fast on Monday and Thursday of every week. In giving "tithes of all," he also exceeded the law's demand (Lev. xxvii. 30; Deut. xiv. 22). There is no spirit more abhorrent to God than this. His proud utterance lacks every quality of true prayer. It has neither worship, thanksgiving, confession, petition, nor intercession. The publican's prayer (13) is the exact opposite in every respect. His humility appears (1) in his position.—"Afar off." He was too deeply conscious of unworthiness to draw near, yet too conscious of his need to refuse to come at all. (2) In his gestures.—He prayed with downcast eyes (compare John xvii. 1). He was not yet able to lift up his face without spot to God (Job xi. 13-15). "Smote his breast," acknowledging his desert of punishment, and his deep sense of wrong within. (3) In his words.—He calls himself "the sinner," and asks not merely for mercy, but for mercy through a propitiatory sacrifice (R.V. margin). Not the righteous who proudly exalts himself, but the consciously guilty who humbles himself before God, is justified (14).

Note: (1) It is possible to be in the place of prayer and yet not have the spirit of prayer. No exercise is so solemnly important as prayer, but its success depends upon the spirit of the suppliant.

(2) What we need most, and what God is most ready to give, is mercy.—None can claim acceptance with Him by right, but none who seek it, as the publican did, are refused. A child pleading with a great General on behalf of her father, was answered: "Your father has done wrong, and in the course of justice he ought to die." She replied: "Ah, sire, my plea is not for justice but for mercy," and obtained her request.

(3) To imitate the publican's words and actions is not to pray the publican's prayer. Feigned humility and contrition are as hateful to God as self-righteousness. The consciousness of sin, and a simple dependence on the sacrifice of Christ, however expressed, will obtain pardon.

Cain and Abel are the Old Testament prototypes of these two men.

The Temperance Cause.

THE Leith magistrates have made the selling of eatables a condition of conferring a licence on publicans.

It is estimated that at least 8,000,000 American pupils are now receiving physiological and hygienic temperance instruction.

The Lancet says that "anything that can be done in Board Schools, to promote a thorough and intelligent independence of alcohol should be encouraged."

"The two curses of Africa," says The New York Independent, "are slave-hunting and rum-selling." The former is done by Arabs, and the latter mainly by nominal Christians!

The British Medical Journal says: "The use of wine as a vehicle, for the adminstration of certain drugs, has increased to a great extent. 'Medicated wines," tend to the increase of tippling."

Mr. George Blaiklock is expected home from his Australasian and American tour on August 15. His addresses have been very highly appreciated. He will be open for engagements from September 1; arrangements may be made through the Deputation Department, 33, Paternoster-row, E.C.

The National Temperance League entertained to breakfast about a hundred members of the British Medical Association during their recent annual meetings at Birmingham. The Bishop of London was in the chair. Addresses were delivered by Dr. Willis (Monmouth), Dr. Cameron (Glasgow), and Dr. Norman Kerr (London).

THE NORTH AFRICA MISSION.—The new Mission Hall, Cage-lane, Plumstead, was filled on Thursday evening last week to hear an account of the above important work from Mr. E. H. Glenny, the hon. sec. of the Mission. Colonel Travers, on taking the chair, read 2 Cor. v., upon which Mr. Glenny founded his opening remarks, and then proceeded to tell some most interesting details of his nine years' experience in this work. Miss K. Smith, lately returned from Algeria, also gave a thrilling account of Christian work among the Kabyles of Djemaa Sahridj. It is sincerely hoped that among the results of the meeting some may eventually be led to go forth to the lands that are now in darkness. Certainly Mr. Glenny and his work will often be remembered in prayer by those who were privileged to attend the meeting.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

(THIRTY-FOURTH SERIES.)

CASE of a YOUNG LADY at NORWICH—RIGHT LUNG DISEASED.

Miss D. (whose name may be known on application to me), a young lady who had heard of me from other patients, came to consult me at Coombe Lodge, in June, last year. Several relatives had died of chest disease, her father also. For five years she had been ailing, more or less, and had been subject to cough and cold. She had taken a cold three months before coming to me, which had settled at her chest, with a troublesome cough. She had consulted a doctor at Norwich, but had not improved.

In addition to the obstinate cough and expectoration, her breathing was very short. She had lost much flesh, and was getting weaker daily. I found her lung decidedly affected. The right lung most, but not yet arrived at the suppurating stage.

For some months she continued under my treatment. Writing me 12th May (this year) she speaks of her own recovery; and tells of a young friend, daily getting weaker fast, who was in the same condition as herself; but had not tried my treatment. She says, "I have taken your medicine since June, and have been able to testify to the wonderful improvement in my health. I can but recommend what has so benefited me to all who are affected with lung disease."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the late Mr. John Patterson, J.P., of Liverpool.

Mr. Moody seems to be ever on the look-out for advantageous methods of prosecuting Gospel work. Our readers will find on page 19 some account of his latest enterprise. Why should not similar schemes be formulated in connection with the churches of our country? Many a minister might learn much from a visit to Northfield.

From more than one quarter we hear of the injurious effects of the theory of "universal salvation." One correspondent writes:—

> A friend of mine knows a young lady who was deeply concerned respecting her soul, but when she heard "universal salvation" preached she determined to continue living in pleasure. A man whom I know well, was heard to say, after reading a published sermon on this subject (his wife, an ungodly woman, having just died): "It was a nice thought that there was still hope of her in the next world."

The Scriptures lend no support whatever to this soul-destroying teaching. We nowhere read that God will cause his displeasure to pass away from sin or from those who persist in working iniquity.

The London Missionary Society has again invited its friends throughout the country to commemorate the foundation of the Society, in 1795, by keeping Founders' Week, September 21 to 27, as a season of special prayer for Christian missions. The Society is rapidly approaching its centenary, and its history has been a record of constant and remarkable success. It is hoped that throughout the churches, and in Christian households also, this season will be made one of hearty thanksgiving and earnest supplication.

That Miss Weston's vigorous efforts to prevent the spread of infidelity among our marines are beginning to tell, is clear from the renewed exertions of the enemies of the Gospel of God. In a recent issue of an atheistic newspaper the work was held up to ridicule under the title of "Fooling Jack." The writer's intention was to flatter "Jack," but we shall be astonished if "Jack" does not see that he is represented in a very different light. Neither scorn nor denunciation will deter Miss Weston and her friends from pressing upon the men in our navy the importance of their being reconciled to God and having a joyous interest in the eternity to which we are all hastening. We trust Mr. Hastings' very useful tract, "Will the Old Book Stand?" which is doing such an excellent work among them, may yet run into another million copies by its wide dissemination throughout the world, not forgetting the soldiers and sailors of the various nations of Europe. Steady testimony is the best possible answer to atheistic attacks on the Word of God.

It is pleasant again to record the further satisfactory progress of the Sunday rest movement in France. At the Scientific Congress, which has just been sitting at Limoges, the majority of the members went with the president in his statement that without Sunday "the working classes must sink into barbarism, and be crushed in the struggle for existence." The railway companies in France have written to the Secretary of the Association for Sunday Rest to state that they will do away with slow goods trains on Sunday. After September, too, there is to be an earlier closing on Sundays of the post-offices throughout France. It is noteworthy that the secretary of the Sunday Rest Association is a manager of the Paris and Lyons Railway.

While the countries of the Continent are strenuously endeavouring to secure immunity from Sabbath toil, and to gain that seventh-day rest and quiet which is the God-ordained right of every man, England is letting it slip rapidly from her grasp in favour of what The Daily Telegraph is pleased to call "the brighter foreign spirit." No one visiting our fashionable seaside resorts can help noting the Sabbath disregard manifested, not so much by the poor, hard-worked toilers of the week, as by the well-to-do. For these, special "Pullman" and first-class trains are run on every Sabbath day; for these, hotel-palaces are built; and it is for these, who have ample leisure all the week for "feasting, music, and dancing," that our contemporary pleads for the establishment of Sunday amusements. With such a lead it is little wonder that the working classes follow, though the spirit of unrest in them perforce takes different shape.

More than one correspondent complains of the uproar occasioned by the Sabbath processions and demonstrations for various objects which have of late been so frequent. They say that Divine service is interrupted, Sunday-schools and Bible-classes are depleted, and Christian work generally interfered with. To those who spend their lives in labouring for the spread of the Gospel in great cities, perhaps the most discouraging feature of these desecrations of the Lord's Day is that many of them are under the patronage of different churches, and even in some cases organised by those who themselves occupy a prominent position in religious work. We cannot but deplore the adoption of such methods, which do not promote the progress of the Gospel themselves, and prove a hindrance to efforts directed to the attainment of that end.

We regret to notice that during a somewhat excited debate in the Eastbourne Town Council with regard to the sale of newspapers on Sundays in that town, very much stress was laid, by those who objected to interference with the newsvendors, upon the fact that our contemporary the War Cry was sold in the streets on the Sabbath, and one of the Councillors stated that he had frequently spoken to members of the Salvation Army against the Sunday street sale of that paper. The matter seems to be one for the attention of General Booth, and we hope that instructions will be given for the Sabbath sale to be discontinued.

It has been announced in the daily journals that there is no truth in the statement that new edicts have been published against the Jews in Russia; and the Lord Mayor, believing from "inquiries in the highest quarters" that the dreaded edicts in question will not be promulgated, has decided for the present not to convene the intended public meeting on the subject. It would, however, be more satisfactory if we could be assured that no repressive measures whatever are contemplated, for in a letter to The Standard Mr. B. L. Cohen has pointed out that while the above disclaimer is too sweeping, at the same time his brethren in Russia have more to fear from the putting into operation of the "May Laws," promulgated in 1882, but never enforced until now.

By these, he states, all Jews, thousands of whom are earning a livelihood out of the soil, are to reside only in towns. Jews are forbidden access to the mines or mining factories, in which many thousands have hitherto been engaged, and the gymnasia and universities have received instructions to admit no more Israelites. Mr. Cohen has received letters from influential personages in Russia, describing "the boundless suffering and misery which will be endured by hundreds of thousands from the day the above measures are put into operation," and he pleads that the civilised governments of Europe should earnestly remonstrate with Russia against the inhumanity of these proceedings, which involve the lives of four millions of human beings.

The subject which has for the last ten days filled columns of newspapers, metropolitan and provincial, has been the death and funeral obsequies of Cardinal Newman. The seclusion of his life during recent years can convey little impression to the present generation of the prominence of his name, and his writings, between the years 1832 and 1845. He was a master of the English language, a renowned University preacher, an ascetic in religion, a courageous leader, a scholar of vast learning, and a dialectician without an equal. Therefore eulogies without end have been poured over his name.

A future historian will probably speak of Dr. Newman as one of the great historic figures during the Nineteenth Century. But he must add these things: that the most vigorous period of his life was spent in reviving the decayed interest of Englishmen in Roman Catholicism; that by his use, not of Scripture, but of ecclesiastical scholarship with its misty mazes, he was able to persuade multitudes that the Reformation, to which England dates the beginning of her greatness, was an historical mistake: that he did more than any other man to arrest the great Evangelical Revival of the second quarter of the century; that by his craving and pleas for an external dogmatic authority he did much to reconcile English opinions to the Roman Church, and largely broke down a long-standing distrust of its rites and practices; that consciously, or unconsciously (for none knew), his influence became powerful against liberty of thought and judgment, and in favour of complete prostration of intellect and conscience at the feet of a hierarchy. Unhappily, the historical notice will have to record that these things drove multitudes of the nation into unbelief, and that such was the laxity of opinion of the times that even Dissenters, whose creed was supposed to be the very Protestantism of the Protestant religion, slurred over what was anti-Scriptural in his teaching, and joined in the eulogies called forth by his death.

The spread of the habit of smoking in English society of all grades makes one wish for the adoption of some such measure as that quite recently taken by the New York City Council. This body has issued instructions to the Police Department strictly to enforce the new State law, which becomes operative on September 1, prohibiting boys under sixteen years of age from smoking cigarettes in the streets or other public places. Unfortunately, we have become so tolerant of the liberty of the subject that in only too many cases the comfort and convenience of a large number are sacrificed to the licence of a few. The habit of smoking is so deleterious, physically and morally, to our youths, that we see no reason why, in their own interest, some restrictions should not be placed upon it.

The annual reports of the various Missionary Societies and the British and Foreign Bible Society are at the present time being published, and it is much to be desired that they should be carefully studied. It would not be easy to find more interesting and stimulating reading. Time was when missions to the heathen relied much on sensational appeals, supported by the exhibition of idols, the narration of travels, and the description of heathen customs. Latterly the Divine authority for missions has been made prominent, and those who have thus sought to awaken the conscience of churches on the subject are receiving a very manifest reward. A "Thus saith the Lord," has not lost its authority among us.

A paper in the current number of The Churchman, entitled, "Significant Changes in English Judaism," gives details of the disintegrating and rationalising processes that are undermining modern Judaism. Eminent Jewish authorities are quoted as representing that, if Judaism is to continue, all that has hitherto made the Jews a distinct people must be swept away, and a "rational monotheism"—having little to distinguish it from Unitarianism—must be substituted. The advocates of what is known as the "reform movement" openly reject the belief in a personal Messiah and the renewal of the national life in Palestine, stigmatise the Old Testament miracles as mere allegory, and affirm that the bodily resurrection, prophecy, hell, and paradise, are obsolete theories. Nay more, the belief that Judaism was originally a God-given religion is discarded, and a natural religion is being openly preached; in short, nothing is left but a collection of negatives, the old landmarks are being swept away, and it is asserted that "Judaism will only have a future if the future has no Judaism."

True, this is a description of only a section of the community. If, however, the ancient fortress of Judaism is really beginning to give way, we agree with the writer when he pleads that the Church of Christ has now a unique opportunity, by means of missionary effort, to enter in and take possession. The picture has also its pleasanter side, for many very encouraging instances are quoted of the success of Christian work among this nation in various quarters, and we endorse the following appeal:—

> Is this a time for us (when God seems specially to have intervened) to fold our arms and do nothing? Shall we not rather listen to the whisper of the Divine Spirit, and take up the battle-cry of Israel's ancient leader, blow the trumpet of deliverance, and each man endeavour to "ascend up straight before him"? If we would only do this unitedly in the strength of the Lord, all difficulties would be speedily overcome, and the city would be taken; but to do it we want more enthusiasm, more of the spirit of the Master. Let us ask Him to pour out upon his Church a deeper interest in this great and blessed work!

A somewhat remarkable testimony to the extreme accuracy of the cosmology of the Book of Genesis appears in a paper from the pen of Mr. G. J. Romanes, published in the latest number of The Nineteenth Century. Of course, Mr. Romanes is not prepared to go to the length we should desire in dealing with his subject, but we are glad to find so full and frank an admission from his pen as that in which he points out that the early Biblical writers have displayed "a really wonderful degree of accuracy" in their observations of plants and animals, both in regard to morphology and habits and instincts. Mr. Romanes says:—

> In the enumeration of animals as clean and unclean, we must not neglect to notice the systematic observation which is displayed, and which, as far as it goes, is wonderfully true to nature. There is no imagery of any kind mixed up with the facts; the classification is throughout dictated by the true spirit of science; and it cannot be said to have been subsequently improved upon until the foundations of biology were laid by the commanding genius of Aristotle.

Perhaps, upon this testimony, we may be pardoned for asking Mr. Romanes whence came this knowledge so much in advance of the age?

Those Westerns who know most of Buddhism cannot be classed among its obtrusive apologists. Some have thought that Sir Edwin Arnold, the author of "The Light of Asia," must be at heart a devotee of the Oriental "Enlightened." He is not, however; for, in conversation with Rev. Dr. Ashmore, an American missionary to China, while on a voyage from San Franscisco to Yokohama, he said:—

> "The Light of Asia" is to be regarded simply as a poem. I have been criticised for an implied comparison between Buddhism and Christianity in regard to doctrines derived from them, and principles contained in them, respectively. No such object was in mind. For me, Christianity, rightly viewed, is the crown queen of religion, immensely superior to every other; and, though I am so great an admirer of much that is great in Hindu philosophy and religion, I would not give one verse of the Sermon on the Mount away for twenty epic poems like the Mahahharata, nor exchange the Golden Rule for twenty new Upanishads.

This is a welcome testimony. Yet, doubtless, we shall continue to hear of persons ignorant of true Christianity, and having but a little knowledge of Buddhism, declaring themselves converts to the doleful doctrines of Sakyamouni.

Letters on "Answered Prayer," recently appearing in our columns, have brought us several communications, all showing that God still gives ear to the cry of his children. Those who say in their heart, "There is no God," cannot be expected to see the gracious workings of Providence; but to such as fear Him God reveals his mercy, and makes light to shine even in the darkness of despair. The letters of our correspondents attest this great fact, which is only called in question by those who have no personal Christian experience. (1 John v. 14).

Armenian Christians are crying for deliverance from Turkish misrule. Details have been published of the horrible massacre at Erzeroum in June last, in which some twenty Armenians were butchered outright and a large number wounded. It is hardly possible for Christians to live under Mohammedan rule without having "grievances," and for some time past the Christians of Armenia have been at the mercy of wicked men, some in authority, and others beyond any restraint. While discussing their troubles in a peaceable manner, the Christians of Erzeroum were pounced upon by savage soldiery, and brutally bayonetted. Their property was ruthlessly destroyed, and terror spread on every hand. The recent experiences of this interesting people is a chapter of trial and woe, but we trust the way of deliverance will soon open to them.

The following is an extract from an article in the current number of The Church Monthly on "Horatius Bonar and his Hymns," which will doubtless be appreciated by all—and their name is legion—who have drawn comfort or hope from some or other of the touching verses of one of the Church's sweetest singers. After denoting one or two defects, e.g., occasional commonplaceness, narrowness of vision, or absence of the true poetic tone, and remarking that Dr. Bonar's "views are those of a Scotch Calvinistic evangelical and a millenarian"—by which description, however, we trust that the writer does not imply a covert disparagement—he says:—

> But he is a believer. He speaks of that which he knows; of Him whom he loves, and whom, God be praised, he now sees at last, for whose coming he longed and waited. And, therefore, his hymns have in them the power which belongs to one to whom to live was Christ....From first to last there is a unity about his work. He never imitated, never affected to be what he was not. He is always the Presbyterian, Bible-loving, uncompromising, unmistakable in his principles, his views, his very prejudices. But he is, more and more, the holy singer, inspired by the Spirit of Christ, steeped in love to Christ, at one with all, of all churches, who love and own the same Lord, "both theirs and ours".

One result of the development of the Anti-Semitic feeling in Middle and Eastern Europe will doubtless be a speedy colonisation of the Holy Land. In weariness and sorrow the eyes of many of God's ancient people are beginning to look towards Zion, and last week there was a crowded meeting of Jews in the Scotch Metropolis to consider the best means of forwarding the objects of the Colonisation Society, a large sum of money being subscribed in the room. Thus the enemies of the Lord who persecute Israel only serve to work out his Divine purposes.

THE THREE GARDENS.

BY REV. JAMES CULROSS, D.D.

THE GARDEN WHERE THEY LAID HIM.

V.—The Galilean Women

On the morning of the first day of the week the Galilean women, Mary Magdalene, the other Mary, Salome, Joanna, and others with them, impelled by love, set out to visit the sepulchre. The three Evangelists, Matthew, Mark, and Luke, give an account of this visit; the Evangelist John singles out Mary Magdalene and follows her movements. There is little or no difficulty in making out the sense of these accounts separately. The difficulty begins when we attempt to piece them together, so as to frame a complete and consistent narrative of the course of events. In these memoirs—for they are nothing more, as far removed as possible from the style of Gibbon or Macaulay—we recognise the fearless freedom and brevity of conscious truth that never dreams of being doubted. Every line is characterised by a clear, unstudied simplicity, which the cunningest art could not counterfeit. But the data supplied do not enable us to adjust the runnings to and fro, the lingerings, the crossing of paths, the scatterings and regatherings of that morning, so that the recorded particulars shall fall each into its proper place. Instead, therefore, of attempting to weave the four narratives into one, we may read first that of the Synoptics, and then that of the Evangelist John.

The purpose of the women was to embalm the body of Jesus. It shows how little they anticipated what they were about to find; how unwitting of the true state of the case. On their way they said one to another, "Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre?" How true to nature that is—no lofty sentiment, but plain, prosaic talk about the nearest practical difficulty! They do not appear to have known that the stone had been sealed, and a guard of Roman soldiers set, to prevent the removal of the body by stealth. That had been done after the women left on the crucifixion evening. By doing it the enemies of Jesus outwitted themselves, and barred the theory that the disciples had rifled the tomb.

What was their surprise, on reaching the place, to find the sepulchre open and empty! The first glance showed that there was no Christ there. Instantly, it would seem, Mary Magdalene hurried off to find Peter and John, if, indeed, as is more probable, she had not hurried on before the rest, and already left the place. The others lingered in amazed perplexity. Looking again into the dark tomb, lo, a radiant being becomes visible to them at the head where the Lord's body had lain. The Evangelist Luke mentions two angels, one at the head, the other at the feet; Matthew and Mark name only the one who spoke. Men of narrow, materialistic creed, to whom the five senses are the ultimate test of fact, have only a kind of pitying or sneering disdain for those who can believe such a "legend." But do our five senses tell us all that is in the universe? or all that is close by our side? May it not be that we need only opened eyes to discover that in the loneliest spot we are not alone? that the place is full of God? And if so, need we marvel at this visitation from the angel-world?

The angel appeared to the women, not terrible as he had appeared to the Roman soldiers, but mild and benign, as one of the ministering spirits sent forth to minister to the heirs of salvation; a young man—for there is no wrinkle on the brow of immortality—clothed in white, the radiant vesture of celestial purity.

The immediate effect on the women was fear. That was quite natural. They bowed down their faces to the earth, reverence mingling with fear. As they stood thus, the angel said, "Fear not ye; for I know that ye seek Jesus who was crucified: He is not here; He is risen as He said; come, see the place where the Lord lay; and go quickly, and tell his disciples that He is risen from the dead; and behold, He goeth before you into Galilee; there shall ye see Him; lo, I have told you." Mark gives the touching addition, "Tell his disciples and Peter"—Peter who denied that he knew Him, Peter who shed those bitter penitential tears. Luke reports the angel's question, "Why seek ye the living One among the dead?" and rehearses more fully what the other Evangelists only allude to: "He spake unto you, while He was yet in Galilee, saying, The Son of man must be delivered up and be crucified, and the third day rise again."

Their fears are allayed. Distinct assurance is given them that the Lord is living; and at the same time a gentle reproof is administered—He said that He would rise again, and that should have prepared you for the empty sepulchre. Let them make haste to impart the good news to the rest.

Immediately they depart. They ask no question, but go at once. They had come slowly and sorrowfully; they make haste in going; with winged feet "they did run to bring his disciples word." Their running was with fear and great joy, no impossible or strange combination. They could not as yet have explained their joy, even to themselves. It was not merely as when some dear one is given back to us from the very gates of death, though doubtless there was such an element in their joy. But all their great hopes revive again; light is shed on enigmas and mysteries that had formerly baffled them; the sun is risen; and at once both past and future assume a new aspect to them. As they think of the shameful tree, it begins to lose its horror; the event that seemed so black and calamitous becomes the very centre of glorious light.*

As they ran, Jesus Himself met them, and said, All hail!—rejoice all. This was his salutation to these loving hearts. In love and speechless gladness they clasped his feet and worshipped Him. Love understands it. As they held Him, He said, "Be not afraid; go, tell my brethren"—the angel had said, his disciples—"tell my brethren that they go into Galilee," dear Galilee, with its sweet memories and associations, "there shall they see Me." He has been in the awful worlds, but the disciples are still "my brethren," for neither death nor life can separate from his love.

* As in Doré's wonderfully imaginative picture, "Pilate's Wife's Dream," you see the horror in the foreground; while in the far distance the same cross round which the horror gathered, becomes the centre from which the glory radiates, and round which it burns.

Forest Gate.—Dear Sir,—A band for distributing tracts has been formed by some Christian lads in this district, and as there are no other tract distributors in our district, it is a splendid start. We are in great need of tracts to go on with, and shall be extremely obliged if your readers would help us.—Yours.

"THE NIGHT COMETH."

"The heathen have been redeemed and don't know it."—Rev. H. G. Guinness, D.D., at Keswick Convention, 1890.

The night is coming on apace, the gloaming has begun:
And threatening clouds are gathering round yon quickly setting sun. [where are they?—
The fields are white with ripening grain: the reapers—
The Lord commands, and still they sleep their precious time away. [long ago
The Lord Himself redeemed the world: and finished
His glorious work on Calvary; this millions do not know.
His last command on Olivet still rings in every ear;
And every Saint is bound to spread the tidings far and near; [undone!
Two thousand years have almost gone, the work is yet
And still thy saints are lingering here, the harvest scarce begun. [ripened grain, Thrust out thy saints by thousands, Lord, amid the
To gather all the harvest in from every fruitful plain.
Thy saints, endued with tongues of fire, with souls inflamed with love, [above,
And with thy Holy Spirit filled sent down from heaven
Thrust out, by thousands everywhere to call poor sinners home— [darkness roam.
Redeemed, though still they know it not, and yet in Awake! awake!! ye slumbering saints, his call do not refuse, [news.
Till all redeemed by Jesus' blood shall hear the glorious
Let India hear the news with joy—redemption through the blood; [ship only God.
Stretch out her blood-stained hands to heaven, and wor-
Let China's teeming millions learn of Calvary's bleeding love, [above.
And raise the shout across the sea, of praise to God
Let Africa's benighted land from sea to sea resound
With all the glad and joyful news that they their Lord have found. [love, Lord, send afar to southern seas thy messengers of Till all the coral islands ring with praise to God above.
Throughout the whole domain of earth thrust out thy reapers, Lord, [adored,
Till by all nations of the world thy name shall be
Then come, when all have heard the news, and o'er all nations reign,
Make all this lost and ruined world thine own bright world again; [to sea,
Thy sceptre sway from pole to pole, and reign from sea
All nations gather to thy feet, till all bow down to Thee.
Then Judah's sons, redeemed and saved, shall tell to all the world [furled.
The story of thy bleeding love with banner wide un-
Jerusalem shall be thy throne, all Israel's sons be blest;
Earth's pangs and groans for ever hushed in everlasting rest.

A CONVENTION FOR BOSTON.

Dear Sir,—Many of your readers are well aware that the clergy in Lincolnshire are holding forth the truth under very depressing circumstances, and that help is needed from their brethren for a spiritual awakening throughout the country.

Prayer will be made that our Father God may open the way for a Convention to be held in Boston about January, believing the place suggested would be central, and the time one of blessing. We earnestly believe this is God's work, and that a great outpouring of the Holy Spirit will be made. Oh, that God may be glorified in his Son!

All suggestions will be gratefully received, and help of any kind and the prayers of all readers of this journal are earnestly desired.

For further information please write at present to the undersigned.—I am, dear sir, yours gratefully,

Charles J. Small.

Brothertoft Hall, near Boston, Lincs.

"LIFE AND WORK" (1d. Publication offices of the Church of Scotland, Edinburgh) is a monthly magazine exercising a wide and wholesome influence. The last two issues have included in their contents a story, "Lissa," from the pen of a well-known author, written to promote interest in the anti-slavery cause. These chapters have depicted the horrible traffic in a manner calculated to stimulate exertion to promote the emancipation of those in bondage, and the enlightenment of those who are sitting in spiritual darkness.

Differences in the Gospels.

By Rev. A. MOODY-STUART, D.D.

THE MIRACLE AT JERICHO.

Matt. xx. 29-34; Mark x. 46-52; Luke xviii. 35, xix. 10.

In the narrative of our Lord passing through Jericho on his last journey to Jerusalem, St. Matthew records the healing of two blind men, while St. Mark and St. Luke speak only of one. But in this variation there is no real difficulty. The blind man spoken of by Mark is mentioned by his own name and his father's, as well known in the town, so that, if another unknown was associated with him, he might naturally enough be omitted in the narrative; and all the more if Bartimeus took the lead in the cry for help, in strength of faith, in loudness of entreaty, and in perseverance through discouragement.

But the ascription of the miracle by one Evangelist to our Lord's drawing nigh to Jericho, and by the others to his going out of it, is the most noted difference in the Gospels; and more than any other has given occasion to many different solutions from our imperfect knowledge of all the circumstances. It has been suggested that St. Luke's expression, "as He was come nigh," or "as He drew nigh" (R.V.), may only mean "as He was nigh"—(Schleusner); but this seems to lack sufficient proof. Some have supposed two separate miracles, one before Christ's entrance into the town, and the other after leaving it. But the sameness of the cry to the Son of David for mercy is against this supposition; and it is out of all likelihood that after Christ had healed one suppliant the multitude should again charge another to refrain from asking mercy. Another solution has been offered by referring to Old and New Jericho, and supposing that the cure took place in the space between the two, when Jesus was going out of the one town and into the other; but this seems rather a strained explanation, and one scarcely to be adopted, except in the failure of every other. Out of the many reconciliations that have been offered, the most reasonable appears to be that which is suggested by Calvin, who says, "My conjecture is that while Christ was approaching the city the blind man cried out; but that because on account of the noise, that he went away to the other gate by which Christ was to go out, to wait for Him there in the road," and meanwhile he supposes that he was joined by another blind man who was healed along with him.

All these adjustments, however, overlook one difference of detail in St. Luke's narrative, which has been thought too minute to be taken into account, but which must be held to throw light on the combined narrative. St. Matthew says, that "as they departed out of Jericho a great multitude followed Him"; and that when the blind men cried to Jesus for mercy "the multitude rebuked them"; a most reprehensible harshness, yet for which they had the palliation of Christ's own silence and apparent unwillingness to be disturbed. But St. Luke says that in approaching the city, when the blind man cried for mercy, "they which went before rebuked him"; which is much more unaccountable and scarcely credible, because, when Christ had not yet come forward to where the blind man sat, they could have seen no indication of a desire on his part to refrain from his usual promptness in hearing every cry for relief. In his last journey from Galilee, in which "Christ steadfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem," a special importance is definitely attached to his position in relation to his followers. Before approaching Jericho, St. Mark gives a remarkable description of the awe with which they followed the Lord, and of his resolved attitude in front of them: "And they were in the way going up to Jerusalem; and Jesus went before them: and they were amazed; and as they followed, they were afraid" (x. 32). When they had come to Jericho, and are going out of it, St. Matthew says that "a great multitude followed Him," and when they are leaving the house of Zaccheus, St. Luke still markedly assigns the same attitude to Christ: "And when He had thus spoken, He went before, ascending up to Jerusalem" (xix. 28).

> The Saviour, what a noble flame
> Was kindled in his breast,
> When, hasting to Jerusalem,
> He marched before the rest.
>
> With all his suffering full in view,
> And woes to us unknown;
> Forth to the task his spirit flew;
> 'Twas love that urged Him on.—Cowper.

As the only parallel to St. Luke's expression of the people "going before" in the approach to Jericho, we are referred to "the multitudes that went before and that followed" the Lord Jesus in his lowly triumph in the descent of the Mount of Olives (Matt. xxi. 9; Mark xi. 9). For a natural and beautiful solution of this double attitude of the crowd we are indebted to Dean Stanley, as quoted by Dr. Cunningham Geikie in the "Holy Land and the Bible." "Two streams of people met as He advanced. The one poured out from the city, and moved toward Bethany with loud shouts of welcome. From Bethany streamed forth the crowds who had assembled there the previous night. The two streams met midway. Half of the mass, turning round, preceded; the other half followed." It is instructive to note, as an example of the fruit of searching and comparing the Scriptures, that St. Matthew and St. Mark, who both take note of the people "that went before and that followed," make no mention of those who came out from Jerusalem; while St. John, who records this fact (xii. 12), says nothing of their going before and following. If we have reason to conclude that there was a similar reversion of the people coming out of Jericho, we shall find at once the explanation of their going "before," and of the whole difficulty of the miracle of healing being assigned both to the approach to the town and the exit from it; and it is evident that, when Jesus turned his face again toward Jericho at the sycamore tree, the people who "followed" Him out of the city must have gone "before" Him in returning. A mingled crowd going before and after a distinguished leader is natural enough; but in the last journey to Jerusalem this never occurs; for in the approach to Jerusalem the crowd is double. A single crowd following is also natural; but a crowd before their leader with none following is unnatural, and surely unexampled, except by the crowd that is following being reversed.

It is not controverted that the cure was effected outside the walls, and it is clear that Bartimeus sat by the wayside on the road to Jerusalem on which Jesus was journeying, a much-frequented road, and favourable for those who were asking alms. The sycamore tree which Zaccheus climbed must have been on the same road, and probably not far from the same spot; for the idea entertained by some that the tree was within the walls has nothing to support it.

THE WHOLE CAST OF THE NARRATIVE

indicates that the tree was on the road to Jerusalem along which Jesus went on leaving Jericho. Zaccheus may probably have been at the receipt of custom in the city when Jesus passed through it, but he could not come near Him on account of the crowd; and, to make sure of seeing Him, he laid aside his dignity and "ran before" on the way by which Jesus was to go. The words "ran before" are emphatic, the idea being twice expressed "ran forward before," or, as in the Revised Version, "ran on before," intimating that he did not merely get in front of the crowd, but "ran on" some distance for a suitable watch-tower. This he found in the sycamore tree, and Bartimeus sitting by the wayside in the hope of receiving charity. and Zaccheus hid among the leafy branches of the tree, may have occupied positions not far removed from each other. It has been supposed by many that the house of Zaccheus was in the city; but by others, as Alford, that it was outside the walls, which harmonises with the interesting observation of Hepworth Dixon, that "Jesus never slept in a walled town." His love of freedom to retire into "a solitary place" for prayer may have been a concurring though subordinate motive for selecting the house of Zaccheus for his stay that night, and passing through Jericho in quest of this lodging without the walls; which, indeed, ought never to have been rebuilt after He had thrown them down by the word of his power as "Captain of the Lord's host." But, whether his house was in the town, or, more probably, beyond its walls, this chief of the publicans, after "running on before," would "draw nigh to Jericho" in conducting Jesus to his house.

The whole transaction may have taken this form. After coming out of Jericho, our Lord would first of all come up to Bartimeus with his comrade on the wayside; and may soon after have "come to the place" where the chief of the publicans has taken his position. As soon as Bartimeus hears of Jesus passing by, "he begins to cry out" to the Son of David for mercy; but he receives no answer, and Jesus walks on, hearing and compassionating, yet seeming to give no heed to his distress. But He reaches the sycamore tree, He "looks up" for Zaccheus, whose case lies deep in the heart of the omnipotent Saviour as in need of mercy above most others. He has now found the "lost" one whom He has come expressly "to seek and to save," and from whom He will suffer no other to withdraw his attention, till He has called him to Himself. The silence and apparent neglect of Jesus only increase the intensity and the loudness of the blind suppliant's cry; and singularly verifies our Lord's words, "Blessed are they who have not seen, and yet have believed." In no sense could he see what he so desired, yet his faith holds on to the end. In speaking to Zaccheus Christ may still be within reach of his voice, for an Eastern beggar can make his cry to be heard at an amazing distance; he must now be encouraged by the stopping of the crowd, without knowing its cause; and his revived hope must be heightened to expectation when he hears them turning and "passing by" again. The crowd on their part now rebuke him the more sharply, having more reason to conclude that Jesus has no desire at present to take up his case; and perhaps thinking that, after begging so long and living by it, he might still be content with his infirmity. The "great multitude that followed" Jesus out of Jericho is now inverted as He draws nigh to it again, and it is "they which go before" that now rebuke him to hold his peace, which he never does till he hears from them the welcome words, "Rise, He calleth thee."

The two recorded incidents may or may not have taken the form now sketched; but it is certain that Christ, after finding Zaccheus, returned with him toward Jericho, and that the crowd which had been "following" must now have gone "before" our Lord. The two other Evangelists omit altogether the history of Zaccheus, probably because in his case there was no healing of disease, and no outward sign or miracle. But with Luke it is the leading event at Jericho, which he indicates by introducing it with the words: "And, behold, there was a man named Zaccheus." When "Jesus entered and passed through Jericho," it was only to return immediately with his host, to find whom was his object in passing through the city. He cannot there have passed the house of Zaccheus, else the roof of the house would have been a more convenient post of observation than the sycamore tree; and in the city He works no miracle, and utters no words of wisdom to the people as He afterwards does so fully at the house of Zaccheus, but fixedly travels on as if on his way to Jerusalem. But the moment He has found Zaccheus, He turns to "draw nigh to Jericho," as if for the first time; as it was indeed the first time that He drew near to the city to stay there; for whatever He has done hitherto has only been to find the host with whom He has chosen to lodge.

In the previous chapter the Evangelist has recorded our Lord's saying that, "It is easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God"; and now, in the heart, in the life, and in the house of this man, "rich," and through ill-gotten gains, the Lord is to make good his accompanying words, that "the things which are impossible with men are possible with God."

In the greatness of the event, it is likewise to be noted that Jesus does not say to Zaccheus simply that He will abide at his house, but says, "I must" abide; not by a mere preference of his house to any other, but by a blessed Divine necessity. This calling of Zaccheus and abiding with him was a link in the great chain of salvation; a certain forecast of that other blessed necessity: "Other sheep I have which are not of this fold, them also I must bring"; for, although he was not a Gentile, but a Jew, yet, as a Roman tax-gatherer he was greatly despised by the Jews, who "all murmured that He was gone to be guest with a man who was a sinner." It was his gracious abiding in the house of the chief of the publicans that made it a necessity for Jesus to pass through Jericho so hastily.

But after He had found his host, what further need was there for haste? It was indeed, most fitting for Zaccheus, in answer to the gracious and unexpected call of Christ, to "make haste and come down" and receive Him "joyfully"; but we naturally ask why our Lord should have bidden him to "make haste" in order to receive Him. There is no intimation that the day was far spent, or other apparent reason for haste now on the part of our Lord; but, if our conjecture is right about the position of Bartimeus, the reason is clear. If his eyesight had been imploringly asked and not yet granted, because Christ's "must be" had not yet been attained, our Lord could not but be deeply moved by the entreaties against which He had closed his ears.

HIS HEART MUST HAVE YEARNED

all the while over those cries for mercy; and now that He is free to grant it He will not be detained a moment longer, and bids Zaccheus to "make haste" to come down.

The explanation we have given of the blind man receiving his sight as Christ drew nigh to Jericho, according to St. Luke, whilst at the same time it took place after He had first passed through the town, is not founded on a gratuitous assumption for the sake of reconciling the different Evangelists; but is strictly required to keep his account of the miracle in accord with his own narrative and that of the other Gospels in describing the Lord's last journey to Jerusalem, which necessitates this interpretation of his account of the miracle, quite irrespectively of any reconciliation with the other accounts.

To the difficulty of St. Luke introducing the case of the blind man before that of Zaccheus it is a sufficient answer that it is common in the Scriptures to narrate separately two events that are interwoven; that if our conception is right, his case really preceded the other, both in its commencement and its close; and that it would have been less suitable to have placed it at the end of Christ's teaching at the house of Zaccheus (xix. 28). "It is characteristic of St. Luke's style to save space by collecting and condensing notices of connected events. He thus clears off the history of John the Baptist's public ministry before he commences that of our Lord" (Speaker's Commentary, Luke iii. 19). In this way he records John's imprisonment before Christ's baptism, which is a more marked instance of separating interwoven histories than in the events at Jericho.

The quite consistent variation that is inevitable in the narration of the same event by independent witnesses only confirms the truth of their testimony; and the labour of clearing any measure of obscurity occasioned by the difference is amply rewarded by the profitable and most attractive exercise of "searching the Scriptures," in the full confidence that they are all the work of the Holy Spirit, and that "the words of the wise" are not the merely individual utterances of holy men, but "nails fastened" in the Divinely constructed tent, and all given by "One Shepherd." The inimitable charm and unfailing interest of the Biblical histories are often due in part to the brevity and abruptness by which the inspired writers record, in a natural and vivid narrative, many great and instructive events in the compass of a few chapters.

Romanism in America.

DEAR SIR,—An editorial note in THE CHRISTIAN of June 6 refers to the seeming growth of Romanism in the United States. As there is a diversity of opinion as to the Roman Catholic population of this country, I have been at some pains to get at the actual facts. The Catholic Directory published here gives the Roman Catholic population for the year 1890 as 8,301,367, but the Roman Catholic Bishops and journalists, without exception, say this is too low. At the Catholic Congress held in Baltimore last November, Cardinal Gibbons said in his Pastoral Letter; "When Bishop Carroll (the first Catholic Bishop in the United States) was consecrated in 1790, the entire population of the United States was 4,000,000, and the Roman Catholic population was estimated at 40,000. Now the population of the United States has grown to 65,000,000, and of this number there is a Catholic population of 9,000,000."

A souvenir volume of this Congress and of the Centennial Celebration of the establishment of the Roman Catholic Hierarchy in the United States, has been recently published, wherein it is stated by the Editor that there are "from ten to twelve millions of Roman Catholics in the United States." In June, 1889, a Roman Catholic journalist, in a long communication to the New York Independent, said there were 12,000,000, classified as follows:—

Irish and their descendants	7,000,000
German and their descendants.....	3,000,000
Other nationalities.....	2,000,000

This gentleman showed by statistics that if all the Roman Catholics who had come to the United States, and their descendants, had continued faithful to the teachings of Rome, there would be now 22,000,000 Roman Catholics in this country. "In short," he adds, "there are about 10,000,000 people walking around in the United States who ought to belong to the Roman Catholic Church, but the vast majority of whom have gone to swell the army of indifferentists and infidels."

As a good Romanist, this journalist, who had been the editor of Cardinal Gibbons' official paper in Baltimore, omits to state that a majority of those "lost" ten millions could be found among the members of the various Protestant churches. During the last seven years I have published in The Converted Catholic the testimonies of 1,400 converts from Rome, who, in recent years, not only renounced the Roman faith, but united with Protestant churches of various denominations. It was my privilege, personally, to lead a majority of these converts into a knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus.

A statement to which I am inclined to give much weight, is found in the experience of an Australian Bishop who recently visited this country—Dr. Murray, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Maitland. When he returned home he delivered a lecture in Launceston, Tasmania, March 16, 1890, which was reported in the Colonist of that town. Remarking that the Catholic population of the United States had been estimated at 12,000,000, some even holding it to be 20,000,000, he said: Cardinal Gibbons has given the number at 9,000,000. He would go between the lines and say they numbered 10,000,000. He added that the statement made several years ago that 7,000,000 of the Irish exile Catholics had "fallen away" from the church in America had been verified, and during his visit to the country he made inquiries which led him to believe that the more probable number was 10,000,000.

The Bishop, like his American confrères, blames the public schools for this "loss," and said it was "a mistaken idea that the faith of the Irish Catholics would stand all through a course of secular education." As in France, Italy, and Spain, the intelligent Catholics in the United States are losing faith in the doctrines of Rome; they cannot believe in the childish superstitions of their parents; nor will they accept dictation from Rome in political and religious matters, except in so far as the politics of Rome will benefit them, by enabling them to obtain municipal office and Government employment.

Tens of thousands of Romanists in this city alone are merely nominal Catholics. They go to Mass occasionally, and contribute to the treasury of the church; but there is no spiritual life in them, even in the Roman sense, meagre and misty as that is. There is a great field here for evangelical work among the Roman Catholics, and a wide door has been opened by the lectures of Father Edward McGlynn, who is unsparing in his denunciations of Popes and Bishops, who constitute the Roman "ecclesiastical machine." The various Protestant Churches cannot undertake the work as ecclesiastical bodies. It must be done by independent workers. One great difficulty that lies in the way is that while anti-Papal lectures that expose and denounce the whole Roman system command attention and afford support to the lecturers, the preachers of the Gospel to the Catholics are hampered and hindered by lack of means. I have received many priests out of the Church of Rome during the last ten years, but they will not enter upon the unsalaried work of evangelizing the Catholics.

My heart's desire and prayer to God is that the way will be opened for converted priests and other capable converts from Rome to devote themselves to this work. Protestant ministers and public men can watch Rome, and oppose and denounce her policy and politics. Former priests, if converted to Christ, should be set to work to present the simple way of salvation to the Catholic people. In conclusion, permit me to express my thankfulness for the work of Rev. Thomas Connellan in Ireland. He seems to have the right spirit and consecration for a great work among his countrymen. Is there no former priest in England who will do a similar work?—Very truly yours,

JAMES A. O'CONNOR.

Bible House, New York.

"ECHOES OF SERVICE" (1d. Hawkins).—Those who would be abreast of the varied mission activity of our time should not overlook this monthly record of labour for the Lord in many lands. The August issue contains letters from (among other places) Spain, China, Central Africa, British Guiana, and the Argentine Republic. Mr. J. H. L. Ewen, writing from Dolores, in the last-named country, says: "The editor of the newspaper was very friendly, and last week inserted a very favourable notice of our Bible carriage, and spoke well respecting our work. I am sorry to say that he has just been shot dead. The priests will probably rejoice over it. Sometimes we are reminded of the danger incurred by speaking so plainly of the false religion in the open street. But we must be plain, and tell the poor benighted people the whole truth, come what will. The confidence of not a few is shaken regarding the priests and their teachings; and this is often th first step towards Christ."

The Lord our Inheritance:

BIBLE-READING AT KESWICK.

By Rev. HUBERT BROOKE.

Read Deut. xviii. 6-8. We now leave behind the limitations of God in the wilderness, and the discouragements of the land, that have occupied us on the last two mornings; here is the climax. Here is a message to those in the land, who have planted their foot on the broad firm surface of the promise of their glorious inheritance in Christ, and are looking round to see what God means them to do there.

The words of this passage are spoken of Levi. That is a significant name—meaning "joined"—a title peculiarly belonging to all who have believed in the Lord Jesus: "the sons of the stranger" (those not belonging to Israel by natural birth) "that to serve Him and to love the name of the Lord" (Isa. lvi. 6). Here is an Old Testament description of a New Testament saint. "Many nations shall be joined to the Lord in that day" (Zech. ii. 11). "He that is joined to the Lord is one spirit" (1 Cor. vi. 16). "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." So here is a direct message to every believer in the Lord Jesus Christ.

Lest there should be any uncertainty about it, look at some other passages showing Levi as a type of those who became joined to the Lord. "Simeon and Levi are brethren; instruments of cruelty are in their habitations" (Gen. xlix. 5). See also ver. 7. So that those who have become joined to the Lord, were people of cruelty and wrath by nature. In Eph. ii. 2, you will also recognise how like they are to our own character by nature: "Ye once walked according to the course of this world." Read also Ex. xxxii. 6, 26. Levi, like the rest of Israel, went after the golden calf, but at the call of Moses they came out and consecrated themselves. So the tribe of Levi (Deut. x. 8). Then He gave them work to do, and put before them the prospect of a closer knowledge, a grander experience, and a fuller life than they would ever have known if they had not thus joined themselves unto the Lord.

THE LORD SEPARATED UNTO HIMSELF

So the first disciples were already joined to the Master, as such, before He called them out to service with Him: "If any man will come after Me, &c." (Matt. xvi. 24); "If thou wilt be perfect (full grown)...come and follow Me." Also Matt. xx. 26—27; John xii. 26. We have a corresponding Old Testament passage in our text, Deut xviii. 6—8; ver. 6 tells of the Levites' choice by the Lord, ver. 7 of his service, and ver. 8 of his reward.

"From any of thy gates where he sojourned." A sojourner is a man who turns aside and dwells in a country not his own; so he is a picture of every believer. "Ye are strangers and sojourners with me" (Lev. xxv. 23), see 1 Pet. ii. 11. We, as Christians, are nothing more than sojourners at the best. Many of us have got so accustomed to our tents, our homes, that

WE FORGET WE ARE BUT SOJOURNERS.

"With all the desire of his mind." That is how the Levite was to come from his place. "My soul longeth for the courts of the Lord" (Ps. lxxxiv. 2). "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy soul." We are not to fix some of our heart's longings on our tent at home, and say, "I will serve here, and keep the tent too." Hear what Isaiah says about it, speaking of all those who are trusting in the Lord and are kept in perfect peace: "With my soul have I desired thee in the night; yea, with my spirit within me will I seek thee early" (xxvi. 9). Again in verse 8, "The desire of our soul is to thy name, and to the remembrance of Thee." If we know a little of the Lord, that little ought to encourage us to know more; and the more we know the more we shall want to know. Let us take Him as our inheritance, and begin to possess Him.

Then the Levite was to come to the place which the Lord should choose. This choosing by the Lord is mentioned twenty-two times in Deuteronomy. There is a remarkable passage in chap. xii. 5, "Unto the place which the Lord your God shall choose out of all your tribes to put his name there, even unto his habitation shall ye seek." That is the thing—it is the Lord's habitation, the place where he makes Himself known as perpetually dwelling in us. It is not at Jerusalem any more, nor at Samaria, nor of necessity at Keswick, nor in England, nor anywhere else. It is like the place promised in John xii. "Where I am." With that promise we can go all over the world. Every place is the house of God if you are where the Lord is. It is a movable tent, but the Lord is the covering all the time. Do you want to go to the place which the Lord has chosen for you, and where you will find Him with you always? If you do, the Lord is willing to take you there, and undoubtedly He will give you opportunities of service there that you cannot possibly have in any other place in the world. I remember hearing Pastor Monod quote the last verse of 1 Kings xix., where it says that Elisha arose and went after Elijah and ministered unto him. Of course, said the Pastor, he could not minister to him unless he went with him. So here we read with respect to the Levite who came to the place that the Lord chose: "There he shall minister in the name of the Lord his God." In 1 Chronicles xxiii. we have an interesting description of the way in which the priests' time was divided. They were arranged in twenty-four courses, and once a-year they had to take their turn in going to Jerusalem on special service in connection with Aaron himself. Their term of this service was a fortnight, just about the length of time for which you have taken lodgings at Keswick. Many of us have come here with one great purpose—to get near to our Aaron, the Lord Jesus Christ.

WITH ALL THE DESIRE OF YOUR SOUL

In Deut. x. 8, we are told that the Lord separated Levi to stand before the Lord, to minister unto Him, and to bear the ark of the covenant.

THIS IS THE MINISTRY

that lies before every soul joined to the Lord.

What kind of service was it? "As all his brethren the Levites do." In Rev. xix. we see what wonderful brethren are ours: "I fell at his feet to worship him. And he said unto me: See thou do it not; I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus." And again in chap. xxii: "I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel. And he said, I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren, the prophets." This is angelic service, before the wings have begun to sprout. Thy brethren are angels, yet they call themselves brethren. "Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister to the heirs of salvation?"

What is to be their reward? Here is a wonderful thing to close with. "They shall have like portions to eat, besides that which cometh of the sale of his patrimony." It is grand to eat angels' food because we are doing angelic service. It may be humble service, but if it be in the place the Lord has chosen, it is angels' service.

What sort of "portions" do we have? What kind of food does the Lord spread for those who stand before Him, and minister to his people? "They shall be abundantly satisfied with the fatness of thy house." Some of the Lord's people are so far off from his house that they cannot be satisfied. "Abundantly satisfied." We read of men who sat down with the Lord Jesus and they did eat and were filled—they could not take any more. "Blessed is the man whom thou choosest and causest to approach that he may dwell in thy courts" (where the Lord is). Now the Psalmist changes the word "man" into "we"—"We shall be satisfied with the goodness of thy house, even of thy holy temple." Shall we do the same thing, and appropriate to ourselves the blessing that God would give to us? Here is a real picture of a satisfied soul—

NOT SELF-SATISFIED, BUT GOD-SATISFIED.

But there is something more; as if we had not got enough in being satisfied with the goodness of the Lord's house. "Besides that which cometh from the sale of his patrimony." What does that mean? We read in Mark x. 21, that Jesus said to one who wished to follow Him that he must go and sell his patrimony. We have got different sorts of patrimony—not always grand possessions. "Sell and give to the poor." This young man was sad, and went away grieved instead of rejoicing. Does some one say, as said Peter (ver. 28), "We have left all and followed Thee"? How many Peters are there here to-day, who with all the desire of their mind can say that they have held their possessions as lightly as Peter held his ship and his nets? What does our Lord reply to Peter? "There is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for My sake, and the Gospel's, but he shall receive an hundred-fold now in this time." Here is the place to put your money at interest. One said, speaking of this, that the Lord gives 100 per cent. interest, but a banker replied, "No, you make a mistake; it is —a hundred for every one invested." "In this time." We get the use of our patrimony here, besides the glorious certainty of life eternal in the world to come.

TEN THOUSAND PER CENT

And all this on one simple condition—that we come to the place which the Lord shall choose, with the desire of our heart, and serve Him in that place.

AMONG FRENCH CANADIANS.

The Salvation Army has two halls in Montreal, and one in Quebec, as well as one at St. John's, P. Q. In connection with these halls about twenty-five meetings are held every week. The immediate responsibility of oversight, and the expenses incidental thereto, fall upon Mr. and Mrs. (Staff-Captains) Simco, both endowed with gifts as preachers of the Word, and eminently qualified for their post of duty in the Master's service by a long experience in similar work in France and Switzerland.

"An Outsider," writing recently in The Montreal Daily Witness, says: "It will be difficult to find a more consecrated and heroic band of disciples of Christ than those now engaged as officers in the French work in this province. Not only are they characterised by a lofty devotion to the Divine Master, but they exhibit great tact, and a most winsome spirit, at all times abounding in prayer. The ignorance among the French Canadians of a Gospel which can alone give spiritual life, is something appalling. The hardest part of the contest in this province is not with a mere spirit of lawlessness among the rough and degraded classes of society, but with the spirit of Antichrist ruling in power and occupying high positions. Wherever any are found engaged in lifting up Christ as the sole sacrifice for sinners, there the enemies of the Cross are at work, secretly and powerfully, to throw obstacles in the way, and hide from view the efficacy of the one sacrifice for sinners, and the fulness and freedom of the deliverance offered." Staff-Captain Simco is at present in England. His address is 6, Windsor-road, Forest Gate, London, E.

The Isle of Man.

OPEN-AIR ACTIVITY.

For many years I have had a strong desire to visit the Isle of Man, that mountainous ridge, set like a gem in the Irish Sea.

The fame of Bishop Rowley Hill made me long to visit this island. He belonged to the noble band of open-air preachers, and his Sunday afternoon service on Douglas Head was so renowned that I determined to see it for myself. But the good Bishop was gathered home, and my purpose remained in abeyance. Then I heard that his successor, Bishop Bardsley, continued the meeting, and my desire revived. So after paying my thirtieth annual visit to Lancaster in the interests of the Open-Air Mission, I sailed in a crowded steamer from Barrow to Douglas.

It was easy to note that the meeting I had come to witness was of some importance; for one of the first placards seen on landing on the pier related to it. My curiosity was further excited by the advertisements in the newspapers of the island. So at last I found myself in the stream of people slowly climbing Douglas Head on their way to the place of assembly. This was on a slope facing the sea, and protected above by a castellated building used for an hotel. Some of the people leaned against the walls of this building, but the bulk of them reclined or stood on the grossy slope, in full view of the sea which forms

A MINIATURE BAY OF NAPLES.

A space was reserved by the police for the preacher and his helpers. In the centre of this space was a table which served as a pulpit.

I was considerably disappointed to find that the Bishop was not to preach. He reserves the Sundays in August for this purpose; but a sharp attack of pleurisy had driven him abroad for rest and change. His place was supplied by Rev. Canon Bardsley, vicar of Bradford, who delivered a very interesting discourse from James i. 25., about the law of liberty and its fruits. But the people who settled down to listen were not so many as I had been led to expect. It was a fine crowd, and probably numbered from 1,000 to 1,500; but thousands more were aimlessly wandering over the Head, and were not attracted within the charmed circle. The sermon was good, though possibly a more direct, personal, rousing style would have compelled a still larger number to listen.

But a service which absorbed me much more completely, was held in the forenoon in the churchyard of Kirk Braddan, about two miles from Douglas. It is utterly impossible to say how many were present, but at a modest computation there must have been 3,000. The road from Douglas was thick with pedestrians, who poured into the churchyard till it could hold no more. The adjoining new church, which seats a thousand people, was also crowded at the same time.

At eleven o'clock, the Vicar, Rev. F. J. Moore, mounted a granite slab in front of which was carved:—

"Here William Drury, forty years Vicar of Braddan, preached the Word of God. Born 1808. Died 1887."

So that the present vicar inherits the work of his predecessor as an open-air preacher. He is a well-built man, with florid complexion and grey hair. He wore a college cap, and preached in his surplice. His text was John xvii. 11, "And now I am no more in the world," &c. At first sight it did not look like an open-air text, but I soon discovered that we were in the presence of an evangelical preacher who knew how to apply the word of God both to saints and sinners. To a churchyard audience, standing and sitting on the gravestones of buried generations extending back nine hundred years, it was easy to enforce the first truth of soon being no more in the world. Then came the searching question. Should we be able to say, "I come to Thee"? The basis of a Christian's hope was clearly laid down, and the preacher, having a good voice, would be heard by the great majority of his large congregation.

I have observed that the preacher was Evangelical. This was further proved by a little incident. During the saying of the general confession a party at some distance to the preacher's right made itself conspicuous by intoning the words. Later on, when he came to the Apostle's creed, Mr. Moore remarked, "We will say it," casting a significant glance at the ritualistic party. This had the desired effect, and the creed was said.

Such faithful preaching cannot fail to be a blessing to many of the visitors to this picturesque island.

I forbear to attempt further description; but I also witnessed other open-air meetings in Douglas by the Salvation Army, the Baptists, and others; while, on Monday, the Church of England Temperance Society held a meeting on the beach. On the other hand, the caterers for pleasure are superabundant, and Sunday drinking and general disregard of the Lord's Day are painfully conspicuous, consequent upon so large an influx of visitors.

The Opium Curse.

A large amount of publicity has recently been given in this country to the appeals of Chinese Christians to their English brethren in Christ, to aid by every means in their power the movement for the removal of the terrible opium curse from China. An equally pathetic appeal now reaches us from a Chinese non-Christian newspaper, published at Shanghai, and sympathetically reproduced by a similar paper at Singapore. The Shanghai Shen Pau says —

"Alas! Opium greatly injures man. It injures his body and it injures his soul. It injures the victim himself, and injures his descendants to a great extent. Therefore Chinese see that opium, gambling, and uncleanness are one and the same, and we have observed that of gambling, uncleanness, and opium, this last is the worst. When in former years we heard that in Great Britain some leading men intended to make a law to prohibit opium, and that the Parliament would decide that opium should not be sent to China, Chinamen everywhere greatly rejoiced, thinking, as they said: 'The opium-curse is about to be swept away.'

"But who knows but that the prohibition which was not carried out on the former occasion, may now through this present petition with so many signatures, and among those who have signed many Indian missionaries, and by the mercy of the highest Lord have a favourable opportunity granted for its final accomplishment. The discussion on the prohibition of opium is of the highest importance. We hear that some Western people say 'opium is a benefit.' Most certainly they do not know that those who smoke, and those who have smoked and tried to give it up, all know it to be a most injurious thing to them.

THE SMOKERS CURSE THE HABIT;

they smoke every mouthful resolving to give it up, but do not do so; on the other hand, they at last excuse themselves by saying it is their fate, and charge it upon the friends who first led them astray. They curse the sellers of the opium, and when those who do not smoke, and those who have broken from the habit, speak of the proportion of those who succeed in breaking it off, they say it is only one or two in a hundred.

"Opium is the great curse of China, and Great Britain must not, for a comparatively small revenue, take opium to China to ruin the Chinese—for the benefit of others, or for the benefit of themselves. Britain wounds herself in wounding others. Although India raises the opium crop for the purpose of sale in China, the Indians now themselves are using it, and it is feared that before long those that use it will be very numerous. It becomes Britain, in view of this another dreadful prospect, to realise the saying which is true 'that to injure others is to injure ourselves.' If prohibition took place at once, and opium was not cultivated in India, no doubt it would cause inconvenience there to some extent for a time; but it would not injure Great Britain, because China would buy other goods, so that prohibition would not hurt Great Britain, and would be a great blessing to China.

"With a loud and united voice let us call out and plead with the officials of Great Britain in the hope that they who have a fellow-feeling with the hearts of many, will make a prohibition law forthwith in sympathy with God, the true Spirit, who loves men. This curse in its beginning came mostly from Great Britain, and many Christians hope this curse is about to be swept away by Great Britain. We will always pray for God's true Spirit to come and help Great Britain and China to sweep away this curse, which will be a cause of great rejoicing."

A MONSTROUS NATIONAL CRIME.

The Society of Friends in Leinster province, Ireland, have spoken upon the traffic with wisdom and vigour. At a recent aggregate meeting the following minute was adopted, and a copy ordered to be sent to each member of the Cabinet;—"In view of the terrible evils resulting from the opium traffic in India, Burmah, and China, this meeting regards the policy pursued by the British Government towards our fellow-subjects and the Chinese in this matter as absolutely unjust and iniquitous, and as nothing short of a monstrous national crime against both God and man. The continuance of this traffic we look upon as a standing menace to the success of all Missionary efforts for the spread of the Gospel, and we maintain that no considerations of revenue ought to be allowed to interfere with its immediate and total abandonment. As a section of the Christian Church we therefore desire to urge upon the Government the necessity of taking steps to sever its connection completely with this traffic without further delay." Other religious bodies might advantageously follow the example of the Leinster Friends.

The Temperance Cause.

At the Wesleyan Conference, Bristol, Bishop Warren, of the Methodist Episcopal Church of America, said "that not one of the 15,000 ministers of the denomination is a drinker of intoxicating drinks."

The International Temperance Conference Chicago, is postponed from 1892, the year originally fixed, to 1893, in order to harmonise with the arrangements for the World's Exposition, to be held in Chicago in 1893.

At Wigan recently, twenty-five licensed houses (including four off-licences) were sold for a total sum of £51,000. The total rental was only £1,092. The fully licensed houses sold for forty-seven years' purchase, and the owners have been paying no rates on the value of the licences.

Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, of Iowa, U.S.A., barrister-at-law, gave her final address in England, prior to her return home, at a meeting called by the U.K.A., at Exeter Hall, Sir W. Lawson in the chair. Mrs. Foster showed with much force how women could help the direct veto movement, and the temperance cause generally.

BRAZIL.—Mr. Solomon L. Ginsburg, evangelist, Rio de Janeiro, calling attention to the civil and religious privileges secured by the Constitution of the United States of Brazil, writes:—"Whereas formerly the people were bound, now they are free. God has indeed opened the door for the Gospel. Will not some come out and work here while they can? The people are willing and waiting to hear the Gospel."

The Wesleyan Conference.

(By One of the Ministers.)

The one hundred and forty-seventh annual Conference of the Wesleyan Methodist Church began its sessions in the Old Market-street Chapel, Bristol, on Tuesday, July 22, and concluded them on Friday, August 8. In a soil prepared by Puritanism, Methodism won some of its earliest and most remarkable triumphs: indeed, Bristol may almost be regarded as the birthplace of the Methodist community.

It was at Kingswood, in close proximity to the city, that George Whitefield planted the standard at the first, as he initiated that marvellous system of field-preaching which has revolutionised the religious life of England. It was at Bristol that John Wesley preached his first open-air sermon, on April 2, 1739. At Bristol the first Methodist chapel in the world was built, being placed hard by the Broadmead Baptist Church, the pastorate of which had been held by Ryland, John Foster, and Robert Hall. At Bristol was held the second of the 147 Conferences, commencing there on August 1, 1745. Many important Conferences have since been held there, but we question if there has ever been one which will hold a more important place in the history of the denomination than that of 1890.

When the Conference assembles it is opened by the President of the preceding year, who always gives out that fine hymn of Charles Wesley's, commencing:—

> And are we yet alive,
> And see each other's face?

After the reading of Scripture and prayer the Conference proceeds to business. This consists largely of technical matters, which, though of vital importance to Methodism itself, are of little interest to the general public. The first act of the Conference is to fill up the vacancies created by death in the legal hundred who are in the eyes of the law the custodians of Methodism, and whose formal vote is necessary to give legality to the acts of the Conference. The next business is the election of the President. This year the choice fell upon Rev. Dr. W. F. Moulton, a very eminent minister, whose services to the exegesis of the Greek Testament have won for him a world-wide fame. It would be impossible to exaggerate the admirable skill which the President exhibited in guiding the debates of one of the most exciting and critical Conferences which have occurred in our annals. The peaceful and successful issues of the Conference are largely due to the gentle firmness, and the remarkable tact, of the President whom the providence of God placed in the chair at this emergency.

The Conference is divided into two sessions, one of which is composed of ministers only, the other of an equal number of ministers and laymen. Since the year 1878, when laymen first sat in the Conference, the Pastoral Session has met first, and completed its deliberations before the assembling of the Representative Session. Many inconveniences have arisen from this arrangement. Consequently next year the order of sessions will be changed. Henceforth the Pastoral Session will meet for the first week, then the Representative Session will take the second week, and the Pastoral Session will reassemble in the third week. The business of the Pastoral Session is confined to the spiritual aspects of the work of the Church, and the discipline and oversight of the united pastorate. Early in this session there is held what is called the Open Session of the Conference, when the general public are admitted. The business of this Session is to receive the fraternal greetings of other Methodist Conferences, and to hear addresses from delegates from those Conferences. The Open Session of this year was one of peculiar interest. Its business was too great to be concluded at one sitting. The speakers were Rev. D. J. Waller, who is the secretary of the Conference, and who was appointed by the last Conference as a delegate to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the United States of America; Rev. D. Nicholas, from Ireland; Rev. J. Smith Spencer, from South Africa; Bishop Warren and Rev. Dr. Little, of the Methodist Episcopal Church of America; Rev. Edward King, of the Australasian Conference; Rev. Dr. Lelièvre, of the French Conference; and Rev. James D. Lamont, of the Irish Conference.

None who heard it will ever forget the remarkable address of Bishop Warren, which thrilled the Conference, as he gave a most hopeful view of the prospects of evangelical Christianity in the great Transatlantic republic, especially when he said: "Someone has said that Europe has flushed her sewers, and the outfall is on America. The question is whether it shall be for our fertilisation or contamination. We are meeting that question, sometimes with trembling, but always with hope. It seems to us that we ought to accept the venture, and we are to remember that his promise is, 'Ye shall not be tried above that ye are able to bear.' And we are trying on our knees and everywhere, to gird ourselves with the strength of Atlas rather than seek a hole of escape. And I want to report to you that after one hundred years of contests such as these, America has not produced a cosmopolitan sceptic. We may have produced cosmopolitan authors, whose books outsell all others except the Bible. We may have produced cosmopolitan evangelists, like Moody and Sankey. But a cosmopolitan infidel—never! Infidelity is dying out in our land. Within the last ten years, and within a few miles of Boston, the home of Theodore Parker, the American churches have increased three and a half fold; the churches that stand up clearly for the truth of the everlasting God

HAVE INCREASED EIGHTEENFOLD.

"Ten years ago we used to meet in the inquiry-room (and in personal conversation with men about their salvation) the most seriously-expressed doubts about spiritual realities. Men tell us from afar, who have the widest experience, that there is not one-tenth of that scepticism in men who seek their souls' salvation to-day. Men have belief enough in the Gospel to put fifty-eight millions of dollars into churches in New York, while no infidel organisation has a roof over its head. One hundred years ago we had one church member in about fourteen of the population. Notwithstanding the steady in-come of population—the increase by immigration of half a million a year—that proportion has changed, until now there is one name on the Church roll of America for every five of the population, and we have only to go on in that ratio for a little while to have one for every one of the population. Then shall be shouted in the heavens and on the earth, 'The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our God, and of his Christ!'"

The burning question of the Conference was the missionary controversy which arose out of certain articles by "A Friend of Missions," which appeared in The Methodist Times. Those articles contained charges against the Indian missionaries of luxurious living and of haughty bearing towards the natives. A commission has investigated those charges, with the result that the missionaries have been completely vindicated. The membership of the British Wesleyan Church, as reported to the Conference, is 423,615, being an increase of 2,633 on the preceding year. It will be understood that this membership does not at all represent the number of adherents of Wesleyan Methodism in Great Britain, these being the members of the society classes, and constituting the inner circle which is composed of the Methodists of the Methodists. Forty-two young men were ordained for the ministry, and fifty-nine were received as candidates for the ministry.

At its initiation Methodism entered upon a valiant crusade against intemperance. In some of its sections teetotalism has developed a very strong organisation. In the United States, for instance, the opinion of the Episcopal Methodist Church is such that Bishop Warren could say: "Wherever on the round globe you find any one of our 22,000 churches, wherever you find a copy of our Book of Discipline, wherever you find any of our members, you always find this motto—'Total abstinence for the individual, and total prohibition for the State.' It is not generally known that one of our 15,100 ministers is a drinker of intoxicating drinks. If there were one, the church is unknown that would be willing to receive him." British Methodism has, up to the present, been weak in its temperance organisation, though it reckons a vast number of teetotalers amongst its adherents. There is, however, steady improvement in this respect. At the Bristol Conference of 1867 a temperance meeting was established in connection with the Conference. At the Bristol Conference of 1877, temperance was incorporated as a regular branch of the work of the Connexion. At the Bristol Conference of 1890, a minister, Rev. G. Armstrong Bennetts, B.A., has been designated to be set apart at the Conference of 1891, to look after the development of the Temperance Department of Wesleyan Methodism.

We must notice one other new departure of great importance. The Rev. J. Scott Lidgett, M.A., has been set apart to establish a Methodist Settlement at Bermondsey. The intention is to furnish a centre of residence and work for Methodist University men and other persons of culture, in one of the dense hives of London population. The promoters of this settlement hope to provide for the labouring masses of London, opportunities for educational improvement and instruction, with respect to the elevation of their home life, combined with earnest evangelistic teaching.

This brief account of the Conference cannot conclude without some reference to the work of the great missions which have been established in London, Manchester, and Birmingham. These attempts to solve the problem of the spiritual condition of the masses of our great cities are most successful. Crowded congregations are gathered every Sunday to listen to the preaching of a plain and simple Gospel; while in connection with these missions a vast number of agencies of various kinds for the relief of poverty and the general amelioration of the condition of the people, are constantly at work. The Conference recognised by express resolutions its gratitude for the remarkable success of these enterprises.

CHRISTIAN WORK IN BOMBAY.—The Bombay Guardian reports a large gathering of a highly encouraging character of native Christians in that city. Members of various churches met "to organise systematic work for the spread of the Gospel in Bombay." The proceedings were principally in Marathi. One or two European missionaries were present, but took no part in the speaking. The addresses of the native Christians were admirable in spirit, indicating a hopeful awakening as to their responsibility towards their unsaved country people.

JEWS IN WHITECHAPEL.—The seventeenth annual report of work done in connection with the London City Mission in the Jewish Mission Hall, Old Montague-street, Whitechapel, is a simple statement of testimony borne under circumstances of peculiar difficulty. Every opportunity is embraced to make known the Gospel to the sons and daughters of Abraham. With reference to the special services during the three great festivals, the missionary, Mr. H. Ehrlich, writes: "Some of them were largely attended, and the plan of salvation through the atonement made by Christ was made clear. We met with a good deal of opposition, but we can thank God that even some of those who opposed us have become deeply impressed with the truth as it is in Christ." During the year 455 indoor meetings and Bible classes were attended by 10,425 persons. The work is of an all-round character, and has many agencies. Communications for Mr. Ehrlich may be addressed: 5, Palestine-place, Cambridge Heath, E.

THE CHURCH ON THE SANDS.

We give extracts from reports of meetings held at various watering places by workers of the Children's Special Service Mission:—

Llandudno, Colwyn Bay, Llanfairfechan, and Pensarn (Mr. E. Arrowsmith, assisted by a number of friends). We began here on Sunday week with a large gathering in the Happy Valley; over three thousand hymn-sheets were distributed, and the supply ran short. Mr. Hume has had capital services at Colwyn Bay, and Mr. Jackson has greatly endeared himself to the children there. We made a good beginning at Llanfairfechan on Thursday, and are holding meetings at Pensarn several times a week. It is, of course, as yet, early to speak of results, but we can already thank God, and take courage. It will encourage our friends working round the coast to know that one of my helpers at Llandudno, and a most excellent one, was brought to Christ at the age of ten, when I visited his school.

Eastbourne, August 8.—The Lord has brought into the prayer-meetings those whom He has taught to pray. Rev. W. E. Peters' expositions are most acceptable and are very terse. The children's service was somewhat shortened this evening, partly on account of the cool wind, but more to enable Rev. S. L. Dixon to address the adults. This he did with much spiritual power, from Hab. iii. 2. "O Lord, revive thy work in the midst of the years," to a large (say 400 or 450) and very attentive audience.

Penmaenmawr (Messrs. Howard Staines, B.A., and Sidney R. Webb, M.B.).—We had our first meeting on the beach on Sunday afternoon, when about four hundred children and adults quickly gathered round. Among the audience could be seen many children who had been here in former years. There is very much sympathy with the work evoked, especially among the Presbyterian clergy; Rev. J. T. McGaw, M.A., is exceedingly kind, and Rev. S. MacNaughton, M.A., of Preston, and other ministers are assisting.

Rhyl (Messrs. T. L. Sayer, Percy Nickisson, Ernest Nickisson, Captain Bruce Moorhouse, Rev. K. Cox).—Our first service on Sunday afternoon was well attended, a thousand hymn-sheets not going round. On Sunday night God's presence was manifestly felt, and, as the shades of evening gathered round, the solemnity increased, a marked feature being the number of men, especially young men, present. Our early morning prayer-meetings are held in the Lecture Hall, where also the choir practice is held. The children's meeting on Monday night at an end, the adults gathered closer round to listen to several short addresses and loving earnest appeals to close that night with Christ as their Saviour. Two who were spoken to after the meeting were impressed, and we believe God was dealing with many souls that night.

Weston-super-Mare, August 8 (Mr. G. H. Harris, B.A.).—To-day completes our first week here, meetings now in full swing; average three hundred daily; more on Sundays. Over sixty came to picnic in the woods yesterday. Have been encouraged by meeting several who are the fruit of the work here in past years.

Whitley (Newcastle-on-Tyne), August 9 (Messrs. Alfred Haley, C. B. Marston, and H. P. Ridley).—The weather has been most charming, and in every way suitable for out-door meetings. We have taken up a fresh position on the beach this year, which is proving very convenient, and at our first service about 400 were present. The attendance and interest are increasing, and, thanks to the Giver of all good things, tokens of blessing are already being made manifest. A deep interest is being taken in the Scripture Union and the Text searching.

Margate, August 9 (Rev. W. Senior, Capt. Winn, R.E., Mr. Herbert C. Brown.—Our beach services have been well attended every morning, never, I think, below 350, sometimes about 400. We have had good "Cathedrals," and a procession, with the banners along the beach, has drawn a good many to the service. The Captain introduced a distinct novelty into the work, teaching the little ones how to build miniature bridges and batteries. This morning we were occupied in constructing a battery on the sands. It drew large crowds of inquiring sightseers, and the banner displayed aloft was a good help in making the service known. We sang the first verse of "Hold the Fort," and then proceeded to demolish our work. We have had much to cheer and encourage us, and we have much cause to thank God for his blessing and help, but I trust in the coming week we shall be able to see more definite fruit for the seed sown.

Bridlington Quay, August 12 (Mr. H. Hutchinson).—We began work here on Wednesday morning, August 6, with a very large meeting of 1200 to 1500 at our first service. The weather was very fine, and extremely hot, but the last few days it has been much cooler, and although the tide was high, necessitating our beginning the service an hour before advertised time, we have had excellent meetings. Our morning prayer meetings are well attended.

Whitby (Mr. R. Callender).—The weather has been perfect. The prayer meetings are growing in numbers, and Rev. Talbot Hindley's addresses on Nehemiah are greatly liked. The walks and games in the afternoon are well attended.

SHOW HIM YOUR HANDS.

By Mary A. Cushman.

In the one poor room that was all their home,
A mother lay on the bed,
Her seven young children around her;
And, calling the eldest, she said:

"I'm going to leave you, Mary;
You're nearly fourteen, you know;
And now you must be a good girl, dear,
And make me easy to go.

"You can't depend much on father;
But just be patient, my child,
And keep the children out of his way,
Whenever he comes home wild.

"And keep the home as well as you can;
And, little daughter, think
He didn't use to be so;
Remember, it's all the drink."

The weeping daughter promised
Always to do her best;
And closing her eyes on a weary life,
The mother entered her rest.

And Mary kept her promise,
As faithfully as she might,
She cooked and washed and mended,
And kept things tidy and bright;

And when the father came home drunk,
The children were sent to bed,
And Mary waited alone, and took
The beatings in their stead.

And the little chubby fingers lost
Their childish softness and grace,
And roughened, and chapped, and callous;
And the rosy, childish face

Grew thin, and haggard, and anxious,
Careworn, tired, and old,
As on those slender shoulders
The burdens of life were rolled.

So, when the heated season
Burned pitiless overhead,
And up from the filth of the noisome street
The fatal fever spread,

The work and want and drunken blows
Had weakened the tender frame,
And into the squalid room once more
The restful shadow came.

And Mary sent for the playmate
Who lived just over the way,
And said, "The Charity Doctor
Has been here, Katie, to-day.

"He says I'll never be better,
The fever has been so bad;
And if it wasn't for one thing,
I'm sure I'd just be glad.

"It isn't about the children;
I've kept my promise good,
And mother will know I stayed with them
As long as ever I could.

"But you know how it's been here, Katie—
I've had so much to do;
I couldn't mind the children
And go to the preaching, too.

"And I've been so tired-like at night,
I couldn't think to pray;
And now, when I see the Lord Jesus,
Whatever am I to say?"

And Katie, the little comforter,
Her help to the problem brought;
And into the heart made wise by love
The Spirit sent this thought:

"I wouldn't say a word, dear,
For sure He understands;
I wouldn't say iver a word at all,
But, Mary, just show Him your hands!"

ELIZABETH COMSTOCK, the Quaker preacher, now aged and infirm, living at Union Springs, N.Y., has in her lifetime visited 122,000 prisoners, 195,000 sick and wounded soldiers, 85,000 inmates of poorhouses and almshouses on both sides of the water. For thirty years she toiled in this field, and during the last years of her active life was one of the most beloved members of the Women's Christian Temperance Union.

THE SEA-SHELL AND SCRAP-BOOK MISSIONS afford enjoyment to sick children in the hospitals and homes of the poor of London. More happily situated boys and girls who visit or reside at the seaside gather the shells, and friends in various parts provide the scrap-books. These are distributed through the mission workers among little ones living in cheerless surroundings. Particulars as to the ways in which the Missions may best be helped will be supplied by the secretary, Mr. Charles Darkin, 27, Benedict-road, Stockwell, S.W. So far 17,206 boxes and bags of shells have been sent out, and 37,200 scrap-books, cards albums, &c. The work may be cordially commended to the Christian sympathy and support.

MR. LECKY ON ROMANISM.—2.

After describing the essentially "polytheistic and idolatrous" character of popular Catholicism, Mr. Lecky contrasts the teaching of his early days as to the cause of this "falling away" from primitive Christianity with that which he conceives that history affords.

"In the teaching of my early youth this transformation of Christianity was described as the great predicted apostasy, the mystery of iniquity, the work of Antichrist among mankind. Under the influence of the historic method it assumed a different aspect, and the mystery became very explicable. Hobbes had struck the key-note in a passage of profound truth as well as of admirable beauty:—

"'If a man consider the original of this great ecclesiastical dominion, he will easily perceive that the Papacy is no other than the ghost of the deceased Roman Empire sitting crowned upon the grave thereof.'"

One can, however, fully admire Hobbes's striking and truthful illustration of the continuation throughout mediæval Christendom of the spirit of the old Roman Empire, without thereby having to renounce the teaching of Scripture as to either the cause or the effect of the apostasy of Christendom. The fact is, there is nothing in Hobbes's image of "the ghost of the deceased Roman Empire sitting crowned upon the ruins thereof" which may not be found in a more accurate and, as events have shown, truthful form in the Book of the Revelation. According to Hobbes, the Roman Empire is dead, and its ghost only survives. According to St. John (Rev. xii. and xiii.) the beast which represents the Roman Empire "had a deadly wound," but it "was healed." The sword of the Goths wellnigh effected its destruction, but under Justinian (to quote the words of Dean Milman) "the Roman Empire appears suddenly to resume her ancient majesty and power." This was the commencement of the long reign of what he so well calls "Latin Christianity," and of which Hobbes speaks as "this great ecclesiastical dominion."

There is, then, no contradiction between the facts of history and the predictions of Scripture, but there is a distinction, which Mr. Lecky overlooks, between the causes of the apostasy and the result of it. The causes may be found set forth in 2 Thess. ii. 10-12, and in 1 Tim. iv. 1-6, 2 Tim. iii. 1-5 and 13, but the result of this is what we see in history, the concentration of the evil so developed in a huge ecclesiastical system, its amalgamation with and final control of Daniel's fourth great world power—the Roman Empire—in its professedly Christian stage.

This forms the subject of the prophetic vision of Rev. xiii., with its supplemental explanation in Rev. xvii. and xviii.

When, therefore, Mr. Lecky speaks of the mystery being "very explicable," he forgets that he is living in the nineteenth century, from which, looking back through a long course of centuries, we can see the mystery fulfilled. But it was a mystery indeed when St. John first saw it in symbolic vision, as his own words (Rev. xvii. 5, 6) so strikingly record: "Mystery, Babylon the Great . .. ...and I saw the woman drunk with the blood of the saints and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus, and when I saw her I wondered with a great wonder" (R.V.).

"OUR KITH AND KIN IN INDIA."—With this title, the addresses delivered in June last at the meeting of the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society, have been published in pamphlet form. Many will be glad to read the interesting remarks of Lord Reay and Sir Charles Aitchison, and doubtless such as do so, will realise the need of supporting the efforts of the Society for the spiritual good of the Europeans and Eurasians in our Indian Empire.

"THOSE MANY WASTED YEARS."

"Why, friend, what means this goodly change?
  Your frock so neat and clean,
No sottish look about your eyes,
  There's something wrong I ween.
'Twas only two short months ago
  I met your little Bill,
And thought the lad was nigh his grave
  He looked so weak and ill;
But now my wife is overjoyed,
  And nothing else goes down,
Her head, I think, is surely turned
  With news of neighbour Brown.
She says the boys are cared for now,
  Their home is bright and fair,
And one would think, by all account,
  New folk were living there.
What means it, friend, this hopeful change?
  I scarce myself can think
That all this mighty good has come Through giving up the drink."

"'Tis true," said neighbour Brown in tears,
  "I feel a different man,
And would to God in years gone by I'd seized this worthy plan.
'Twas drink that kept me from my home
  And made me hate my wife;
'Twas drink that stole my children's bread
  And made me curse my life;
'Twas drink that drew me from the church,
  And made me scoff at God;
'Twas drink that led me in the path
  That sinners only trod.
'Twas drink, that awful demon foe,
  That bound me in his chains,
And led me to the pit of hell
  Beneath its serpent reins;
'Twas drink, yes, cursed drink, that tore
  All honour from my soul,
And filled my mind with loathsome vice
  That nothing could control.
I once could hold my head aloft,
  And proud enough could say,
'Bill Brown is honest, though he's poor,
  And always pays his way.'
There was a time when she, poor wife,
  Would count my footsteps home,
And hold me as a pattern to
  The drunkard who would roam.
Ah me! our cottage then was smart,
  The youngsters neat and clean,
And there was not a better lass
  Than Polly to be seen.
Her willing hands were always plied
  In some home duty there,
She'd make my wages cover all,
  And have a bit to spare.
A wee tin box stood on the shelf,
  And oft I've heard her say—
'A trifle of your wages, Bill,
  Will meet a rainy day;
The little ones are growing up,
  And soon must go to school,
I often think what we should do
  Without this saving rule.'
But ah! I scarce can think it true
  That in one fatal hour,
I fell a victim to the drink,
  And got in Satan's power.
No longer then the little box
  Stood shining on the shelf,
A drunkard's eye had watched it long,
  And counted it as pelf.
The scene was changed; our happy home
  Soon dwindled bit by bit,
Till not a single bed was left,
  Or chair whereon to sit.
But, blessed be the Saviour's name,
  He did not pass me by,
As I stood on the brink of hell
  A sinner doomed to die;
A drunkard's grave I long had sought,
  And revelled in my sin:
But Jesus looked on me and said,
  'Poor dying soul, come in;
I cannot bear to cast thee off,
  While there is room to spare;
My blood was spilled for such as thee,
  Why perish in despair?'
Then conscience roused my guilty heart,
  And bowed my head in tears,
As I repented o'er the past
  Those many wasted years.
A vision of that precious cross
  Stood out before my gaze,
And I resolved at Jesu's feet
  To mend my sinful ways.
'A drunkard from this hour,' I said,
  'Dear Lord, I will not be.
Since Thou couldst condescend to plead
  With one so vile as me.
Thy gracious hand, stretched out to save,
  Henceforth shall be my stay,
No more I'll tarry at thy call,
  Or send thy love away.'

And so, dear friend, this happy change,
  Has wrought for me and mine
A future hope of happiness
  With blessings so divine;
And to repay my blessed Lord,
  With all my strength and might,
I'll raise the temperance story high
  And sing it day and night."

GOD SPEAKING.

While the tongue of the Almighty is speaking to us in his Word, his finger is writing to us in his works.—Kepler.

VAIN CONFIDENCE.

Lean not on earth; 'twill pierce thee to the heart:
A broken reed at best, but oft a spear:
On its sharp point, peace bleeds, and hope expires.

RICKETY CHRISTIANS.

We have many rickety Christians. They hear much, and their heads swell with empty notions and indigested opinions. But their legs are crooked; their walking is perverse.—P. Henry.

MAN'S DEFICIENCY.

How often, if my history were written by an inspired pen, might this proof of the depravity of my heart be inserted: "But John Newton rendered not again according to the benefits he received; for his heart was lifted up."—John Newton.

THE CHRISTIAN'S HERITAGE.

What can we wish for in our heritage that is not to be found in God? Would we have large possessions? He is immensity. Would we have a sure estate? He is immutability. Would we have a term of long continuance? He is eternity itself.—Arrowsmith.

UNEQUAL YOKE.

I would give a caution against the union of a godly man with an ungodly woman, or of a godly woman with an ungodly man. Oh! if ye did but know the effect of it, if ye did but trace out the true principle of it in all its consequences, ye would start from it as ye would start from putting a viper into your bosom.—J. Harington Evans.

GOD'S PRESENCE.

The presence of God's glory is in heaven, the presence of his power on earth, the presence of his justice in hell, and the presence of his grace with his people. If He deny us his powerful presence, we fall into nothing; if He deny us his gracious presence, we fall into sin; if He deny us his merciful presence, we fall into hell.—John Mason.

"PRAY WITHOUT CEASING."

If you would be rich in all grace, be much in prayer. Conversing with God assimilates the soul to Him, beautifies it with the beams of his holiness, as Moses' face shone when he returned from the Mount. It is prayer that brings all our supplies from heaven, draws more grace out of God's hand, and subdues sin and the powers of darkness; it entertains and augments our friendship with God, raiseth the soul from earth, and purifies it wonderfully. When the Apostle hath suited a Christian with his whole armour, he adds this to all, "Pray continually."—Bishop Leighton.

CLOSING WITH CHRIST.

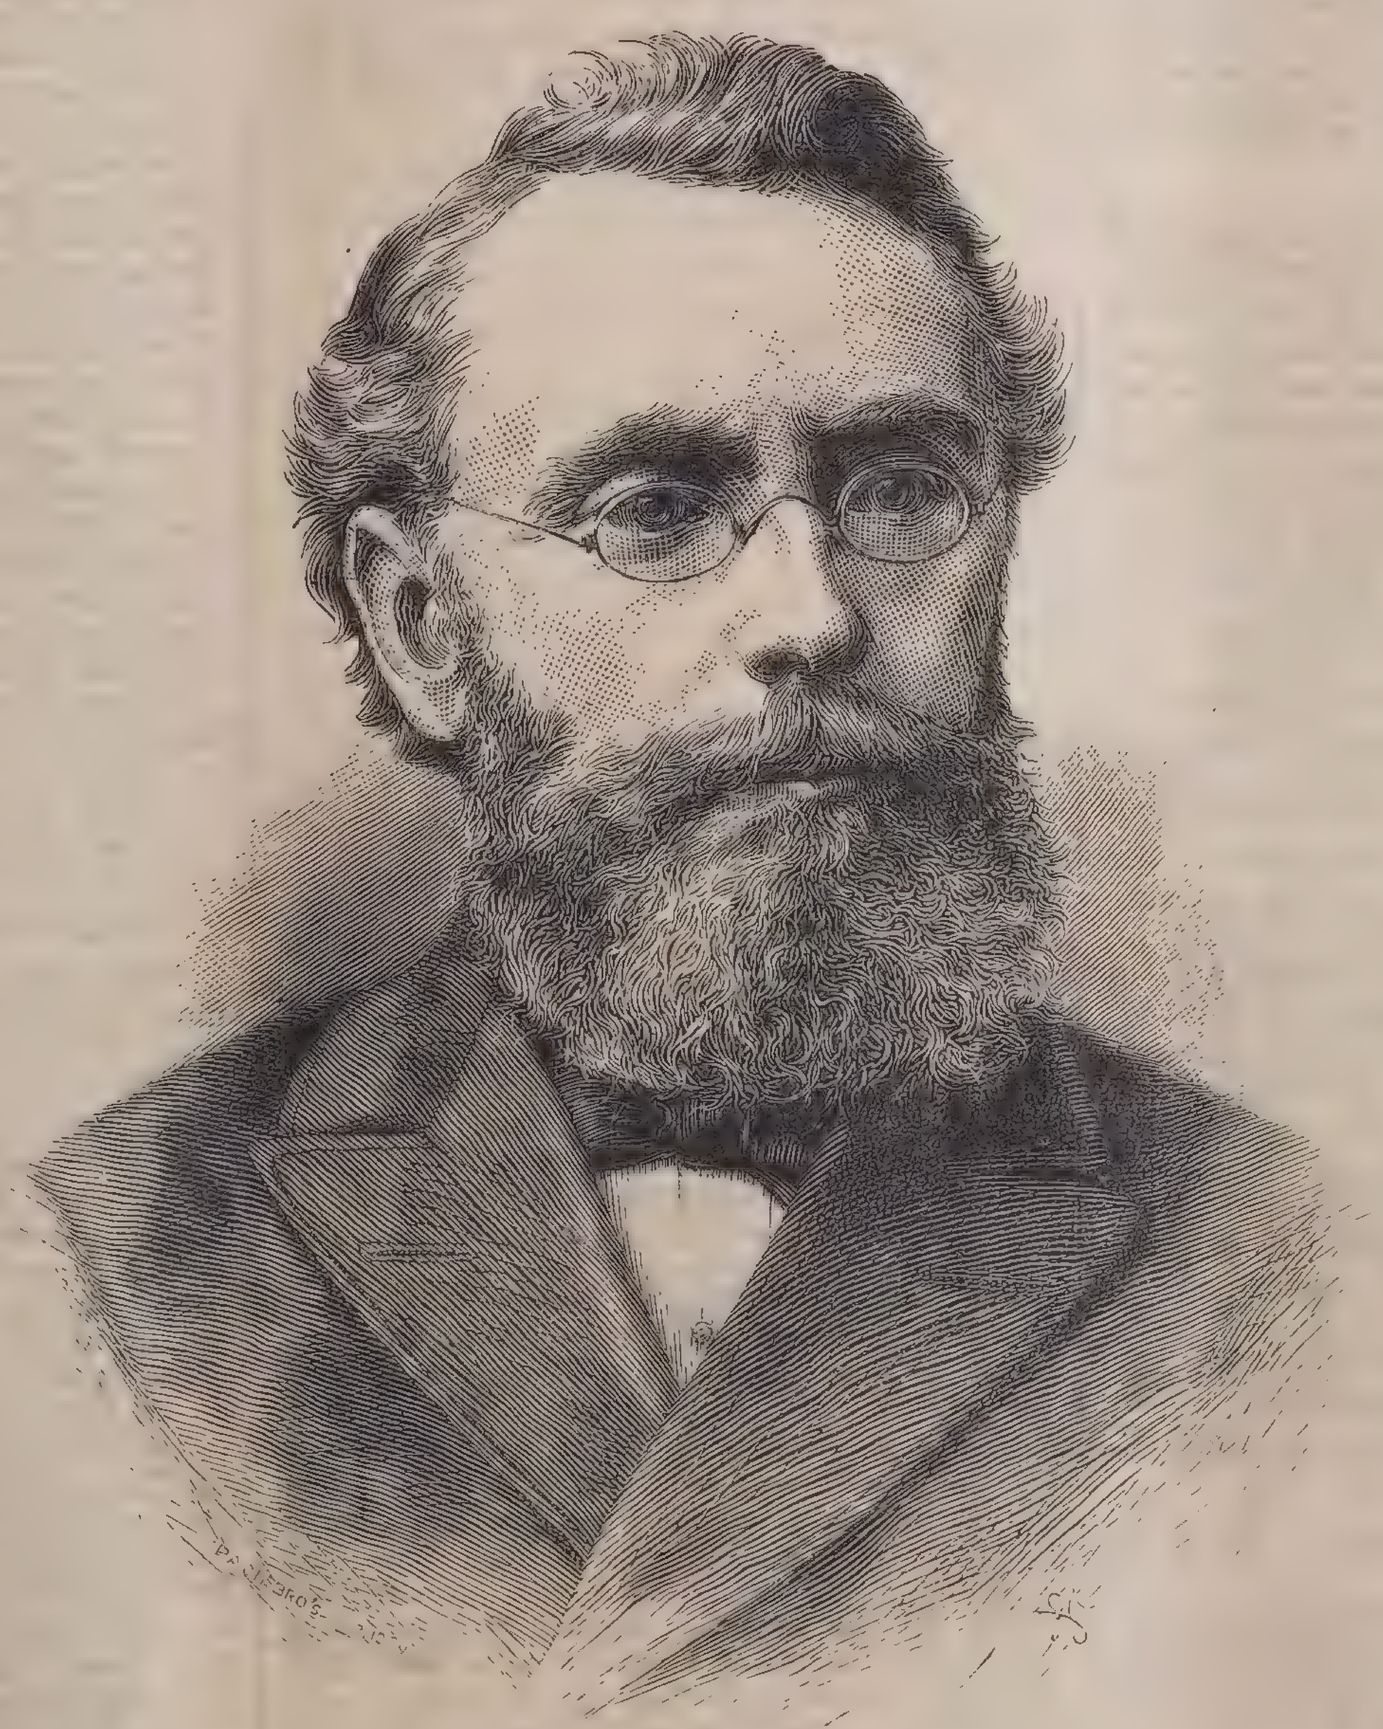
It is ordinary for many whose hearts are gone out after Christ in the Gospel that have received Him, to bring the same in question again. Therefore I shall advise one thing, as a notable help to fix the soul in the maintaining faith and an interest in God, and that is, that men not only close heartily with God in Christ, but also that they expressly, explicitly, by word of mouth, and vivâ voce, formally close with Christ Jesus, and accept God's offer of salvation through Him, and so make a covenant with God. And this, by God's blessing, may contribute not a little for establishing them concerning their saving interest in God.—Wm. Guthrie.

REV. JAMES A. O'CONNOR,

Ex-Romish Priest.

DURING the past few years a steady underflow of evangelistic effort has been set in motion in America towards the conversion of Roman Catholics, both priests and people. Thousands of able men throughout the United States have entered the arena to oppose the political encroachments of Rome. The Catholic "ring," which held sway in Boston during several years, could not have been formed if the community had been alive to Rome's ambition for secular power. Now the "ring" is smashed, and a representative American Mayor fills the gubernatorial chair by the suffrages of a people now more enlightened as to their duties and privileges.

There is, however, a nobler work going on, viz., the conversion of Romanists from error to truth. This movement is independent, voluntary, non-sectarian. Christians of the various evangelical churches have been aroused to seek the salvation of their Romanist neighbours, while zealous preachers, believing that the Gospel of our Lord is for every creature, do not shut out the Catholics from their ministry. Foremost as a herald of the Gospel to Roman Catholics is Ex-priest JAMES A. O'CONNOR, familiarly known as "Father" O'Connor. The title has now no official value, save only as it indicates the antecedents of this worthy man. No doubt "Father" O'Connor's faithful, persistent evangelism amongst the Catholics, and his remarkable fruitfulness in that field, have encouraged and emboldened vast numbers all over the States and Canada to labour in this good cause. From the first he has sought to lead priests and people, as sinners, to the Lord our Redeemer. To preach the Cross is his delight; to point inquirers to the Lamb of God is evidently his chief joy.



Mr. O'Connor was born near the famous Killarney lakes more than forty years ago. His ancestors for centuries were Romanists. Many of his relatives had been priests, and his mother's heart was set upon the darling object of seeing her son in the holy office. Having spent some years of study in Paris, the young man completed his theological course in St. Mary's Seminary, Baltimore, the most Romish city of the United States. Thereafter he was ordained a priest in Chicago, where he performed the duties of his office for eight years, saying masses, hearing confessions, marrying the living, and burying the dead. During that period no fewer than 30,000 penitents sought absolution at his hands in the confessional. But seeing his ministrations did not elevate his people, nor their confessions lead to amendment of life, he became exceedingly disturbed in spirit. Nor could he close his eyes to the conduct of bishops and priests, which was frequently such as to dishonour the Gospel of Christ. Surmising a cause behind the sins of omission and commission so glaringly practised, he discovered the powerlessness of Papal doctrines and decrees to lift the soul to God. The Jesus of Romanism was either a helpless babe in the arms of Madonna, or a Saviour lying under the power of death. Rome has practically kept Him in the tomb; she has no experience of the power of his resurrection. Mr. O'Connor's discoveries were startling; he suffered untold agony. He told his confessor and bishop the alarming facts which aroused his conscience, but their irritating advice was no balm for a wounded spirit. These wounds were made by God, and no human ointment could mollify them.

After careful review of his investigations, he renounced the priesthood, and left the Church of Rome with a firm step, not only towards freedom, but towards the salvation his soul desired. But who will now guide those feet along a safe pathway? Blessed be God, who not only begins the good work, but who also performs it in his sovereign wisdom and power! After having studied medicine, which he thought to make his life profession, the ex-priest settled in New York. There he fell in with a friend who pointed him to Christ, directing his mind to the assurance of pardon promised in the Scriptures to all who come unto Him. This was, indeed, good news to Mr. O'Connor, who shortly rejoiced in the conscious knowledge of salvation. And with this joy of forgiveness there came the overwhelming conviction that the deluded votaries of Rome must somehow hear the true Gospel of Jesus Christ.

To renounce his profession, and enter upon the great work of his life, without human promise of support, without the aid of a society, and without any visible means of subsistence, demanded courage; not the courage of impulse, but of faith in God. He rented commodious halls, into which all classes of Romanists flocked to hear the Gospel from the lips of an ex-priest. Conversions have been numerous: possibly 1,000 souls are now free in Christ Jesus. Also a great company of the priests have become obedient to the faith. From the first, the Spirit's seal was set upon his work.

Mr. O'Connor not only preaches with his voice, but also, and most effectively, with his pen. He is editor of The Converted Catholic, a magazine which is outspoken in all vital questions pertaining to Romanism, but is specially helpful in its statements of Gospel truth. We append the following personal testimony, as given by himself:—

"I know only one doctrine—salvation by the blood of Christ; I know only one way—repentance towards God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; I know only one rule of faith and practice—the Bible as the revealed Word of God, to be believed from cover to cover. All this I preach to the Catholics, in opposition to the powers of evil that would keep them in sin, and to the power of the Church of Rome that would keep them in ignorance and superstition. I do not blame the priests for not teaching the people better—generally they do not know better themselves. But they must be made to stand aside, and let the people see that there is only one real priest—the Great High Priest, Jesus, the Son of God, who ever liveth to make intercession for those that believe in Him. The Catholic people believe in Him, but the priests will not let them come to Him.

"I preach that the people have a right to come to their Lord and their God, who has purchased them at a great price, even his own blood, and that no power on earth has a right to come between the repentant sinner and the loving Saviour. The Catholic people gladly hear that doctrine, and every year great crowds of them have attended our services in Masonic Temple, New York. How many of them become converted? you will ask. It is hard to tell. Our work is in great measure an educational one—teaching the people how to lean upon and trust in the power of God rather than in the priests as now. The conversion and salvation of the soul is the work of God, not of man. Hence we leave to God the fruit of our labours. But there are many, many conversions.

We have formed no church; our work is a missionary one. There are enough churches and denominations in the world to which the Catholics can go after they are converted—when they become like other Christians. We have received many priests out of the Roman Catholic Church, and have given them a hearty welcome. But only a few of them could be induced to enter upon the work of preaching to the Catholics. There was no salary for them, and they found it more agreeable to become pastors in the various Protestant Churches. But though we had no salary ourselves, we believed God would sustain us in the work, and that in time means would be provided for keeping the others also at work."

Not long since a mission was organised with "Father" O'Connor as general secretary, the object of which is not only to evangelise among the Roman Catholics, but also to aid such as find themselves friendless and homeless because of their allegiance to Christ—specially converted priests, who are the most helpless of all men until placed in positions where they can labour with their hands for their own support. Mr. O'Connor's mission is entirely a spiritual one, for though intensely alive to the dangers threatening the American Government from Roman influence, he believes the Gospel to be the only true remedy. Thus, setting politics aside, he preaches "Christ alone."

Mrs. O'Connor, the true helpmeet of the ex-priest, deserves more than a passing notice. She, too, is a convert from Rome, through the power of the Gospel, and in hearty accord with her husband in his endeavour to preach Christ to the Romanists. This worthy woman keeps open house for every refugee, as far as opportunity permits. Around their table is found an illustration of the Divine idea of the family, and a protest against the unnatural doctrine of celibacy. Mrs. O'Connor is a warm-hearted Irishwoman, full of love and good works. "She looketh well to her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness. Her children arise up and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her."

MRS. HORTON AND MISS PARKER have conducted evangelistic services during the last few months in Ramsgate, at the Cavendish Baptist and Congregational churches. God has added his blessing, and souls have been saved.

THE JEWS OF RUSSIA.—It is devoutly to be hoped that the statement that the Czar of Russia will not promulgate the threatened coercive edict against the Jews, will prove correct. In these circumstances the Lord Mayor of London has decided not to convene the public meeting of citizens at the Mansion House, which the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Baroness Burdett-Coutts, and other persons of distinction, had signified their desire to attend. Meantime, it is reported from Odessa that the steamers leaving that port for Alexandria and calling at Jaffa, carry increasingly large parties of Jewish emigrants to Palestine. The greater number of these emigrants are provided with means for the purchase of land, or for establishing themselves in the new colonies.

The Northfield Conference.

(By our Special Correspondent).

The eighth general conference for Bible study and equipment for service in the cause of Christ, is now—writing on August 3—fully inaugurated. It bids fair to be the longest yet held, and a gathering such as has never been seen here before in the width and depth of the movements touched and influenced by it. In the long list of prominent speakers are many Englishmen and notable missionaries. Among those who are to take part are:—Rev. Marcus Rainsford, of London; Bishop J. M. Thoburn, of India; Rev. W. R. Mowll, of London; Mr. W. R. Lane, of England; Rev. F. E. Marsh, of Sunderland; Mr. David Baron, of London; Mr. C. Boardman, of Stratford, London, and others.

At one of the opening sessions Mr. Moody set the key for the meeting by asking several the question,

"WHAT ARE YOU HERE FOR?"

Mr. Boardman, a business man, said he had intended to go to Jerusalem this year, but Major Whittle had told him that he could get nearer the heavenly Jerusalem by coming to Northfield than he would by visiting the earthly Zion. His prayer was that he might receive a powerful stimulus, that he might carry back some of the holy influences which flow from the exposition of God's dealings at Northfield. Mr. Boardman then gave a description of the Mizpah Band meetings, and what was being done in the Conference Hall built at Stratford, E., as the result of Mr. Moody's mission. Rev. Marcus Rainsford graphically told about the work in Down Lodge Hall, Wandsworth, and the influence of the "Rescue" societies. Rev. S. S. Karmarker, of Bombay, the first native representative of that country to attend the Conference, said he had been longing to come to America to see Mr. Moody's work. He had tried to get him to go to India, but since he could not do that he himself had come to America. In closing he said: "We need more evangelists and revivalists in our country, and especially the native communities need stirring addresses by Americans. The day is coming when 300,000,000 in India will be saved. What a glorious day when all the Hindoos, Mohammedans, and Persian fire-worshippers are Christians! The English Government has done a great deal for us all, and Christianity can be spread all over the country. They are reading infidel literature. I want to show that it is through Christ that heathenism can be blotted out, and we can receive a change of heart."

Rev. James O'Connor, of New York, a converted Roman Catholic, told of his visit to Northfield nine years ago, when he got his first incentive to real Gospel work. He strongly advocated working among the Catholics. Speaking of prayer to the Virgin, he described people as "troubling her with their sins, instead of praising God for her virtues." Could Catholics be reached by the Gospel? If anything made him angry, it was for people to say that the Catholics couldn't be converted, because they were so bound by their priest. If the truth is presented with shillalahs and flagellations, how would you like it yourselves?" Mr. Jewell, a business man from Hartford, Conn., said: I came here as a exceedingly busy man, to get some new stimulus for God's work, to touch elbows with 1,000 or 1,500 Christian workers—dynamos that each give me a throb when I touch them, and a different one, starting me into a new direction.

HAGGAI'S PROPHECY.

Mr. David Baron was one of the first speakers in the conference, and gave a powerful address on the prophecy of Haggai. In opening he said: "The Lord showed his displeasure of the people by speaking of them as 'this people,' instead of 'my people.' The cause of the displeasure was the neglect to carrying out the work of rebuilding the temple. This was a type of the displeasure of God to-day. This prophecy is a call to work, a proclamation signed by God, directed to arouse the people to the difficult work of building the temple of God. Typically, the temple is a type of heaven, of the incarnation of the Son of God and of every Christian, for "know ye not that ye are the temples of God?' After speaking of the foundation and the work, he asked, 'who are the workers?' He closed with the hindrances: 'The building of the house of God means hard work, self-sacrifice, and zeal for the services and glory of God. I have had some of the most blessed experiences of my life in the Carpathian mountains, and on the plains of Hungary. And, when I have had people closing around me and spitting upon me, I have felt more happy than at many conferences. You must meet Christ, who will require of you an account of all the talents committed to you.

A new departure this year is the introduction of Bible-readings at the village church, which are to be conducted by Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson; but the first was opened by Rev. Marcus Rainsford, who took for his subject Phil. iii. 1-15, especially the 10th verse:—

"THE POWER OF HIS RESURRECTION."

Paul desired a knowledge of more than the mere facts of the resurrection; but he did not yearn to know the real dignity of the Omnipotent Son of God. He knew that his resurrection was not only the pledge and earnest of the resurrection of all believers, but also its charter and life. Yet the knowledge of these facts, however important, would not feed Paul's hungering soul. But to have an almighty energy, to experience the power of that resurrection in his own soul was the object of Paul's great thirst. If we believe in Christ's resurrection, we may have this experience. We Christians often live on a cent. a day, when we might have a thousand, if we but would. Now Paul wanted the risen Lord to repeat his own life in his life; he wanted Christ to look out through his eyes, to speak through his lips to the dead world of sinners around him. We also may have this personal, practical experience of Christ in our lives.

Mr. Moody has only spoken once thus far, or rather, preached but one sermon. This address was his well-known and characteristic discourse on the life and character of Elijah, and was delivered on the now historical Round Hill in the rear of his house. During his talk he said: No man amounts to much without the Spirit of God. Elijah got under the juniper tree, and prayed for death. Thank God that He does not always answer our prayers. It would be a great calamity if He had answered that prayer, and the prophet had died like a coward, under that juniper tree. I do not wish I had lived in the time of Elijah, as many do. When the prophet appeared all was darkness around him. When we get on our face before God as Elijah, we shall get Elijah's spirit.

Protestant Notes.

A WRITER in The Sussex Daily News asserts that Protestantism is vanishing from the Church in Sussex, and refers to a church in Brighton where "thousands of worshippers Sunday after Sunday bend low in adoration of the Host, and within the last few days a little volume has appeared under the editorship of the Mission Preacher of the Diocese of Chichester, in which the Protestant view of the atonement is referred to as a "base superstition," which is "revolting to morality, contemptible to reason, and degrading to the spirit," beneath the shadow of which "grows a devil's religion," the intention of the writer being to present and substitute a "Catholic" view in its place.

Rev. S. B. Thorp, Curate of St. Matthew's, Sheffield, has seceded to Rome. We need scarcely add that he was a Ritualist. He has given, in writing, the reasons for his perversion. The main one is, that in the Roman Catholic Church there exists an infallible and "living voice" to settle finally all the religious doubts of her children; while Protesants have nothing to decide for them but the Bible. But if Mr. Thorp will only take the trouble to inquire, he will soon discover, to his astonishment, that even in the Church of Rome there is no "living voice" claiming infallibility, to which he can have recourse to settle all his difficulties. In this year of Grace, the only "living voice" in that Church, said to be infallible, is that of the Pope, and—on Romish principles—he is only free from error when addressing the whole Church, ex cathedrâ, on a matter of faith or morals. As a private teacher, the Church of Rome declares that the Pope is as fallible as any other man. The so-called infallible decisions of Leo XIII. will only reach Mr. Thorp and his co-religionists in the form of a printed Papal Bull, which will be as much a "dead book" to him as the Bible is to the Protestant. The whole of the Roman Catholic's Rule of Faith is printed matter when it comes to him; and in this respect he is far worse off than the Protestant. The latter has the whole of his Rule of Faith in the Bible, which is small enough to carry about with him; while the former's Rule of Faith is big enough to fill a small library, including as it does, not only the Bible, but also all the ex-cathedrâ Bulls of all the Popes who have ever reigned; the canons and decrees of all the General Councils, and the writings of all the Fathers.

There is not a Roman Catholic in the world, from the Pope downward, who has read the whole of his Rule of Faith. When a Romanist talks about the advantages of possessing an infallible and "living voice" to decide everything for him, he is like a man who boasts that he is possessed of untold wealth, while all the time he is not worth a solitary farthing. If Mr. Thorp were to go to the Pope personally and ask him to settle his latest religious difficulty he would indeed have a "living voice" in reply, but it would not be, on Romish principles, an "infallible" one, but that of a fallible man like himself. After all, it is better to be guided by the written and infallible Word of God, than by the printed Bulls of, say, Pope Alexander VI., who was one of the greatest scoundrels that ever disgraced the earth. If Mr. Thorp had followed his Bible he would have been neither a Ritualist nor a Romanist.

While it is sad to record that any one should secede to the Church of Rome, it is pleasant to report, at the same time, the conversion to Protestantism of a Roman Catholic priest. The Globe announces that Rev. Ernest Maitland, Roman Catholic Chaplain of St. Marylebone Infirmary, Notting Hill, has seceded from Rome, and will shortly become a clergyman of the Church of England. There are more converts from Romanism acting as Protestant ministers than is generally supposed.

The comments of the daily press on the death of Cardinal Newman are remarkable, but by no means satisfactory; and even those of some of the Protestant religious papers are such as lead us to doubt whether or not their editors are really awake to the great spiritual and temporal evils inseparably connected with Romanism. As Christians we must mourn that a great intellect was placed at the service of a Church which is described in Holy Scripture as "drunken with the blood of the saints." How strange it now seems to us that it was Newman who wrote in the British Magazine for 1834, that Rome is even "worse" than the Babylon of the Book of the Revelation; and that in a published volume he declared that Rome should be treated as a "demoniac" governed by Satan himself! It is curious to note that as far back as 1829 Newman was one of those who petitioned Parliament in favour of Roman Catholic Emancipation. Though he was in his youth thrown amongst Evangelicals, their influence over his religious belief had quite passed away before he started the Tractarian Movement in 1833; for in the latter year he tells us,—"I had a thorough contempt for the Evangelical party in the Church of England."

THE KESWICK MISSION FUND.

AT the recent Keswick Convention, I reminded the assembly at the Missionary Meeting on the Saturday, that the Keswick Mission Fund, which has already borne such rich fruits in the visits of Mr. George Grubb to Ceylon, South India, and New Zealand, originated with an anonymous gift of £10 sent to the platform two years ago; and I stated that the donor of that £10, whose name, I believe, is known only to myself, is now himself a missionary in the field.

After the Convention was over, I received a letter from that donor, which he had hoped would be in time to be read at the Saturday meeting. As it came too late, I ask leave to give an extract in THE CHRISTIAN:—

"You know my secret; please keep it well. Will you say that the original donor is now in the mission field, and has learnt so much since last summer of God's love and power that he cannot withhold a small thanksgiving offering. I feel more and more that Christ meant what He said, and nothing else, when He told us to lay up treasure in heaven. Savings are better invested in the Lord's work than in anything else: "banking in heaven" is a blessed privilege, and the more one gives the more one finds one can spare. We could do with much less than we have, and then it would be far easier to make earth less our home. Mind—no name, and no hint given of my whereabouts."

The letter enclosed a draft for £10, which sum I have sent to Mr. Robert Wilson.

EUGENE STOCK.

"A MESSAGE FOR THE HOP PICKERS."—Under this title, Mr. C. Russell Hurditch is bringing out a series of four papers, expressly designed for circulation among the hop pickers. Consisting of eight large pages, printed in large type, and well illustrated, these messages are admirably suited to the purpose intended. In addition to Gospel appeals, they present striking Scripture texts displayed in a manner that cannot but arrest the attention of the reader. The hop-picking season is now close upon us, and there should be no delay on the part of evangelists in receiving copies of the "Messages," which are published 100 copies for 4s. 6d. by Messrs. J. F. Shaw & Co., Paternoster-row. Tract distributors and societies may hear of specially reduced terms from the editor, 164, Alexandra-road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

MR. MOODY'S NEW ENTERPRISE.

IT is Mr. Moody's purpose shortly to open at Northfield, a new training school, altogether distinct from his other enterprises. The object of this school is to combine a course of Bible study for ladies, with thorough drill in two domestic departments, dressmaking and cooking. It is designed to meet the needs of ladies who desire the ability to reach needy homes in a practical way, and who wish to equip themselves for more efficient work as Bible-class teachers or mission workers. How comfortless are thousands of homes from ignorance of the simplest details of housekeeping! Many a wife would welcome a little advice and instruction from a kind Christian woman who was able to give such help, and whose effort she knew to be prompted by a heart warm with interest in the souls of her family.

As the workers of Mr. Moody's "Bible Institute" in Chicago go from door to door, they find opportunities for giving practical help imply forced upon them. Last Thanksgiving time one worker came upon a motherless home, where everything showed the want of proper care. She found a boy of twelve trying to prepare, as best he could, for his father and little sister. What a joy to give it all the touch of a woman's hand, and make the day seem less dreary in its contrast with the year before! Often a worker comes across a mother with a group of half-clad children, who have nothing suitable to wear for church. Kind friends furnish several dresses to be made up. But these garments are useless unless the mother can be shown how to adapt them, or perhaps teach the older girls. Many ways of service open to a woman who can instruct in these branches, and through them many a soul may be reached by the Word of God.

Mr. Moody opens the Northfield training school in October for two terms of three months each, the first term to close in Christmas time, and the second, beginning at January, will close in March. The best training teachers will be employed to superintend the three departments. The building occupied by the school will be the hotel, "The Northfield," a building in which the appointments are most inviting, and which will accommodate from fifty to one hundred ladies. The total expense for one term will be one hundred dollars.

Any one desiring further information may address Miss Gertrude Hulbert, the Revell House, East Northfield, Mass.

HOMES FOR AGED CHRISTIAN BLIND.—There are at present seventy-five inmates in the North London Homes for Aged Christian Blind, Hanley-road, Crouch Hill. Of the whole, some thirteen are between eighty and ninety years of age. The oldest inmate, aged ninety-three, died a few days ago, after enjoying the advantages of the Homes for seven years, being confined to her bed during the last three. Her trust was in the Saviour. The Homes provide accommodation for eighty persons, and there are always more applicants than can be received for want of funds. The managers, Rev. H. and Mrs. Bright, write: "Now that so many of our friends are away from home, we greatly need Christian sympathy and cheer."

ZENANA BIBLE AND MEDICAL MISSION.—Miss James, of Allahabad, sends an interesting account of nine baptisms, Bengalis and Mohammedans, in May. The first three were ladies who had been received into the newly-erected Converts' Home. The Society has resolved to commence new work at Alighur very soon, and is being urged to occupy other places in the North-West Provinces, where efforts on behalf of the women are very urgently needed. From the large and populous district of Bulandshur a very pressing appeal has been received, and also from Ghazipur. For the last place most desirable workers have volunteered, and now the money is the only thing needed. The office of the Society is at 2, Adelphi-terrace, W.C., Rev. A. R. Cavalier, Secretary.

India's Needs.

India! What a vast continent! Indeed, we might call it the Europe of Asia! And yet what different opinions are held concerning it! Some are unable to see in it any good, others are equally unable to discover any evil. With the former, residence in India is looked upon as little short of exile—a kind of Botany Bay—the only use of which is to coin a few rupees, or earn a pension with which to retire as speedily as possible to the "old country." No wonder that by such the native is too often regarded as a mere "nigger," nor is it surprising to hear from them the most positive assertion that though they spent twenty or thirty years in the country, they never saw a native Christian who was not a thief, a drunkard, or the impersonation of all that is evil, while if there is such a thing as a "good" native to be found, it is in the ranks of heathenism that he is to be looked for.

From such aspersions it is needless to waste one's ink or breath to clear the Indian character. They answer themselves—they are as untrue and as libellous as if a native visiting this country, and, largely ignorant of the language, were to describe the character of Englishmen from the frequenters of a gin-palace, a low lodging-house, or an East-end brothel.

But there is another class who run into the opposite extreme. I must frankly admit that for these I have a far greater sympathy. They are those who, having taken the trouble to look beneath the surface, and having laid aside their European prejudices, find so much to admire in the ancient and elaborate systems of philosophy, morality, and religions, that they would have us believe that in this respect India cannot be improved upon, and that it is best for us to leave well alone. Finding, amid the darkness of heathenism, some star or planet which has been doing its best for centuries with its dim and scanty light to pierce the surrounding gloom, they would fain banish from the horizon the Christ-moon, which is threatening by its very brilliancy to eclipse all the light of the constellations on which India has hitherto depended for its illumination. In their eagerness to acknowledge the "Light of Asia," they can scarce see the necessity for the infinitely more glorious "Light of the World" and "Sun of Righteousness," whose rays are as much required there as here, and without whom its spiritual harvests are as away, as they would do if deprived for one single year of the rays of the natural sun.

The truth lies midway between the two extremes. Yes, alas! there is a large measure of truth underlying the libels of the pessimist! The most enthusiastic well-wisher of India is doomed to disappointment if, carried away by the poetry of the situation, he imagines that he is going to discover in heathenism elements of perfection which are, alas! too rare even in countries where Christianity has made its most sweeping conquests. If, where the morals and maxims inculcated by Jesus Christ sway the hearts and lives of men, often even despite themselves, he nevertheless finds much that is to be deplored, he may safely conclude that in countries where that influence has barely penetrated the traces of evil will be even more palpable to the eye and its effects more deep-rooted, ruinous, and difficult to be combated.

True, India has its philosophies. But they are an inextricable web, which even a Max Müller can scarcely disentangle, and which are far beyond the ken of the common people, whom they may mystify, but cannot enlighten. True, they have their religions; but oh! how incapable of satisfying the cravings of their souls. True, they have excellent moral teachers, many of whose maxims are clothed in the most beautiful Oriental imagery; but where is the power either to pardon the past, or to change the sinful heart from which all the evil proceeds? True, an Indian sinner may be a trifle easier in his heathen state than a Christian sinner, because the latter has had greater light. But, after all, there is no happiness in heathenism.

A very wealthy native gentleman once called upon me. His heart was full of anguish. For months he had been unable to sleep. A favourite child had died. He was heart-broken. In vain he had tried to gather consolation by performing with diligence the rites of his own religion. It was powerless to give him peace. He was on the borders of distraction and despair. His very soul cried out for what his religion could not bestow. How glad was I to be able to point to One who could lift his burden and satisfy his heart! There are tens of thousands of such in India waiting for "the consolation of Israel."

It is said that a poor woman once went to Buddha. Her child was at the point of death; she was full of grief. He bade her go and get as a remedy some mustard, but its efficacy would depend on its being obtained at a house where no one had ever died. She went from door to door in vain. She could not find a house in which bereavement had not taken place. Her own child died. But she was comforted in the thought that her sorrow was but the common lot of all humanity. The very author of her religion could do nothing more for her. Do not these bereaved, sorrow-stricken "prisoners of hope" appeal to us to bring to them a Christ who shall wipe away their tears?

Then, again, there are streams of impurity and immorality, of drunkenness and crime, of poverty and oppression, which appeal to us for our sympathy and aid, and which, if unstemmed, threaten to flood and overwhelm the whole peninsula.

God forbid that we should heed the tale of those who cry "'Peace, peace,' when there is no peace," and who would have us think that the heathen are best left alone, that they can live and die without Christ. What a masterpiece of the devil! The vices of Christendom are to be allowed to deluge India without stint, but the antidote is to be withheld! That which makes Christendom itself "tolerable" in the sight of God is to be excluded, and all that is purely selfish, or even devilish, is to be poured into its midst. The brake, without which no train is run in Europe, is to be dispensed with as unnecessary in the case of India. Nay, verily! it must not and shall not be so! The soldiers of Jesus Christ shall at least be as free to flood that country with salvation as the Manchester merchant with his cotton goods, or the liquor-seller with his arrack and opium!

INDIA'S NEED!

Ah! my heart aches at the very thought, and I long to be able to "cry aloud and spare not" with a voice that shall awake from their death-sleep hundreds and thousands of those who profess to love Christ, and who are yet suffering their Indian fellow-subjects to perish at their very doors for lack of the bread of life! I am amazed at times at the marvellous forbearance of God—not with them, but with us! I wonder that He has not driven us out of that country long ago, for our lethargy in his service, and unfaithfulness to his Word. Sure I am that the reckoning day is coming, when we of England shall be called on to give an account of our stewardship. What shall we say in our defence, or by way of palliation of our national shortcomings? Look at the matter for a moment.

The British Army, for holding a country which is ours by no right save that of the sword, numbers 60,000! The number of British Christian missionaries, excluding American and foreigners, is considerably less than 1000!

The money spent on our troops and on the government of those dominions amounts to about £70,000,000 yearly. That which we spend on missionaries for that country is considerably less than half a million.

Do not these facts speak for themselves? Do they not show in the clearest possible manner how utterly we have failed to appreciate the responsibility of our position? Every penny of money which India costs, India has itself to pay. Tens of thousands of our countrymen owe everything to India, and yet fail to make any adequate return. If those alone who owe a direct debt to India would come forward and do their duty, surely there should be no lack of either men or money for the Indian missionary field.

Would that I could adequately voice India's needs, but I cannot! Would that I could picture her lying at our very gates, sorely smitten by the destroyer! Would that I could plead with each reader to play the part of a Samaritan, and to pour wine and oil into her gaping, bleeding wounds! Would that I could engrave her name and her needs with an iron pen and lead upon each heart for ever! Would that I could induce young men and women to rise up by hundreds and thousands for her salvation! Would that I could impel those who cannot go themselves to offer up of their substance, such a freewill offering as should lighten the heavy burden that oppresses the hearts, and too often paralyses the hands, of those who are giving their very life's blood for her salvation!

I have sought in this letter simply to portray India's needs. In another I hope, with the kind permission of the Editor, to tell something of what God has enabled us to accomplish for the salvation of its millions, and to explain the objects we have in view in appealing urgently to the Lord's stewards for the sum of £10,000, not so much for the support of existing operations, as for their speedy extension on a scale more in proportion to the vast needs of India. With this sum we should be able to erect fifty-three new Halls at an average cost of £50 each, for the accommodation of 21,500 people, and put into the field 300 native and 50 European missionaries, besides opening new Prison Gate and Rescue Homes, and caring for our sick and wounded officers. But, after all, one is tempted to exclaim, "What is even this among so many?" Indeed, we might well change our 50's into 500's and our 300 into 3000 and yet how far should we still be from satisfactorily meeting India's gigantic needs!

THE MORAVIAN CHURCH.—The first annual British Provincial Synod was held recently at Ockbrook, Derbyshire, being attended by fifty-five ministers and deputies. Bishop W. Taylor presided, and the proceedings were unruffled by any specially "burning questions." It was decided to issue next year a new periodical—The Moravian Messenger—and recommended that, as the term "United Brethren" is no longer exclusively used by the denomination, on all public occasions and in the publications the term "the Moravian Church" should be employed. Among the ministers ordained was Becker Shawe, called as missionary to Thibet. Rev. C. E. Sutcliffe, of Gracehill, Ireland, was consecrated Bishop of the Brethren.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.—Dr. Ardagh, C.M.S. medical missionary at Metlakahtla, British Columbia, in a private letter, says:—"We are very much in need of an hospital, there not being a place to receive in-patients between Alaska on the one side, and Victoria, 550 odd miles by sea, on the other. Metlakahtla is the most central and most healthy spot for such a building on this northern coast; it is also the headquarters in a way of the Government. We are most anxious to see the hospital in working order before the commencement of another winter. The advantages gained for dealing spiritually with Indians and Europeans thus individually, while in hospital here, are evident." Communications may be sent to Mr. H. G. Malaher, 20, Compton-terrace, Upper-street, Islington, N.

Servants' Institute and Conference Hall, West Norwood.—Through the agency of this work many distressing cases are met of poor mothers and children that need immediate change and rest. An old friend and supporter has offered me a nice Home, rent free, for a convalescent or home of rest. I have accepted this, but before the premises can be used they will have to be fitted up. Contributions in money, old furniture, and household requisites of any kind will be thankfully received by Mrs. Woodford Fawcett, as above.

The Soudan Mission.

E latest "monthly leaflet" of the Soudan ssion, C.M.S., records the arrival of the new rkers at Lokoja, which will be the base of the v movement with which the name of Mr. aham Wilmot Brooke is associated. On Easter y Rev. J. A. Robinson had a fair-sized con- gation, to whom he explained the purpose of e new missionaries, and set forth "Jesus and e resurrection." There has for many years en a Christian congregation at Lokoja, but it said, with pain, that not more than five or of the thirty communicants seem to have y intelligent grasp of the plan of salvation. raining institution which was built at the ce several years ago, will be appropriated the purposes of a hospital.

No sooner had mission work been begun an a party of Hausa travelling merchants id a visit to the station, and showed much erest in the course of a conversation on ay not up for yourselves treasure on earth." er eagerly talking among themselves, their der said sadly, "You come and tell us the y of truth now; but you don't know how we e; we get up in the morning, put on our wns, eat and drink, lie down and sleep; we ver think of these things—and so we go through life, and all round and through the untry we are the same." Musa, the Hausa vernor of the town, called with a large follow- g to show the place to a stranger, a fine-look- g man, from the distant state of Wadai. Mr. ooke says, "As he spoke and read Arabic ll, a copy of Pfander's 'Balance of Truth,' s handed to him, and he read it rapidly till saw its drift, whereupon he shut it with a ap, and handed it back contemptuously."

The congregations at the meetings are very xed, and several languages are required to dress all the people. The chief energies of the workers were, without delay, concen- ted upon Scripture translation, as so very tle has been done so far to get through the ess the translations that have been already ade. "Moreover, there are no Scripture anslations in the hands of the professing ristians; so that none but two or three can ad even a portion of God's Word in any nguage that they can understand. So much s already been done by those on the field, d is only waiting for a few finishing touches revision to approximate it more closely to e Greek original, that there is good reason to pe that five or six books of the New Testa- ent in Igbira and Hausa, and perhaps two or ree in Nupe, may be printed by the end of e year."

A MOHAMMEDAN MOULVIE, from Bombay, s distinguished himself for heroic measures in posing Christianity at Kishengarh. One of the llowers of the Prophet having expressed an in- ntion of becoming a Christian brought down on his head the wrath of this reformer, who dered him to be tied to a pillar of the mosque d flogged. The brutal order was carried out in e presence of a large number of Mahommedans. spite of this gross outrage, the Moulvie is said be still permitted to remain there in discharge his pious calling.—Indian Witness.

THE THEATRICAL MISSION.—The seaside liday which the orphan children of Macready ouse, and some of the other little actresses, have en enjoying at Redcar, Yorkshire, has just come an end. For three weeks the healthful and ristian influences of a refined home have been lling on these young lives, and Mr. and Mrs. ourthope Todd rejoice in the spiritual good hich has been accomplished. Services on the ach have been constantly attended, while the hter pleasures of paddling and castle building ve yielded benefit and amusement. Doubtless after years it will be found how the good seed wn now bears fruit in the life. Letters may be dressed to Mrs. Courthope Todd, Macready ouse, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

Bible Carriage in Villages.

THE Wayside Bible Carriage under the superintendence of Mr. John M. McAuliffe, accompanied by two brethren, Mr. John Cook and Mr. F. Longhurst, has visited some sixty villages in Sussex during the past three months. Something like a hundred meetings have been held, with very encouraging results.

A distinctive feature in the work of this carriage this year has been an endeavour to co-operate for the time being with any evangelical workers, who were residing in the places visited. This is a very important matter in Sussex, seeing that so many villages are already half-Romanised.

Thousands of tracts have been distributed, hundreds of Bibles and Gospel books sold, and although many of these villages are very hard to move, and the opposition to the work of the carriage in places has been so great that places to stand upon have been again and again refused; yet upwards of £50 for cheap Scriptures have been taken upon its platform during the past three months. This, be it remembered, not in populous towns, but in hidden away villages.

In one village, three workers found, after preaching on the green and spending a long afternoon in visiting, that their collective takings amounted to twopence.

In another village the squire of the place came to the carriage and refused to allow it to stand on any piece of ground, saying all the land in the place was his own, and he would not allow any preaching van to stand in his village under any circumstances. In another village where a short meeting was being held with the horse in the shafts, ladies came and led away the children, so that they should not listen to the preaching. Hence it is a matter of profound thankfulness that in spite of such hindrances, it has pleased God so greatly to own the labours of the carriage and its workers during the past three months. A few centres are here given wherein the van stayed for a week or more, and from its centre sought to evangelise the villages for about four miles round.

Sandhurst.—Stayed ten days; people came from surrounding villages, as many as 800 at a time, to hear the words of everlasting life. Many confessed to have received the Lord as their personal Saviour, and the workers have been requested to revisit this place in the winter.

Hassocks Gate.—Ground was refused for the carriage to stand upon, and, although for a fortnight day by day it visited the surrounding district, yet at night no meeting from it could be held, because of the persistent refusal of owners of waste lands to let it stand anywhere in the place.

By the kindness of Mr. Arthur Wheeler, Travelling Secretary of Y.M.C.A., South-Eastern District, whose private house is in the village, the mission-chapel was lent for meetings, and in a marked manner God gave exceeding great blessing. At this place, "Faithful," the good old horse which for years has drawn the carriage was pronounced to be spavined and unfit for work. Mr. Wheeler and those with him were very kind, and God rewarded them after the ways of His own heart, by greatly blessing this mission. Here again the carriage workers have been asked to revisit, in winter, for further mission services.

Chailey Common.—This is a wild waste common, miles in extent, people scattered sparsely about here and there. Here again God greatly blessed his word; lonely sick ones were visited and cared for: in one striking case a dying man comforted; in another a publican of a wayside inn came and held serious conversation about the saving of his soul, and attended the after services. A dear sister in Christ, living in a little cottage, lent her home to the workers, and went on a visit to friends, and refused any payment. Her neighbour undertook the cooking and attendance upon the workers, and very striking meetings were held. Mrs. McAuliffe here joined the work, and her addresses to the working-men who came to listen were owned of God. At the end of the week people came and asked for further meetings. Mr. Pope, of Woodside, Barcombe, who has a mission-hall on the common, kindly lent it for Sunday meetings; the people came in for miles round, and God's Word was much owned. A gentleman who was visiting the place, known to Mr. McAuliffe, generously came forward and purchased right out, for £35, a strong bay horse to replace "Faithful," broken down in service. This horse is named "Faithful the Second," and is doing his work well.

The children's meetings from the carriage were very pleasing, and many, many little ones came over from distant parts of the beautiful common to see "Uncle John's pictures," and listen to his Bible talks. It is proposed to revisit this common in November.

Rottingdean was the place next visited, but here the field was very hard, and there was little apparent fruit. At the closing open-air services three men came forward and confessed Christ, so that some fruit was seen even here.

The watering-places of Newhaven and Seaford have also been visited, with the villages around these places. The carriage is working now in the Glynde Valley, in Sussex, and the prayers of God's children are asked that its labours may be continuously blessed.

Obituary.

PASTOR LEPOIDS.

M. LEPOIDS, the Baptist pastor, has died at Montbéliard. For a long period he exercised a faithful ministry in Paris, where his affable disposition and high Christian character endeared him to all who knew him.

DR. MORICAND.

The Reformed Church of Paris has lost a worthy member in Dr. Moricand. He was a warm friend of the Deaconesses' Institution, and being a skilful oculist found many occasions for benefiting the afflicted poor. His services for the cause of God were unstinted, and his sudden death is widely mourned in the St. Antoine quarter of the city.

REV. JONAS HOYLE.

This faithful servant of God, for many years vicar of Christ Church, Gateshead, died a few days ago, at the age of fifty-one. His Christian character was admired by all, and his labours in the Gospel highly appreciated. He never courted popularity, and was very genial in manner and humble in disposition. He took no part in public meetings, such was his sense of personal responsibility for the souls of the people in his immediate parish. It was his wish to go suddenly and God granted him this desire, for he was taken ill shortly after preaching the Gospel in the new iron Church, St. George's, Gateshead, and in a few hours peacefully "fell asleep."

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on the following:—Special services by Mr. Opie Rodway, to be held from August 23 to 25, at the Baptist Chapel, Whitebrook, near Monmouth.——Tent services at Pontymoile (Mon.) and neighbourhood, conducted by Mr. James Jones.——A tent mission at Putney, now in its eighth week, conducted by Mr. G. Hefford and others of the Evangelisation Society.——Special services from August 17 to 29, in Y.M.C.A. Hall, Leslie, Fife, by Mr. C. Roger, evangelist.——Special services in Chalmers' Free Church, Dundee, to be conducted by Mr. Daniel McLauchlan, from August 31 to Sept. 14.——A continuation of a Gospel mission at North Camp, Aldershot, by Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh, to August 24.——That a sister may be prevented going on the stage.——PRAISE: For much blessing on a tent mission at Milford, by Mr. W. Mapstone.——That the lines "He careth for you" have been of great comfort to a much tried one.——For great blessing received during a Gospel mission at North Camp, Aldershot, by Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh.

EVANGELISATION IN SPAIN.

The following most interesting account of a visit to Osuna, in the province of Seville, has just been received from Rev. Francisco Palamares, pastor of the church of San Basilio in Seville:—

In the town of Osuna there lived two poor women, Juana Lobo and Manellas. This latter was a member of the Evangelical Church of Malaga, and the former attended the churches of Jerez, San Fernando and Seville. They came to Osuna in search of work, and somehow became acquainted. As the Gospel had struck root in both their hearts, they determined to meet on Sundays and Wednesdays to read the Bible, pray to God, and sing hymns. This was entirely unknown to the pastors, until a young Jew, educated in my schools in San Basilio of Seville, and afterwards baptized, was sent to distribute tracts. He gave one to Manellas in the street, and she, to show to the young man that she took an interest in what he was doing, asked him to come to her house to read the tract to her. The young man went immediately, and when he took out the tract, she produced a large Bible. Manellas told him he must come to their worship that evening, desiring him to speak to them of the things of God, to which he acceded. When the time came he was surprised to find a numerous meeting. The joy of the young man was great, and as soon as he had returned to Seville, he narrated to me all that had happened.

Owing to his earnest entreaties, I resolved to go and see with my own eyes what I heard about. The United States Consul, Mr. Caldwell, accompanied me, and distributed large numbers of tracts. Having seen the two women, we arranged a service, and although no notice had been given of our coming, over fifty people were present. We returned

WELL PLEASED WITH OUR VISIT.

A year passed, and, through want of means, I was unable to revisit Osuna. Not being able, however, to resist the desire of the congregation any longer, I have made another journey, in company with Mr. Caldwell. We distributed three thousand tracts. We visited Juana and Manellas, and while consulting where we should hold the service, a number of women offered their houses. The house which was ultimately chosen was very quickly filled with people; each brought his or her own chair. Such was the crowd, however, that the heat was insupportable.

A large Bible was brought to me, because the poor light of the candles made it difficult to read. Hymns were sung, a part of the liturgy was read, and I preached. When I had concluded and was preparing to depart, some men made their way with difficulty to me, and said, "Señor Pastor, we, with many others, were in the street, and unable to hear; we also desire to hear you." I told them I was hoarse, but we arranged that those who had heard should go out, and the others come in. Most of them left, and made room for the second congregation, which was equally crowded. I preached, and the American Consul, full of enthusiasm, spoke to them of the Gospel. All took affectionate leave of us, shaking hands and begging us to come oftener to preach the Gospel. I promised them that I would make known the desire of the people, so that some Christian friends might help in the matter of bearing the expense of the journeys, as well as enable me to visit other large towns which also need spiritual food.

This simple narrative shows the character of the work which the pastors of the Reformed Church are carrying on, aided by the Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society, the secretary of which is Rev. H. E. Noyes, 8, Adam-street, Adelphi, London, W.C.

Letters to the Editor.

"WHAT CONSTITUTES SUCCESS?"

Dear Sir,—Will you permit me a word on Mr. Stooke's question in The Christian of August 8, "What constitutes success in the Lord's vineyard?"

Surely, if we only consider what it is that the Lord has constituted his servants, there can be small room for discussion as to the success. "The sower soweth the Word." That, I take it, is what the Church of Christ has to keep in mind in these days, and until the Master's return. We are to sow the Word. What does it mean? Only this: that wherever among the nations of mankind Christ's servant is proclaiming the everlasting Gospel to all who will hear it, there he is doing the exact work which Christ has commissioned him to do. His very sowing is his success, quite independently of the harvest of which, let it be remembered, angels, not men, are to be the reapers.

The sower who busies himself about the harvest though he has every right to look forward to it in faith, will be sure to fall into grievous mishaps with his sowing. "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand: for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good." The sun is westering, the night when none can work is closing in. He must stride on backwards and forwards, and scatter broadcast the precious seed. Or, even had he the right or the time to forecast his sphere of success, what faculty does he possess for discovering where the thorn seeds do or do not lie hid, which will one day choke the seed? He cannot do it. He must sow on in faith.

Who can estimate the enormous damage done to our blessed Master's work by the unhealthy craving of his people after missionary "results"? What right has Christ's Church to demand in the middle of the seed-time, the crop that can only be gleaned in harvest? Let the baptisms and the professions be a thousandfold more than they are, will there be no sifting when the harvest comes? What about the burnt-up blades, the unfruitful stalks choked among the thorns?

Or, who can tell of the burden of temptation, fear, despondency, laid upon the faithful and trembling workers in a lonely land by this unauthorised clamour for results? They, of all men, are brought in contact with a very busy devil. And they, of all men, have the unceasing, anxious up-bringing of the very babes of the family of Christ—that is to say, if theirs is the joy of having such born at all into the family of heaven in their own day of labour. "He shall see of the travail of his soul" was the promise to the Master. Is the servant greater than his Lord? It is said of Krapf that in the evening of his long day of toil he knew of no single soul led by his ministry to the Lord. Yet who more than he wrought by his sowing for the millions of Africa? A missionary still living laboured for years in the heart of Abyssinia. But I cannot help thinking that the translation of the Amharic Scriptures, the work of Mr. Flad's old age, while banished from the land of his affections, will prove the seed of a nobler reaping when the day shall declare it than the toil of his earlier years.

There is a story told by that energetic and godly man, Rev. David Brodie, of the Bible Society, that ought to be written in letters of gold for the comfort of sowers who have been persuaded into believing that they ought to see, and see now, the precious souls they have won, instead of sowing hard and fast in faith, assured that "the Word" which they sow shall not return void:—

In South America some two or three years ago two agents of the British and Foreign Bible Society proceeded on their tour. At their first halt, they were waited upon by the leading men of the town, who desired to explain to them, as the representatives of the Society, their deep gratitude for blessings received. The agents were astonished. What did it mean? Twenty years before a lonely missionary of the same Society had dropped the seed—one Bible—in this dark and godless spot, and passed on, And lo! twenty years after the fruit had been brought to light. The missionaries went on their way, in the same track that their predecessor had trodden (though they were not then aware of it), twenty years before. And in town after town, and village after village, the blessed tokens of the good Lord's faithfulness to his word, and to his servants, appeared to gladden their hearts.

But the sower, where was he? Gone. The course finished, the good fight fought, his spirit is at home with God, waiting the crown to be given the day of Christ's appearing. And Mr. Bro tells how he turned up the records of that sow journey, and found the secretary's letter voic the mad, unhealthy, unscriptural craving of multitude for a premature harvest: "Oh! this w never do: only so many Bibles sold, and on journey of such extent and costliness! No res whatever. It must not be repeated!" N rather say we, God grant us many like sowings.

Dear sir, preach up the true character of servants of Christ—sowers, not reapers. If workers be Christ's indeed, men of faith, full the Spirit, and if their seed be pure—the adulterated Word of God, the Gospel of Chri God's power unto salvation to everyone that believ —the harvest will surely be gathered, even thou we see it not till by and by; the bread cast up the waters shall be found after many days.

Yours faithfully, Ralph W. Harden.

"LIFE MORE ABUNDANT."

Dear Sir,—Will you allow me to call the atte tion of your readers to a point of some importanc It is one raised by the following word "... how we may, as living believers, enter into t 'life more abundant'—which is indeed the life Christ, as distinguished from the spiritual vitali which we receive at conversion." Is there an thing in the Word of God to bear out this distin tion? I think not. It is surely the same life, whi every Christian receives, i.e., "the life of Chris or rather, Christ as our life—just as it is the sa sort of life which all men have, i.e., human li A baby, born this morning, has the same life as will have if he lives to be eighty. It is not natural vitality now, to become at some future d the life of man. Nor have the babes in Chr (1 John ii.) a spiritual vitality, which becom developed in the young men and fathers into t life of Christ. We "are all the children of God faith in Christ Jesus." When, through grace, a so receives the message of the Gospel, in other wor when there is "repentance toward God, and fa in our Lord Jesus Christ," a life is imparted whi is spoken of in Scripture as "eternal life." is thenceforth entitled to say: "I am crucified wi Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Chr liveth in me." This is the "life more abundan which we owe to a crucified and glorified Chris who, consequent upon his being glorified on hig has sent down the Holy Ghost and given Him, n to some, but to all "them that obey Him."

If we try to introduce the distinction question into a few passages of Scripture, it will clear that this theory is untenable. "He th heareth my word, and believeth on Him that se me, hath (what? spiritual vitality? No, thar God, but) eternal life." Again, "These thin have I written unto you, that believe on the nam of the Son of God, that ye may know ye ha (spiritual vitality? Nay!) eternal life." On again, "He that believeth on the Son hath eve lasting life." This and nothing less is the portio of every believer. The terrible contrast whi follows confirms it: "And he that believeth n the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of G abideth on him."

I very fully sympathise with my beloved a honoured fellow-labourer in his desire for what called a deepening of spiritual life—for an enti surrender of the renewed man to God. But w must be very careful that we do not lower th Scriptural idea of the life which every Christia lives. The development of that life varies widely as the faces of Christians. In itself, th life is the weakest thing in the world. But Go has given us his blessed Spirit, "the power th worketh in us," to energise the dependent lif The essential thing is that we should judge, as the presence of God, everything that would hind the working of that Spirit, whether self-wi worldliness, or any other hindrance to his minist of Christ to the soul, and to his leading it on likeness to Him. As in natural things, so spiritual ones, there is the question of health well as life. Not only is it important that th organs should be in good order, but that the nerv power should be vigorous. It is the Holy Gho which answers in spiritual things to nerve-powe But "be filled with the Spirit." Oh, for an u hindered Spirit, an ungrieved Holy Ghost!

God has of late led many of his people to judg themselves sharply with regard to the hindranc within, and to seek to "reckon" themselves "dea indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesu Christ." Further, they have been led, in th language of the same chapter, to yield the "members, servants of righteousness unto holiness;" yea, to "present their bodies (not only the members, but the whole man) a living sacrifice."

May we be more than ever stirred up to this entire surrender to God. But let us beware of making it a platform for self-exaltation. A soul entirely given up to the Lord is always a humble one, who thinks others better than himself. Let me commend to my readers an important sentence or two from Rev. H. C. G. Moule's address at the recent Keswick Convention: "As to consecration, I would not say a word against surrender and yielding to God. May He give me to know more of it every day! But I do want to caution you against thinking that there is any virtue, or beauty, or recommendation of ourselves in consecration. What is consecration? It is giving up stolen property. It is pointing the Master with tears to what we have taken from Him that He may take it back." The Lord give us humbly to render to Him what is his; but reverently to own the grace that has blessed "all saints" with all spiritual blessings!—Yours faithfully,

MR. STEAD ON THE PASSION PLAY.

Dear Sir,—I am asking myself whether The Christian should not seriously deal with Mr. Stead's article on the Passion Play. Will you kindly allow me to pass the question on to you? I am concerned for its effect upon thousands of generous and inexperienced young hearts. Its chief danger lies in the élan of the attack; but this can only be counteracted by unmasking the true character of the teaching that underlies the outward show.

I cannot but ask myself, too, Why is Mr. Stead "playing to" the Vatican? Is this a Parthian shot at "orthodoxy" in his flight to Rome? If Dr. Barnardo's letter required justification, I think we have it here.

The Passion Play article is a singular medley; but Mr. Stead knows what he wants, and what he means. Or, is he himself already in the thrall of Rome's most potent delusion—mere emotional enthusiasm? Rome holds her millions through the carnal emotions, while the sophistry of Jesuitism now deceives but the few.

The article is full of contradictions, even from the writer's standpoint; and is, in parts, as Mr. Reaney has said, "bathos." But Mr. Stead's personal tendencies are his own business: yet his assumption and position, his wide sphere of influence and his large following of young men, especially, contribute to make his personality a power; and he is a public teacher.

What does he mean? "I learned more of the inner secret of the Catholic Church at Ober-Ammergau than ever I learned in Rome. Yet there is nothing distinctively Roman about the Passion Play...yet all is there...It was in its effort to impress that story upon the heart of man that there came into being all that is distinctively Roman...The Catholic Church, in short,...has sensationalised in order to get a hearing among the masses." And Mr. Stead wishes the life of the (modern) Christ born, and sustained, on pure "enthusimoozy." He says the question of the power of this "one Jew's" death to transform the world never "comes to the mind of those who are accustomed from childhood to regard this Jew as mysteriously divine, not so much man as God, &c." (!) He justifies Caiaphas, ignoring altogether that the high priest's responsibility was based upon all previous revelation from God, especially committed to the priests. The justification, however, in Mr. Stead's view even, avails Caiaphas nothing, for he proceeds to charge all sorts of oppression and infamy to the Caiaphas-spirit! So it goes on. No remembrance of sin and suffering connected therewith and judgment, the head and front of the whole matter apparently being a cruel death, exciting much pity and admiration. Work up this to as high a pitch as you can, and you become, through a passion of the imitative spirit, "a Christ." In harmony with this false teaching we are told "the most pathetic figure in the Passion Play is not Christ but his mother." It may well be so!

In my humble judgment no such dangerous arrow as this has been shot in Rome's interest—consciously or unconsciously I will not hazard—for many a day, and the heart of Cardinal Manning must be singing.

Sir, to whom shall we look to undo and expose this ignorant or crafty playing into the enemy's hands, unless it be to those who have the place of instructors and guardians of the truth among us? May the great Leader Himself arm all his servants for the fight, which is to get, as yet, but thicker and thicker, and will be carried on also by treachery within the camp.—Yours faithfully, N. J.

"YOUNG MEN AT WINNIPEG."

Sir,—I was very pleased to read the article on above in your issue of the 8th, and would take this opportunity of bearing my testimony to the efficiency of the work being carried on by the Y.M.C.A. there.

When in Canada this summer I paid a visit to Manitoba, the North-West Territory, British Columbia, and Vancouver Island, spending a few days at Winnipeg, and while there had the privilege of addressing a large Saturday evening meeting of the young men of the Association. I was greatly delighted to witness the earnest spirit of enthusiasm among the members, which indicated that there was good work being done.

A young city like Winnipeg, as well as the country of Canada at large, requires the assistance of the old land to strengthen its Christian associations, and I trust in this case the needed help will not be awanting.

Mr. Copeland, the energetic secretary, and Mr. Whitla are the right men for the work. The latter is one of the trustees of Miss Macpherson's Model Home Farm at Barnsley, and both take an active interest in all that concerns the progress of the Saviour's kingdom. The Y.M.C.A. at Vancouver, B.C., is building a new house, and at Victoria, Vancouver Island, I was privileged to address a meeting in a new building opened recently. A large centre like Winnipeg should not be behind these places in its arrangements for meeting the spiritual wants of the young men who leave the old country and settle there in such vast numbers.

I might say in closing that in the three places of worship in which I spoke on the Sabbath, warm handshaking and kindly words told of memories of home, and of the word in season having borne fruit, and bade us go on sowing "beside all waters." In our encouragement we would stimulate others to do all in their power to oppose the giant forces of evil which beset the young, and to uphold these centres of Christian influence, so well fitted to promote their highest interests both spiritual and temporal.—I am, &c., Wm. Quarrier.

THE KESWICK CONVENTION. REPLY TO QUERY.

Sir,—I am not called upon, nor should I presume, to answer for my brethren with regard to whose speeches (at the Keswick Convention) your correspondent "Inquirer" has felt himself bound to ask certain questions. (They will doubtless reply for themselves, if needful.) But I may perhaps be permitted to give a brief answer to the paragraph in which he alludes to the distinction drawn by myself between "Faith," "Trust," and "Confidence" (or boldness).

(1) May I say that I can claim no credit for having observed this distinction in 2 Tim. i. 12. I think that the reporter (who condensed my address, in your issue of August 15) has found it for himself in that particular passage. But (2) may I point out to "Inquirer," and to your readers generally, that the distinction (which I unquestionably drew from many other parts of Scripture) is simply based upon the fact that three words are used in the apostolic writings—viz., pistis, pepoithēsis, and parrhēsia, which, as every scholar knows, have totally different meanings; and that these three words are rendered as I gave them, in, for example, Eph. ii. 8 (pistis—faith), 2 Cor. iii. 4 (pepoithēsis—trust), and 1 John ii. 28 and iv. 17 (parrhēsia—confidence and boldness).

I also mentioned that pepoithēsis is frequently translated "confidence," but that I used "confidence" (in my address) as the equivalent for "boldness."

I would humbly say that I see nothing "unwarranted," nor anything likely "to confuse the meaning of Scripture" in observing the distinctions which the Holy Ghost has observed; and that to my own soul it has been very helpful to notice that while "faith" (pistis) implies reception, or taking in, of God's word to the soul, "trust" (pepoithēsis) implies repose, or giving out, of the soul in response to God's word, and "confidence," or "boldness" (parrhēsia) implies comfort or courage of soul on the strength of God's word (yea, even in the very presence of God).

With all humility, then, I would reply that it can hardly be right to say, as "Inquirer" does, that "Faith and trust are two English words used to render but one Greek word," that "they mean exactly the same thing," and that "surely confidence is much the same." To my own mind, the differences are great and important. Yours faithfully,

H. W. Webb-Peploe.

"JUVENILE CRIME."

Dear Sir,—Among the "Notes and Comments" in your issue of the 1st inst., was a note in which it was claimed, on the ground of certain figures in the report of the Inspector of Industrial and Reformatory Schools, that the number of juvenile offenders is on the decrease. My attention has since been drawn to other statistics, which show an increase of 702 boys as compared with the previous year, an increase of three schools, and an increase of £10,331 in the estimates for the coming year. In the face of these further figures, and of others which have come to my knowledge, I cannot but admit that the inference that juvenile crime is decreasing—an inference drawn from the decrease of commitments (which have, however, of late years been reduced through legislation affecting juvenile criminals)—was based upon inadequate grounds. It will thus be seen that I unwittingly conveyed an impression more favourable than i warranted by a consideration of all the facts o the case.—I am, yours faithfully,

The Writer of the Note.

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

2 TIMOTHY iv. 8: "LOVE HIS APPEARING.

Does this mean Christ's first appearing, or his second? Have there not been, and are there not, many devoted Christians who have not loved or understood the second appearing? The Revised Version renders the words "have loved his appearing." See Heb. ix. 26.—Yours, &c., J. V. S.

REPLY.

The context seems to require the second appearing (see ver. 1). All true Christians love his appearing, whatever be their views as to when it shall be. The Apostle is speaking of the Righteous Judge, and is looking for the crown of righteousness when we shall all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, which will be at his appearing and his kingdom (2 Cor. v. 10; 2 Tim. iv. 1). The Speaker's Commentary and Alford render, "have loved and are still loving his appearing." "A touchstone (says Leo) by which to examine our hearts." Compare 1 John iii. 16-23.

1 PETER i. 13.

"Grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ." Does this look on to Christ's future appearing, or does it indicate a present continuing inward revelation, as in Gal. iv. 19, "until Christ be found in you"? The Revised Version says (margin), "the grace that is being brought," which seems something present, also the preposition is "in." J. V. S.

REPLY.

Canon Cook (Speaker's Commentary) translates in accordance with above, "the grace which is now being brought unto you in the revelation of Jesus Christ," and adds: "The Authorised Version takes the word as referring to future salvation; but the Greek is clear, and grace is a present blessing. The word "revelation" here does not mean simply the disclosure of saving work proclaimed by Christ, but the manifestation of Himself; the highest truth, which involves all other truths. Compare John i. 14.

ANOTHER HOUSE OF REST.—Mr. Gawin Kirkham writes: "In a visit recently paid to Cartmel, Lancashire, I inspected a 'House of Rest for Weary Workers,' called Shaftesbury House, opened by the Misses Cowherd. It was formerly a public-house. These ladies have purchased and beautified it. The ball-room has been turned into a preaching house. City Missionaries, Scripture Readers, Evangelists and Bible-women will find this a pleasant holiday retreat in the midst of their busy lives. Application should be made to Miss Cowherd, Stony Dale, Grange-over-Sands, Lancashire.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The new Bishop of Sydney (Dr. Saumarez Smith) sailed from England last Friday for his distant Australian diocese.

Rev. P. S. O'Brien, D.D., vicar of Christ Church, Somers Town, has been appointed to succeed Archdeacon Richardson as vicar of Camden Church, Camberwell.

A missionary garden party was recently held at Rose Castle, Carlisle. Short addresses were delivered by the Bishop of Carlisle, the Bishop of Manchester, Mr. Eugene Stock, Rev. H. H. Clarke (Universities Mission), and Rev. J. C. Hoare, of Ningpo. The Bishop of Manchester described the huge forests in the diocese of Melbourne, with trees 200 ft. high and 6 yds. in diameter, and the dangers to which travellers in those regions were liable, narrating his own experience of forest fires and whirlwinds while Bishop of that diocese. He thought the Church of England should assume the attitude of a father to the colonists engaged in clearing those great forests. Owing to the inability to send clergymen, a dozen laymen had been set to work in nearly a score of wooden churches in the forest, and the results had been most gratifying.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Anna Baker, of Hoshangabad, has now fourteen boys, waifs and strays, who are supported by Friends in England, Ireland, and America.

The subject of Home Mission Work occupied a joint sitting of Lisburn monthly meeting at Brookfield, on Thursday, the 14th inst., and a committee to take the work in hand was agreed to. William Hobson, of Cardiff, gave some account of Friends' home mission work in England. There are not a few indications that Ulster Friends are waking up to a sense of the duty and privilege of their position, and are increasingly feeling their responsibility amid an intelligent and kindly population, well disposed toward spiritual Christianity.

BAPTIST.

Duckpool-road Church, Newport (Mon.), has celebrated the fourteenth anniversary of the settlement of Rev. A. T. Jones. The church has made great progress during the past fourteen years, the membership now being over 350. A house has lately been purchased which will be used for class-rooms and for Sunday evening services.

The Baptist Church at the Poplar and Bromley Tabernacle, under the pastoral care of Rev. W. Knight Chaplin, continues to make steady progress. The Sunday evening congregation numbers upwards of a thousand, and the income during the financial year just closed was nearly £60 more than any previous year. Three hundred members have been added to the church during the three years of the present pastorate.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Dr. Norman L. Walker, of Dysart, editor of The Free Church of Scotland Monthly, is leaving this week for a three months' tour in America.

Rev. John Robertson (late of Stonehaven, and now successor to Rev. John McNeill in the pastorate of M'Crie Roxburgh Free Church, Edinburgh) will occupy the pulpit of Belgrave Presbyterian Church, Halkin-street West, London, on Sundays, August 24 and 31 and September 7 and 14.

The services in the Free Church at Strathpeffer during August are being conducted by Rev. W. S. Peebles, of Annan. At the close of the usual evening service on Sunday week, an open-air meeting was held in the square adjoining the pump-room, which was addressed by Mr. Robert Burn, secretary of the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A., London, Mr. Robertson, of London, and others. It is intended to continue these open-air services every Sunday evening during the remainder of the Strathpeffer season.

METHODIST.

At the intermediate examination in medicine in the University of London, Miss Ann Frances Piercy, a student of the London School of Medicine for Women, has gained triple first-class honours, namely, in anatomy, in materia medica and pharmaceutical chemistry, and in physiology and histology. In anatomy Miss Piercy has the second place with a gold medal, and in materia medica the first place with exhibition and gold medal. Miss Piercy is the daughter of Rev. George Piercy, late of China, and is in training for medical mission work in China, under the Committee of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Wesleyan Foreign Missionary Society.

On Sunday week, Rev. Edward Smith terminated his ministerial connection with the London Wesleyan Mission. Over a thousand people were present at the evening service at St. John's-square Chapel, and about 600 stayed for the prayer-meeting, at the conclusion of which almost the entire congregation remained to bid good-bye and shake hands with the pastor. Strong men and women alike, who had been converted under his ministry, wept like children at bidding farewell to one who has proved himself in every way a pastor and a friend to hundreds in Clerkenwell. Rev. John E. Wakerley, the new pastor for the Central London Mission, intends taking up his work in the first week of September.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. E. Lee, minister of the Congregational Church, Billingshurst, has engaged a tent and an evangelist from the Evangelisation Society, London, and, with the assistance of the members of his church, has been evangelising the villages within a radius of seven miles since May last; the work will be continued until the end of September.

Rev. Joseph Parker, D.D., preaching to a crowded congregation at Wycliffe Congregational Church, Warrington, said that if Congregationalists would not do their duty, let them make room for the Salvation Army. If the respectable, gold-chained people would not go down to the slums, let them stand back, and let somebody else go. Such people should not talk about belonging to the good, old-fashioned sort, because they did not.

SALVATION ARMY.

The Salvationist Mayor of Bournanville, Ontario, Canada, now sells War Crys in the streets.

New barracks have just been opened at Exeter to seat 2000 people, and at Southampton for Corps No. 2 in that town, accommodating 800. A handsome new building has also just been erected at Wood Green, N., and will shortly be opened.

The Salvation Army Building Association, which is under the gratuitous management of Mr. John Cory, J.P., and several other philanthropists, to whose initative it owes its existence since its formation in 1884, has assisted in the acquirement of over 200 barracks, involving loans to the extent of more than £90,000.

The Social Reform Wing of the Salvation Army (writes a correspondent) has declared war against misery, hunger, and distress, and aims at the removal of the causes leading to extreme poverty. Its "Night Shelters" and Rescue Homes receive over 6000 homeless people, and its cheap Food Depôts supply over 36,000 meals to the hungry every week. The Free Labour Bureau and Industrial Workshops are rapidly becoming of increased usefulness to the unemployed.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Dublin Methodists have resolved to employ a suitable man as a colporteur in the city and district.

Rev. John Elliott, Stewartstown, Ireland, hopes to open his new movable mission hall early in September for mission work. The hall will hold 200, and will be comfortable in the winter.

Rev. John McNeill has been staying at Ballymena. He preached in the Presbyterian Church there from 1 Sam. xvi. 6. Notwithstanding a terrible downpour of rain, the church was crammed from floor to ceiling.

A successful series of evangelistic services has been held in Craven-street Hall, Belfast, by Messrs. Knowles, Cowdy, and McClelland. The hall is situated in the midst of a densely populated Protestant district, and the meetings were well attended.

Two special missionary addresses on "Central Africa" were delivered to large audiences in Belfast, last week, by Rev. Dr. Grattan Guinness, who received a very enthusiastic welcome, and who drew a sad picture of the state of matters in the Soudan as the result of the slave trade.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse preached at Bundoran, co. Donegal, on Sunday week, but no church could hold all who flocked to hear him. According to a local paper, he is a follower of Izaak Walton on week days, and preaches on Sunday, though he has come to Ireland for much needed rest.

Rev. J. H. Fitzsimons, who is going out to China as the missionary of the children of the Irish Presbyterian Church, has been employing the interval since his appointment in visiting various Sunday-schools, with the object of interesting the scholars in his work, and has received much encouragement and many promises of help.

The blessing of God seems to be resting in a remarkable degree on the labours of the Belfast Methodist Mission. A day school has been opened in Duncairn Gardens, and a fellowship meeting, two open-air meetings, and four evangelistic services are held each week. At the fellowship meeting held on Tuesday week, a young man stated that he was one of seven young men who used to come to the meetings to mock, but now six of the group are converted.

In the case of the Arklow religious disturbances Lord Carysfort delivered a few days ago, from the magisterial bench in that town, some words of admonition to the people. He pointed out that it was a disgraceful thing that these ministers should not be allowed to read the Scriptures and address their people in the open air, especially when no one was obliged to listen when they didn't wish to. His words, says a correspondent, seem to have had no effect, as the rioting has since been renewed.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. Samuel Stratford Lambrick, vicar of South Muskham, near Newark.—Rev. John Lawson, vicar of Seaton Carew, near West Hartlepool, for fifty-five years.—Rev. T. J. Desprès, Wesleyan minister, Redditch.—Rev. F. King, pastor of the Baptist Church, Carlton, Beds.—Rev. Alfred Rhodes Pearson, ex-president of the Methodist New Connexion Conference.

GAMING IN PARIS.—By order of the Minister of the Interior, the betting agencies which literally swarmed in Paris have all been closed. The Minister has declared that he would not under any circumstances authorise the reopening of these places.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

M. OLTRAMARE, Professor of New Testament Exegesis in the University of Geneva, has been made a Knight of the Legion of Honour, on the proposition of the French Minister of Foreign Affairs. Several other influential Protestants have recently received the same distinction.

THE BIBLE SOCIETY OF FRANCE made special effort last year, in order to meet the opportunities afforded by the Exhibition. Reckoning 8000 Gospels voted to the Paris Evangelisation Committee, the Society saw its distribution rise to the unexpected total of 40,746 publications. All these were put into circulation without expense to the Society.

DUTCHMEN IN PARIS.—A committee has been formed with the view of establishing a Franco-Dutch hospital at Paris. There is a numerous Dutch colony in the city for whom a hospital has become a necessity. Le Christianisme remarks:—"Our churches owe too much to the Protestants of Holland not to embrace with ardour the opportunity now offered them of showing their Christian gratitude."

SPAIN.—The work at Chamberi makes pleasing progress. Mr. Fenn, of Madrid, writes:—"A wide and effectual door is open, as is evidenced by full schools, good meetings, easy access to families, &c., also by the ready ear of the people for the Word of God, year after year, notwithstanding all the power of the enemy. Rome has of late become wonderfully active, but, as it has ever been, her revival means the decline of the nation; the poverty everywhere is terrible."

SIAM, fifty years ago, excluded all foreigners. Now all nationalities have equal rights, and instead of the missionaries being driven out, they are encouraged and invited to remain. The king himself, an educated and progressive sovereign, favours and encourages education, having given from his private funds a handsome sum for the erection of a hospital. The government also gave a large grant of land to the American Presbyterian missionaries on which to erect educational buildings. Siam has 1,500,000 people to each Protestant Christian missionary.

BERLIN.—The Berlin correspondent of Evangelical Christendom writes:—"A most interesting work is done by a Mr. Tinger in Dresden. He circulates sermons, tracts, and religious periodicals, among the railway officials on all the German lines. These men take them gladly, and hand them on to their neighbours. Our consistories are also moving now and trying to stir up the clergy everywhere to greater activity. Our pastors in Berlin are overtaxed by their work, but in the smaller country parishes there are many who do very little, and it is very useful to show them the necessity of more work."

FRENCH COCHIN CHINA.—The need of evangelising this territory has been brought before the Protestants of France in the Journal des Missions Evangéliques. Rev. H. C. Du Bose, an American missionary from China, passing through Paris recently, represented to the Society of Evangelical Missions the pressing requirements of Cochin China. Amongst the French colonists and in the departments of administration and garrison there are many nominal Protestants, but they are as sheep without a shepherd, being utterly uncared for. Political circumstances prevent English and American societies from entering this field.

ROME.—The Prefect of Rome has just published an official report on the "Brotherhood" of Rome, showing that there are 127 of them, having altogether an annual income of £60,000 sterling, and that out of it they give for the relief of the poor only £3,200; all the rest goes for masses and other items enjoyed by the priests. Now our Government wants that money, bequeathed for beneficent purposes, to be used for the relief of the living rather than used falsely for the relief of the souls of the deceased. Are they not right to have it applied to this real world of ours rather than to the fantastic world of purgatory?—Rome Correspondent of "Evangelical Christendom."

EDUCATION AND CRIME IN FRANCE.—Statistics published by M. Ad. Guillot, examining magistrate, demonstrate the fact that secular instruction does not lead to the diminution of crime. During the past ten years every endeavour has been made to promote education, but yet there has been a steady increase in the number of crimes and prisoners, and suicides have been more numerous. Sad to say, crime among children does not show any appreciable decrease, and most of the convicted juveniles are of the educated class. Remarking upon this deplorable state of things, L'Union says:—"The figures need not surprise us. Every effort has been made to exclude from the schools religion, which is the source of all morality. The Gospel, accepted, understood, and lived is the salt which alone is able to preserve the world from corruption."

HOP-PICKING IN HEREFORDSHIRE.—Last season a good work was done in and around Herefordshire, by the members of the Leominster Y.M.C.A., who organised a mission band to work amongst the various hop gardens in the district, during the four or five weeks which the "picking" lasted. Everywhere they were warmly welcomed by the pickers, who listened with the greatest attention to the proclamation of the words of life, while the tracts and books were most eagerly sought after and treasured by all. It is hoped that the Y.M.C.A. may this season be enabled to extend their operations. Tracts and other help may be sent to the hon. secretary, Y.M.C.A., Church-street, Leominster.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 24.—Psalm CVII.

THIS Psalm, according to ver. 32, was composed to be sung at a national religious service, in which joy was the keynote. It was also, according to ver. 22, connected with the offering of sacrifices and thank-offerings. It is thought that it was composed for the first celebration of the feast of tabernacles, after the return from the exile, when the whole of Israel gathered at Jerusalem, and sacrifices were offered (Ezra iii. 1, 2). The special references, however, are not very distinct; and so the Psalm is appropriate to the whole Church, and to each individual, after experiencing some marked Divine interposition or deliverance.

The Psalm begins with an exhortation to praise, on account of God's gracious deeds, and in the following verses we are presented with four tableaux: Of the caravan in the wilderness (4-9); of the prisoner (10-16); of the sick (17-22); of the mariner in the storm (23-32). In each of these paragraphs there is a great similarity of order: first the trouble, then the cry for help, then the gracious deliverance, and, lastly, the exhortation to give thanks. After this there is a glad reference to the restored nation, which, in spite of the hate of its enemies, had been reinstated in its own land, and was already preparing to rebuild the Holy City.

2. It is not enough to think it; say it.

3. Evidently in reference to the return from captivity (Isa. xliii. 5, 6; lvi. 8).

4. We are in this world as in a wilderness, having no continuing city; but we are under the care of One who is leading us through the desert to our home, and He will not suffer us to lack any good thing.

9. Blessed hunger, which meets with such a provision (Matt. v. 6).

10. Words fail to describe the miseries of an Oriental prison; a true type, though, of souls under conviction, or of the pressure of some great heart-sorrow: yet out of these the Lord delivereth (2 Thess. iii. 2).

17. We are foolish to yield to transgression, which so often brings in its train sickness of body. But let us beware of saying that sickness is a sign of special sin (John ix. 2, 3).

20. His name in all ages has been Jehovah-rophi (Exod. xv. 26). And He heals the diseases of souls as well as of bodies. Oh, put yourselves into the hands of the good Physician of souls!

27. We all know what these storms mean: but they are valuable if they bring us to an end of ourselves; for then we are at the beginning of God.

33. Those who trust in earthly comforts, and seem secure, may in a moment be left destitute, whilst those who are in the greatest straits may suddenly become enriched with all manner of good. Do not trust in things, but in God.

43. Let us ask God to give us this true wisdom and spiritual insight, that we may look out for these indications of Divine mercy, and treasure them for our encouragement and comfort, and as sources of praise.

MONDAY, AUGUST 25.—Psalm CVIII.

This is a Davidic Psalm, and a variation of the sixtieth. It consists of three strophes of four verses each. The first (1-4) is borrowed, with alterations, from Ps. lvii. 7-11; the second (5-9) and the third (10-13) from lx. 5-12. This Psalm seems to have been intended to express, on the behalf of the people of God in all ages, their firm confidence that He would deliver them, and ultimately give victory over all their enemies.

1. The fixed heart is the singing heart. Glory here stands for mouth, or soul, whose praise pleases God (Ps. xxx. 1, 2).

2. "I will awake the dawn." There is no time for praise like morning prime. Let us ask God to waken us (Isa. l. 4).

6. We are beloved in the Beloved (Eph. i. 6). Me in the A.V. is changed to us in R.V. The saint never prays alone; the voice of Jesus and of the universal Church blends with his.

7. When God has spoken, promising victory, we may already begin to exult, and divide the spoils of the war.

8. David enumerates the various portions of the land which already owned his sway, and the other portions which he had subjugated. And in Christ the believer learns that all things are his (1 Cor. iii. 21). Even his enemies contribute to his possessions and wealth.

10. Most of us have an Edom before us, in the form of some difficulty or temptation; but if only we are abiding by faith in God, we shall discover the secret of entering as conquerors, even into the city of rock.

12, 13. "Vanity of vanities" is written on all human aid, and on our resolutions and endeavours: but if only we will follow where God leads the way, we shall go from victory to victory. He will fight for us and tread down our foes; as when a strong man tramples down the forest undergrowth, and the little children have but to follow in his steps.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 26.—Psalm CIX.

The internal evidence agrees with the inscription in ascribing this Psalm to David, and like others of the same character it dates probably from the time of the Sauline persecution. It is full of appeals for the Divine vindication of persecuted saints. These old sacred writers had very clear, strong views of the enormity of wrong-doing, and not scruple to invoke the Divine justice against those who perpetrated it (see Psalm xxviii. 4), There are sentences which exhibit a like spirit with the New Testament (Acts xxiii. 3; 1 Tim. i. 20; 2 Tim. iv. 4); but on the whole we are taught by the Gospel to speak more leniently of those who oppress us (Matt. v. 44; Luke xxiii. 34; Acts vii. 60). We cannot forget the quotation made from this Psalm by the Apostle Peter with reference to the betrayer (Acts i. 20); and thus we are led to question whether these strong imprecations may not be a foreshadowing of that awful fate which must overtake such as knowingly and wilfully sin against God's children and cause.

The arrangement of the Psalm is very simple. It consists of three strophes, each of ten verses; and a concluding verse which gives the conclusion and sum of the whole.

4. By omitting the three words in italics, we get a beautiful meaning: But I—prayer; as if the one response made by the Psalmist was PRAYER, and so much so, that his existence for the time was summed up in the word.

6-15. It is held by some that these verses are a quotation of what was desired by his foes; but it is better to consider them not as imprecations but as predictions, the imperative mood being put for the future tense, agreeably to the custom of the Hebrew.

21. What an exquisite prayer! Better let God do for you than do for yourself (Ps. cxix. 124; Jer. xiv. 7). God's mercy is "good" indeed.

26. Another of these sweet minute-guns, or ejaculatory petitions, of which we should each carry a quiverful for daily use.

28. It is well to be persecuted, if with every curse of man we can detect the silver tones of the Divine benediction, saying, "Blessed are ye" (Matt. v. 11).

31. How brave is the accused if he enters court leaning on the arm of the noblest in the land! How futile is it to condemn when the Judge of all stands beside to justify! (Rom. viii. 33).

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 27.—Psalm CX.

Luther calls this Psalm "the true, high, main Psalm of our beloved Lord Jesus Christ." Our Lord Himself says that it was written by David in the Holy Ghost, and there is no portion of the Old Testament more frequently quoted in the New (Matt. xxii. 44; 1 Cor. xv. 25; Heb. i. 3, 13; v. 6, 10; vii. 17, 21).

This Psalm was composed when the seat of government and the ark of the covenant were already on Mount Zion. David had already received the grand promise of 2 Sam. vii., and there rings through the Psalm a grand anticipation of victory over his foes. But do not all these thoughts fade into comparative insignificance as we read into these words conceptions of the glory, perpetuity, and ultimate victory of the kingdom of our Lord?

In the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd verses the Hebrew word JEHOVAH is rendered LORD, where the second mention of the word "Lord," in verse 1, and also in the instance of verse 4, the Hebrew word is ADONAI—Master, Ruler, Lord.

1. This was the welcome of the Ascension Day—the word with which the Father greeted Jesus. And all through the ages He has been engaged in making his foes the footstool of his feet. It is not accomplished yet, but it is sure.

2. It is out of Judaism, the seat of which was Zion, from the narrowest nation under heaven, that the Gospel has gone forth, which has a message to the entire race, and is destined to enclose the whole world in its embrace.

3. An exquisite picture of the soldiers of Christ. Their spirit, as free-will offerings. Their attire, in the beautiful and glistening robes of holiness. Their numbers, youthful warriors, numerous as the dewdrops besprinkling the morning meadows.

4. In Jesus the offices of King and Priest blend (Zech. vi. 12, 13). This combination of priesthood and kingship is also the spiritual prerogative of all Christ's true disciples (1 Peter ii. 9; Rev. i. 6; v. 10; xx. 6). But his priesthood is not after the model of Aaron, but according to that of Melchizedek, a more ancient, universal, and more enduring type, as the Epistle to the Hebrews amply shows.

5. The triumph of our Lord is guaranteed by the whole omnipotence of God. But, alas for that dies iræ, that day of wrath! Nevertheless, He must bruise the serpent's head (Gen. iii. 15).

6. The Gospel of Jesus must be for our blessing or bane, for salvation or destruction.

7. As Jonathan in the wood (1 Sam. xiv. 27) took of the honey and was refreshed, so does our Lord drink of the love and devotion of his people, and goes forward without discouragement to the victory which awaits Him. Have you been as a brook from which He has drunk? Is Jesus refreshed by you?

THURSDAY, AUGUST 28.—Psalm CXI.

This Psalm was probably written after the return from the Captivity. The circumstances of the new colony were poor and depressing. And the aim of the religious leaders of the people was to get them to look up to God, and expect from Him a gracious repetition of the marvellous works of the past. That word, works, is the keynote of the Psalm, occurring constantly (vv. 2, 3, 4, 6, 7); also the word ever (vv. 3, 5, 8, 9, 10). When tempted to lose heart, because of present difficulty, let us go back on the former deeds of the right hand of the Lord.

1. It is not enough to call on others to praise, each of us must do so, as a matter of personal duty.

2. Let us search them out the works of the Lord in nature, with telescope or microscope, on Alpine solitude, and by mountain stream, or in the great world of human life. We must seek, if we would find. For it is God's pleasure to hide things.

3. Notice the singular. All the works are the work, emanating from one source, tending to one result. "One law, one plan, one far-off Divine event."

5. Judge not God by his delays, but by his promises.

6. What a heritage is ours in Christ! (Rom. viii. 17).

7. Yea and amen in Christ (2 Cor. i. 20).

9. Type of the redemption of Christ (Rev. v. 9).

10. The fear of God here mentioned is childlike fear, which dreads to offend, and is compatible with perfect love. To have this is to have a wisdom which enters into God's secrets, and reads his meaning, and understands Himself. If you want to have a good understanding of things, and men, and God, you will get it best by being right with God. The standpoint from which we view things is of the utmost importance to our right understanding of them. The margin gives another reading, a good success. But note that all depends on obedience. Those that do, know. Act up to all you know, and you will know more (John vii. 17). Do God's will, and He will prosper you.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 29.—Psalm CXII.

The Hallelujah at the beginning of this Psalm closely relates it to the preceding and following ones. Evidently they were composed about the same time, perhaps by the same author, and belong manifestly to the era of return from the Captivity.

1. The only way of delighting in God's commandments is to do them.

2. We have ample warrant for believing that though godliness is not hereditary, yet the religion of a godly parent has the strongest possible influence on children, and a blessing is passed on to after-generations (Psa. ciii. 17; Isa. lix. 21).

3. Godliness is profitable for this life as well as for the next.

4. We may not always see the light, but it is behind the cloud, waiting God's signal (Ps. xcvii. 11; Isa. l. 10).

5. There is a premonition here of our Lord's words (Matt. v. 42). A missionary has lately told us the marvellous effect of literal obedience to these suggestions. See THE CHRISTIAN, July 11, 1890, page 23.

7. The heart which is trustfully fixed on God is not afraid; because no tidings can reach it save through the Father's care, and all tidings must be of the Father's appointment. If you are dreading evil tidings, do not look along the road by which the postman comes, but upward and Godward. Trust is expulsive of fear.

9. There is no great difficulty in giving to the poor, when once we have learnt our unsearchable riches in Christ. Oh, to be purveyors of these to others! (Eph. iii. 2-10).

10. The wicked are vexed, partly because they are aware that the righteous have possessions of which they are destitute; and partly because their own schemes melt away before their eyes, as wreaths of smoke.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 30.—Psalm CXIII.

This and the five following Psalms constitute the great Hallel, or song of praise, sung at the Jewish festivals, particularly at the Passover and feast of Tabernacles. It is thought to have been the hymn or psalm sung by our Lord and his disciples after the celebration of the Lord's Supper (Matt. xxvi. 30). This Psalm is ruled by the number three; three strophes of three verses each; three times in verse 1 we are exhorted to praise.

1. God's "name" is his character.

2. This verse proceeds on the supposition that our God will for ever continue to develop and unfold his glorious nature, so that there will be always some new occasion to adore Him.

3. This prediction is yet to be realised (Ps. lxxii. 11; Mal. i. 11; Rev. xv. 3, 4). Then the sun's course as it awakens the successive populations of the globe shall be tracked by songs.

5, 6. How humble should we be! Whilst we familiarly speak to God as our Father, we should never forget the immense distance between Him and us. And yet our Lord stooped through this immense distance to become man! (Phil. ii. 6-8).

7, 8. These are almost word for word from the prayer of Hannah (1 Sam. ii. 8). A woman may lead the songs of the Church.

9. The barren woman here may perhaps typify the Church in her low estate, or even the Gentile Church (Isa. liv. 1-3); but when God wills, and in answer to prayer, her children are multiplied.

FAMINE AT SUAKIM.

Sir,—May I again call attention to the needs of the starving thousands who have collected around Suakim from the Eastern Soudan? Since my last letter to you on the subject, some hundreds of pounds have been received by the Relief Committee in London, but more is needed.

Dr. Harpur, of the Church Missionary Society, who is engaged at Suakim in distributing relief and ministering to the sick, estimates his requirements for the provision of food at £5 per day, and the balance, in the hands of the Relief Committee, will only suffice to provide this amount up to the middle of next month, whereas there is no doubt that the scarcity and distress will last a couple of months longer. Will the readers of The Christian, therefore, kindly bear in mind that help is still needed, and that lives may be saved by a timely remittance? Dr. Harpur's last telegram said that many deaths were still occurring. Food can be poured into the town to any extent, if only there is money to purchase it.

Contributions may be sent to Messrs. Dimsdale, Fowler & Co., 50, Cornhill, E.C., for the accounts of the Relief Committee, or to the hon. secretary, Mr. H. R. Fox-Bourne, Aborigines Protection Society, Broadway-chambers, Westminster.—Yours faithfully, F. T. Haig, Major-General.

Redhill.

REV. DR. ARTHUR T. PIERSON, of Philadelphia, is to make a tour of the American churches on behalf of the work of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions. He will enter upon this work in the early autumn.

THE CLIFTON CONFERENCE is to be held this year on October 7, 8, and 9. This will be its twenty-eighth time of meeting, the Conference having first been convened by the late Rev. S. A. Walker in 1862. The subject set down for study is: "The Way of God with his People, exhibited in their being (1) Brought out of Egypt—Divine Redemption typified; (2) Brought through the Wilderness—Divine Providence illustrated; (3) Brought into Canaan—Divine Faithfulness prefigured." Further particulars may be obtained from the convener, Rev. James Ormiston (Rector of St. Mary-le-Port, Bristol), 2, Kensington-place, Clifton.

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, August 31.

Entering the Kingdom.—Luke xviii. 15-30.

Golden Text: Verse 17.

"Luke's narrative here rejoins Matthew's (xix. 13) and Mark's (x. 13), after having diverged from them at ix. 51. Jesus is in Perea."—Godet.

Both these incidents instruct us as to entering the Kingdom (17-24). The aim of the Gospel is not merely to secure the pardon of our sins, but to bring us into the Kingdom—i.e. under the rule of God. We cannot be in his Kingdom unless we are born again—(John iii. 3-5). We must obey the King, not as one outside of us, who will punish us if we disobey, but as dwelling within us—(xvii. 21). Every child has some King who rules within him. Who is your King? Is it self, or is it Jesus? Do you wish to enter his Kingdom? Learn the way from this lesson.

Jesus and the Children—(15-17). Some graphic details are added in Mark x. 13-16, and Matt. xix. 13, explains a further reason why the children were brought to Jesus. The incident is a testimony to the popularity of Jesus, even though hostility against Him was increasing.

Who can imitate these women of Perea? Mothers with their own children—teachers with their scholars. By prayer for them, by instruction, and especially by godly example, we can still bring the young to Jesus. Even "infants" (15) can be presented to Him. "Disciples rebuked them" (15).—To them it appears waste of the time of Jesus to turn aside from his public teaching for the sake of children. There are many hinderers still—those who do not believe in the necessity of child-conversion, or in its possibility; those who look for a man's experience in a child; and especially those whose Christian life exhibits none of the simplicity, and affection, and unselfishness which made Jesus attractive to the children. "Suffer little children," &c. (16). Some need compelling, children are more ready to come. Jesus says: "Don't hinder them;" remove the difficulties out of their way; and, above all, do not put stumbling blocks before them" (Mark ix. 42). "For of such" (16).—So contrary to the judgment of the Apostles. They thought—Jesus wants men, not children; Jesus said—I want children first, and men only as they become childlike (17). The words do not mean that children need no conversion. Do not make too much of their so-called innocence; even they need to "come." And men must become like them in humility, in helplessness, in docility, in trustfulness. Apply the following lessons:—

(1) Jesus is the children's friend.—There is no one they need to dread less. Let them never avoid Him—even when they have done wrong, and they get blame from their own conscience and others, He can pardon and cleanse. Fear those who would keep you from Him.

(2) Children may come to Jesus.—To bid them wait until they become older is contrary to the mind of Christ. The consciousness of sin begins very early; why should they not early know the joy of pardon? There would be more conversions among children if we had faith to expect them. Men must wait till they become childlike; children need not wait to become men.

(3) Childhood is the best time for coming to Jesus.—There is a greater readiness to go to Him, and it is easier then to trust. A mother said to her child—"If we had lived when Jesus was on the earth, I would have pushed you through the throng to get you to Him." The child replied—"I would not have needed pushing, mother; for I would have run to Him myself." The mind of the child is free from other things, and more capable of hearing and obeying his word. A boy who had just been saved came home and confessed himself a disciple of Christ. His father replied: "You should have waited until you became a man and had got settled in life before paying attention to such things." "Nay," said the boy, "Jesus gives me just the opposite advice. He says 'Seek ye first the Kingdom of God.'" The most consistent and useful church members we have were converted young. Expect some of the children to respond to the call of Jesus.

Jesus and the Rich Young Man (18-30).—This incident enforces the lessons of that which precedes it. There is a young man (Matt. xix. 20), who has become so entangled with the riches of this world that it seems impossible for him to be saved. Luke calls him a "ruler" (18), probably the president of a synagogue. Again note the graphic details added by Mark (x. 17-22).

(1) The earnest appeal (18). How hopeful his case appeared! See first how eagerly he came, and how humble he was (Mark). For a ruler thus publicly to appeal to Jesus required more courage than Nicodemus had manifested (John iii. 2.) How momentous his inquiry! Neither his position, nor his wealth, nor his youth, nor all combined, satisfied him. Up to this point he is worthy of being imitated by others.

(2) The Saviour's reply. His answers always indicated a most perfect knowledge of men's condition. Verse 19 does not cast doubt upon the innocence of Christ, but rather asserts his Divinity; while it also showed the young man his mistake. His appeal suggested that he could by some "good thing" (Matt.) secure eternal life. The answer of Jesus turns him at once to God as the only source of goodness. Even the goodness of Jesus is the goodness of God manifesting itself through Him. Not to accept Him as Divine is practically to deny his goodness. "The commandments" (20) all relate to man's duty to men. Jesus deals with the man according to his own question, and seeks to lead him so far in the direction of doing as to cause him to despair. It is thus "through the law that we die to the law." But this fails (21), for to him the letter is everything, the spirit is nothing. His reply betrays his utter want of self-knowledge. The further demand of Jesus (22) is in order to correct his mistake. It only asked a real obedience in contrast with that merely external obedience which he professed. Or this may be regarded as a Gospel call to the young man. "Follow me" is the all-important thing; but, in his case, his wealth rendered following impossible—his heart was set upon it, he must needs forsake it to follow Jesus. The "treasure in heaven" is explained xvi. 9. There is something to be forsaken in every case. Anything that keeps a young man from Christ is an incalculable loss to him.

(3) The young man's departure (23).—Note that his riches were the cause of his being very sorrowful. Did he ever repent his choice? The history does not tell us. Certainly his riches would never be a source of pleasure to him again. There are many to-day equally amiable in outward character, equally earnest and sincere, yet lacking the one thing needful. Love of the world, of gain, of pleasure, of companions, is too strong. For the sake of these they suffer the greatest possible loss.

(4) Our Lord's instruction (24-30).—Riches do not prevent a man being saved (27), but they constitute a formidable hindrance. To those who possess them there is danger of trusting in them (Mark x. 24). "The Shemites denote the impossibility of a thing by the image of a heavily-laden camel arriving at a city gate which is low and narrow, and through which it cannot pass."—Godet. Yet see the result of leaving all for Christ (29, 30). Were the Apostles losers? The word of Jesus assures us of present and future reward. Who will follow Him?

SILVERHILL, ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA.—This place has been visited by Messrs. Pope and Thorpe, students from the East London Training Institute. The services were held in a spacious tent, and attracted large numbers. Many souls have been saved and believers built up. Besides the Gospel services the missioners conducted children's services and Bible-readings, which were much appreciated. As an outcome of the mission a permanent unsectarian Gospel mission work has been started in the neighbourhood.

Y.M.C. ASSOCIATIONS AND FELLOWSHIP UNIONS OF SCOTLAND.—The twentieth annual conference will be held at Aberdeen, on Tuesday and two following days, September 9-11. On the preceding Sabbath, Rev. Dr. Marshall Lang will preach a special sermon on the historical basis of the Evangelical faith. On the first day of the conference, in the evening, there will be a public meeting in the music hall, when Rev. John Smith, of Edinburgh, will speak on "The Evangelical Faith: Misconceptions and Difficulties of Men of Culture"; and Rev. John McNeill, of London, on "The Evangelical Faith: its Need and Worth in the Life of To-day." The fixtures for the Wednesday are numerous, the subjects at the conference sessions being:—Morning, "The Moral and Social Dangers of the Present Day in Relation to Young Men," introduced by Mr. Chas. J. Guthrie, Advocate, of Edinburgh; and evening, "Missions: Their Scope and their Claims upon Young Men," introduced by Mr. John Anderson, of Androssan. At this meeting Dr. Kerr-Cross, of Livingstonia, is expected to speak. The conference meetings will be held in the Y.M.C.A. Buildings, 198, Union-street, Aberdeen.

FRESH AIR FOR VERY POOR LONDON CHILDREN.—For each 10s. subscribed, a pale-faced child can be boarded out for 14 days. Any surplus will be dedicated to the temporal and spiritual necessities of these 9,000 inhabitants.—L. & County, Islington. — A. Styleman Herring, Vicar St. Paul's, Clerkenwell, 45, Colebrooke Row, N.

"They were EXACTLY what suited us. I think them far superior to almost any I have seen; short, interesting, and to the point. Some have been circulated in Boulogne; some by our clergyman's lady, who sees so many English here; and others by our friends who meet on Tuesdays to pray for Tract-work in all its branches. Some have also been put into French, and published in various periodicals as articles. Brittany has had several in its Protestant paper, and Dr. Monod's 'Archives' have inserted one or two, abridged."—Extract from a Letter from France.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

(THIRTY-FOURTH SERIES.)

CASE of CHEST DISEASE at BRECHIN, N.B.

The patient is a young woman named ANNE THORN, and her case was brought under my notice in June, last year, by Mrs. JOHN FRASER, of West Free Manse, Brechin, who knew of a lady in Edinburgh cured by my treatment.

There had been chest disease on the father's side; and a sister had died of Consumption. Illness had commenced three months before writing me; with cough, night perspirations, and general debility. Pains in the chest were now felt, and the breathing had become affected. Palpitation had become frequent. There was loss of flesh all over the body, and of the limbs. With the consent of the patient's own doctor, application was made to me.

ANNE THORN commenced my treatment under my advice. In July she was reported much better. She continued until November. Her doctor had examined her in September, and found her free from any active disease, and recommended her to continue longer, which she wisely did, and passed through the winter well.

In the spring of this year she was "going out in all weathers," and was well enough to take a situation with the lady who recommended her to me.

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR

Is a Household Requisite of Constant Utility.

That BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR possesses very valuable qualities as a food for all classes, at all periods of life except earliest infancy, has been attested by eminent dietetic authorities, as well as by universal public experience during over thirty years.

Interested attempts to set aside these facts in favour of other foods can only appeal to ignorance and prejudice, and it remains true that no other kind of food can serve the special purposes of Corn Flour.

BIRDS OF THE BIBLE. Chats with the Children about Bible Birds. By JAMES BOWKER, F.R.G.S.I. Handsomely printed on Fine Paper, with Carmine Borders. With Beautiful Coloured Frontispiece, and numerous other Engravings. Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s.

"Mr. BOWKER knows much about the birds; and he makes his feathered favourites teach many a sweet lesson. By all means let the children have this prettily-written and prettily-illustrated book."

British Messenger.

PERCIVAL'S PICTURE GALLERY. By A. L. O. E. With attractive Frontispiece in Colour. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s.

"Percival is a bright, gifted, true-hearted young artist. His 'PICTURE GALLERY' consists of representations of Scripture incidents from the Old and New Testaments, which are here delightfully narrated, and no less clearly expounded. For the young the volume will prove deeply interesting and instructive."

The Baptist Messenger.

PEARLS OF WISDOM from THE PARABLES. By A. L. O. E. Illustrated with twenty-four full-page Original Drawings. Cloth boards, 3s. 6d.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 4s.

"This unique volume is sure to be popular. What the 'Schönberg Cotta Family' is to the Reformation; what the 'Prince of the House of David' is to the days of Christ; and what the 'Pillar of Fire' is to the Israelites in the Wilderness—this book is in a certain sense to Christ's Parables."—The Christian Commonwealth.

PEARLS OF WISDOM from THE PARABLES OF CHRIST. By A. L. O. E. These "Pearls of Wisdom" may also be had in a Series of Eight-page Illustrated Booklets, suitable for enclosing in letters, or for General Distribution. Well adapted also for Sunday-school rewards. Price 6d. per Packet of 24 Tracts.

DOROTHEA TRÜDEL: or, The Prayer of Faith. With Engraved Portrait. Cloth boards, gilt edges, 2s. 6d. Cheap Edition: Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; Tinted covers, 1s.

"DOROTHEA TRUDEL appears to have been a simple-minded woman, of remarkable devotedness and faith. She became deeply penetrated with the striking passage in the Epistle of James, 'The prayer of faith shall save the sick.' Led by circumstances to minister to the afflicted, she carried into practical action the settled conviction of her heart; and in hundreds of cases soul and body were alike healed without other visible means."—Record.

"This most interesting volume contains a number of remarkable cases where sick persons were healed in answer to special prayer."—British Messenger.

"A touching narrative of the simple faith and devoted piety of one who effected in Switzerland hundreds of most extraordinary and well authenticated cures of mental and bodily diseases."—Christian World.

PASTOR BLUMHARDT and HIS WORK. By Rev. W. GUEST. A descriptive account of the remarkable work of FAITH HEALING carried on first at Möttlingen, and subsequently at Bad Boll. With Introduction by Rev. C. H. BLUMHARDT. With Portrait. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth boards, 2s.

"This book contains some most remarkable things.... It will be read with considerable interest; and the Christian reader will be compelled to exclaim, 'What hath God wrought!'"—Baptist Messenger.

Cheap Edition: With Portrait. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.

"This Autobiography should be read and re-read. It is the record of a life as strange and eventful as it is impressive and instructive. . . . The book, apart from its value as a beacon to warn and a light to guide, is studded with passages of beauty—word-pictures which are not easily forgotten."—Temperance Record.

THE GOSPEL IN LEVITICUS. Types and Foreshadowings of the Great Redemption. By Rev. JAMES FLEMING, D.D. With Frontispiece Illustration of the Tabernacle, according to the Projection of Mr. Fergusson. Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

Cheap Edition: Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.

"There is no book of Scripture in which there are more of the very words of God than in Leviticus. He is everywhere the Speaker in it. There are accordingly no fewer than twenty, of the twenty-seven chapters of which it consists, that begin with the words, "And the Lord spake."—Preface.

7th Thousand.

BRINGING IN SHEAVES: A Record of Evangelistic Labours. By Rev. A. B. EARLE. With Biographical Sketch of the Author. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"There is much in this volume that could not fail to stimulate and encourage. It is prefaced by a singularly interesting sketch of the author, who appears to be a man of remarkable devotedness, combined with great earnestness."—Preacher's Lantern.

10th Thousand.

ADDRESSES TO YOUNG MEN. By Rev. DANIEL BAKER. With Preface by D. L. MOODY. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"Young men ought to devour this work. It costs but eighteenpence, and yet it is worth its weight in gold. To heed its counsel would be to be saved from many a folly, expense, shame, and to have the character steadied, strengthened, beautified."—Oldham Chronicle.

CHRIST LIFTED UP. By Rev. R. GILCHRIST. Superior Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

Cheap Edition: Tinted covers, 1s. 6d.

"Its spiritual qualities are of high order. Its theology is of the good old evangelical school, and its fervid piety will not fail to commend it."—Liverpool Daily Chronicle.

"It abounds with powerful representations of vital truth, and interesting narrations of personal experience and providential dealing. Much profit may be gained from its perusal."—Methodist New Connexion Magazine.
